It just puts salt in the wound really. The water all smells and tastes like chlorine. He thinks back on the hot summer days of his youth, spending days at a time at the pool and coming home with eyes red enough to make even the most trusting parent wonder. He was much too young then, of course, to really understand the questioning looks. The chlorinated water just reminded him of summer, making him realize only too well that he was still stuck in the dreariness of February. And the beginning of February at that.

It's Winter term for John Q. A time for snowballs and cabin fever. A time to say once again, with his head hung low, "No, I don't ski."

Fred M. Possible, John Q.'s roommate, comes back to the table and asks the inevitable question, "What's going on tonight?" Everyone kind of mumbles and shrugs their shoulders. Another Saturday night.

Meanwhile, across campus: Tom N. Volved scurries across the empty dance floor carrying plastic bags full of styrofoam cups to be used at the party later on that night.

Tom N. expects a good turn-out tonight. He reasons, "It's the only thing going on on campus. It's gotta' be good."

John Q. and Fred M. and the rest of their floor decide to provide their own entertainment for the night. After all there's nothing going on anywhere else.

As they walk out of Baker, they search the wall of Ellis in one last effort to find a party, but to no avail. Together they can scrounge up the necessary $15-$20 for their own party. The investment is, indeed, necessary. John Q. wonders when he'll get another check from Mom.

Later on, that same Saturday night (actually it's already Sunday morning), Tom N. finishes counting the money from the party. The X club is once again a coupla' bucks in the hole. Tom N. can't understand it. It was the only thing going on. Why wasn't there anybody there?

On John Q.'s floor, people are beginning to pass out. It was a pretty good night considering there was nothing going on.

Tom N. goes back to his room. He thinks about what he has to do tomorrow. Sunday is always "Catch-up" day. He will spend his whole day reading his Marketing chapters. Maybe he'll read the one on advertising and promotion.

Students Speak

by Maureen Morrissey

Question: Two songs in German have become very popular in the United States. How do you feel about it?

Carol Stubbs, Junior: "I don't have anything against it. I know a lot of people feel we're being invaded. But, if foreigners have good music, we should enjoy it. After all, they enjoy ours."

Ian Malee, Freshman: "I have no opinion either way. I'm not into new music, I'm a classic Rock and Roller."

Jeff Booher, Senior: "It really doesn't matter. I have nothing against the beat, but I do wish I could understand what they're trying to say."

Ludwig Schwegmann, W. German Exchange Student: "I'm surprised that it took such a long time for German songs to be accepted by the United States after we have had only English songs in West Germany."

The latest from Judas Priest, Defenders of the Faith, is destined to become one of their best albums and only reinforces the fact that Judas Priest and heavy metal are synonymous. Similar in many ways to their older albums and their last album Screaming for Vengeance, Defenders of the Faith will satisfy the true headbanger's diet as the hardest and fastest heavy metal currently being produced.

Judas Priest, formed in the early 70's in Britain, delivers its tenth album to the market following a year at home resting from their 'earth shaking' Screaming for Vengeance tour in 1982. Off that album it was "You Got Another Thing Comin' " that received radio play time in America.

Original group members Rob Halford (vocals), Glenn Tipton (lead guitars), K.K. Downing (lead guitars), and Ian Hill (bass), along with 4-year member Dave Holland (drums) combine to produce this 'master' of metal.

The first three mentioned above wrote all but one of the songs on Defenders of the Faith, and the album format follows that of Screaming for Vengeance with all songs containing powerful vocals, outstanding guitar work, and a strong drum beat typical of hard heavy metal. The album design shows a creature, the Metallian, which represents the master of metal that drives earthdogs into a feeding frenzy, and is a good representation of the contents of the disc: hard, heavy, and metal.

Judas Priest stands alone from other metal groups in that they create some of the hardest rock in the business, but retain complete composure and skill in their methods.

The vocals of Rob Halford, who started his singing career in a church choir, accentuate the power hungry lyrics through the use of his ability to control his voice from a low roar to a high pitched screech. The fast moving, prevalent guitar work of K. K. Downing and Glenn Tipton dominate each song, followed closely by Ian Hill and his supplementary bass guitar. Several cuts include dual leads by the two guitarists which emphasize the predominance of guitars in heavy metal. Drumming is fast on Defenders of the Faith but Dave Holland makes it seem effortless yet still powerful.

Probably the best cuts on the album are: "Jawbreaker", "Rock Hard Ride Free", "Freewheel Burning", and "Eat Me Alive." These represent Judas Priest on an old, as well as, new scale. "The Sentinel" is a revitalization of older Judas Priest style, fixing a vivid scene in the listener's mind. In that respect it resembles

by Joy Hadley

An update on the Satellite project and the latest academic proposals from the Faculty Curriculum Committee highlighted the Jan. 24 Student Government meeting.

Ken Opipery, Resident Assistant on First South, informed the Senate about a proposal that Juniata have its own satellite. For T.V. services, at the present time, the college generates between $30,000-40,000 in revenue and pays as much in installation costs as a regular homeowner. Nevertheless, Juniata does not receive any of the special services (i.e., HBO, Cinemax, etc.) which are given to homeowners.

Also, a proposal was made at the last Faculty Curriculum meeting which would 1) require that students submit a paper, much like a graduate thesis, in order to graduate, 2) force students to take at least four (4) courses during the four (4) academic years for which at least 50% of the grade is based on writing, 3) establish a writing laboratory for students who have trouble writing. The committee did not vote on this proposal yet.

Motions were also made to 1) raise the GE requirement (i.e., Greek Mind, From Decadence to Disaster, Medieval Mind) from one course to two courses and 2) allow Freshmen to take the GE in their freshman year. Neither of the motions passed.

In other news, Freshman Composition is under close scrutiny; Spirit Week will be held from Feb. 9-12; Student Concerns Committee reports that offering an alternative meal plan only increase costs, since Food Service anticipates that students will miss 1/3 of their meals each week.

Students Visit Capital

by Carl-Georg Boge

Members of the Foreign Policy Analysis class and the International Club last week took a field trip to get a glance at policy making in Washington, D.C.

It was a good chance to "see what the community is like down there," one student said. The students attended a variety of briefings for Congressional staff members on "US Economy and the International Market Place," organized by CONWEST, the Citizens for a Convention of Western Democracies. Various panels provided new and interesting information on global interdependencies.

The first one on "US Agriculture in the International Market" presented different viewpoints on the issue of protectionism in agriculture. Here and in the second round, "US Manufacturing: The Quest for Competitiveness," the panelists differed only in how far they wanted protectionism to be eliminated.

Throughout all the sessions, the panelists agreed that competition according to essentially free-market rules is preferable to anything else. This, according to Thursday afternoon's panelists, holds true also for trade policy in "High Technology and Service Industries," however with qualifications concerning protection of "Intellectual property" and the security of private data.

The excessive and uncontrolled "Public and Private Lending: Financing the World Markets" of the past years was the topic of the fourth panel. It found the participants in agreement that loans to Third World countries will have to be continued in longer terms to prevent those countries as well as ours from economic collapse.

The luncheon speech by Senator Charles McMatthias entitled "The US Economy and World Economic Recovery: Engine or Caboose?" was the highlight of the first day. During this speech the "Decadence to Disaster" students attended a guided tour through the impressionist wing of the National Arts Gallery.

After a "modest exploration" of the environment of the Harrington Hotel, almost an institution on J.C. field trips to D.C., everybody was ready for what was called by many the best lecture: An American consultant to the Japanese embassy gave sociopolitical reasons why pressure to open Japanese markets has to be applied but also why there are certain (agricultural) limits. He argued that Japan's recent defense budget increases were the ultimate "you could expect them to do."

A State Department official concluded the morning by pointing out the difficulties of shaping policy through or in a bureaucracy. The State Department competes on the trade issue with the Commerce, Agriculture and Labor Depart-

Guest Column

In the last article we touched on the incidence of suicide on college campuses and mentioned some possible contributing factors. Let's now turn our attention to a discussion of certain clues or signals that can serve as a forewarning to suicide.

The American Association of Suicidology suggests five key suicidal signs. They include threats of suicide (70% of suicides are preceded by some type of warning statement), previous attempts may indicate that an individual is a risk to try again, intense depression manifested perhaps by lack of interest or apathy, extreme behavioral changes such as loss of appetite or sexual interests, and finally, what might be interpreted as making "final" preparations or arrangements.

Being aware of and understanding these warning signals can certainly go a long way in the prevention of suicide. Any one of us could very easily find ourselves in a position to come to the aid of someone who is thinking about taking his/her life. Most people who attempt suicide do not really want to be successful. In most cases, they are asking for someone to help them deal with a situation that seems overwhelming or hopeless.

We all do not have to be trained professional counselors to make a difference. It has been said by many that at Juniata College everybody seems to know everybody's business. Well, maybe in this case it is not such a bad idea. Tuning in to those around us can pay positive dividends. Listening to and caring for someone when he/she is emotionally upset, observing when someone you know is acting or behaving in a totally different manner, and then encouraging that person to seek help are but a few ways to make a difference to a person who might be thinking of suicide.

These two articles have attempted to increase your understanding of the topic of suicide and have obviously only scratched the surface. You are cordially invited to attend a discussion of suicide to be held in the Sherwood carpeted lounge on February 7th beginning at 7:00 P.M. Dr. Robert Fierstein will be sharing some of his thoughts at that time. In addition to Dr. Fierstein's talk, the residence hall staff at Sherwood is conducting a suicide awareness and prevention campaign. Take advantage of both opportunities to learn more about how you can make a difference to someone who may be thinking about suicide.

Program Revised

Juniata's Legal Studies Advisory Committee, headed by Dr. Thomas Baldino, has been revamped this year to give pre-law students a better chance for acceptance into law school.

Although this committee has been in existence for years, this is the first year it has employed a standard procedure and attempted to actively assist law school applicants in the application process.

First, the committee asks that any student who is interested in applying to law school fill out an information form to be sent to the law school of the applicant's choice. On this form is included any information felt to be pertinent for evaluation by the law school.

Applicants are then asked to submit letters of recommendation to the LSAC for evaluation. Of course, the applicants are also judged very heavily by their overall performance at Juniata. They are evaluated as fairly as possible by the committee on the basis of GPA, class rank and activities.

Also taken into consideration are the previous performances of Juniata alumni at the law schools that are being considered by the applicants. A collective letter is then formed by the LSAC based upon the information gathered, and each applicant is given one of four ratings. The student is rated as either: 1. Highly recommended, 2. Recommended, 3. Recommended with reservations, or 4. Not recommended for his acceptance into law school.

"We try to tailor recommendations to particular schools to which the students are applying," says Dr. Baldino. For example, an average pre-law student would receive a higher recommendation in applying to an average caliber law school than he would if he applied to Harvard.

In future years, Dr. Baldino wishes to begin the process in the spring term of the pre-law students' junior years, so that it may

by Ginny Krall

Last Tuesday, Ray Owen once again treated the Juniata coffeehouse crowd with his versatile musical talents.

This solo artist entertained a small audience with many forms and styles of music. His large repertoire ranged from ragtime-blues to progressive country rock to side-splitting looney tunes.

Owen also displayed to the crowd his expertise with instruments by performing on the guitar, harmonica, and banjo. Topping off the music was Owen's deep well of stories and jokes that branded his offbeat sense of humor.

Although only a handful of students saw this one man band play, it was obviously an enjoyable experience for everyone.

Owen, who plays at various colleges, clubs and concerts in the United States and abroad, is sure to grace this campus again soon. His act is one that should not be missed the next time around.

A Week for Health

by Linda Ramsay

Mental and physical health was the focus last week as Student Services sponsored Health Awareness Week.

The special week of programs dealing with both physical and mental well-being began last Monday with the Health Center's Open House which offered information on the services and facilities available. Throughout the week, various residence halls held programs planned and coordinated by Student Services to assist the campus with keeping healthy. Each dorm received points toward the Hall of the Year competition for offering the sessions.

Programs centering on the theme of the week included blood pressure screening and tuberculosis tine testing, nutrition of the college student, presented by Dr. Brad Small, Juniata's assistant football coach, and a first aid program presented by Jane Brown, Juniata's head nurse, providing relevant first aid information.

The made-for-TV movie "License to Kill" was presented in Cloister's Ranch Monday. A discussion which followed the movie was led by Terri Squires, chairperson of the Committee on Alcohol Study and Education (CASE).

Brenda Potts of Women's Health Services, Inc. addressed the causes, symptoms and cures of sexually transmitted diseases on Tuesday in Sherwood's lounge. The next night, she explained the services and facilities available at the Women's Health Services in the lounge at East.

Thursday night wrapped up the week's health programs with a film entitled "The Art of Being Fully Human." Dr. Leo Buscaglia, a popular speaker on college campuses, starred in the film, which was shown in South's Rebel Den and East's Flory/Kline Lounge.

According to Julie Keehner, head of Student Services, the Theme Programming Committee, with membership from among the RA's, decided on the health theme. This was chosen in consideration of the winter months, when most of us begin to get a little lazy with our bodies and our health.

Turnout for the various programs was less than expected, but Keehner noted the weather, especially at the beginning of the week when we had ice and extreme cold, as a factor for low participation. However, Keehner said, "those that did go really seemed to enjoy themselves."

Student Services is in the midst of planning a Current Events Week to coincide with the national primaries. Keehner emphasized the importance of these programs not only as a learning experience, but as a provision toward creating a sense of unity among the college community.

ments and since the State Department lacks a domestic constituency, it is often viewed as representing foreign interests.

The academic part of the trip was finished with a briefing in the West German embassy. A representative pointed out the importance of NATO but defended the European "right to retain to a limited extent a protected market for agricultural goods."

These academic and professional insights created an increased understanding of global economic problems. A crucial one constantly being pointed out was the US budget deficit and the consequently high interest rates. Also, the opportunity to get a sense of the professional atmosphere which surrounds these kinds of staff briefings, and to see and hear several Congressmen live was a useful example of political life in D.C.

Students also had some time to "take it easy." Friday evening found most people eating Ethiopian food and spreading out into several nice little pubs in Georgetown.

After a free Saturday afternoon, filled with visits and sightseeing, the crowd made it home to J.C. late Saturday night.

Campus Displays Talent

by Kathy Hoffman

A harmonica-playing security guard?

Yes, that's right! You, too, can see Robert Klippert, campus security guard, give his rendition of the "Best Music This Side of Muddy Run" at the Campus Talent Show tonight.

The Talent Show is being held in Oller Hall tonight at 7:15. Admission is only a dollar and it's open to the public.

Lesher RHA is sponsoring the show and prizes will be given. There will be a $25 first prize, $15 second prize and a $10 third prize.

Of course, there are plenty of other talented people on stage tonight. Some are even J.C. students (bet you're surprised). So come on out tonight, spend that extra buck and let the bands, comedians, singers and dancers entertain you for a while.

Almost A Fad

Many of the computer programs used in the nation's schools amount to nothing more than expensive, "electronic page-turning" devices, according to U.S. Education Department Secretary Terrel Bell.

In an informal office meeting with wire service reporters, Bell also revealed plans to finance research to find more constructive ways of using computers to help students learn math and writing skills.

The current use of computers in schools and colleges is "almost a fad," Bell says, and the available education programs "leave a great deal to be desired" in terms of "interacting with the mind of the student."

The Education Dept. plans to target research funding to develop programs for pre-algebra and algebra courses, in which many average students "bomb out . . . never to come back again."

Student Aid Falls

Financial aid for college students has plummeted 21 percent — over $2 billion — since the Reagan administration took office in 1980, according to a just-released study by the College Board.

From a high of $18 billion in 1981-82, the amount of financial aid available for students has dropped to a low of just over $16 billion for the current academic year.

"And that $2 billion decline is even greater when inflation is taken into account," notes College Board spokeswoman Janice Gams. "Aid had been cut by one-fifth in inflation-adjusted terms."

Much of the decline is due to cuts the Reagan administration and Congress have made in Social Security benefits for college students, stricter limits on Guaranteed Student Loan (GSL) eligibility, and a post-Vietnam War drop in the use of veterans' benefits.

In addition, the study reports "a switch in the trend from grants to loans which has been remarkable," Gams says.

In 1970-71, for instance, grants accounted for nearly two-thirds of all financial aid, while loans and work-study benefits accounted for the other third.

By 1975-76, grants constituted over 80 percent of all financial aid expenditures, loans 17 percent, and College Work-Study three percent.

For the current year, however, loans and grants each account for 48 percent of student aid, and College Work-Study the remaining four percent.

At a time when college financial aid experts are growing increasingly concerned about the level of long-term debt college students are incurring, the decline in the amount of available grant money promises to have far-reaching implications.

At the same time, "the early 1980s have seen a major change in the relationship of costs, income and aid for college," the report says. "Adjusted for inflation, costs have increased, but income and financial aid per full-time equivalent student have not."

"Thus," the study concludes, "in contrast to what can be said generally about the past two decades (when income and financial aid awards actually stayed ahead of college costs), college has become relatively more difficult for families to afford in the 1980s."

But the results of "Trends in Student Aid: 1963-1983" should also "be put in the context of how much financial aid has really grown over the past years," Gams suggests.

The federal role in financial aid has indeed swelled in the last two decades, from 40 percent to 80 percent of all aid assistance.

Financial aid from all sources — federal, state and institutions — has skyrocketed from only $546 million in 1963-64 to $4.5 billion in 1970-71 to a high of $18 billion in 1981-82, the study says.

Tuition and room and board at private schools has increased from $2105 to $8537 in the last two decades, while the cost of attending a public school rose from $1026 to $3403 over the same period, the study says.

Job Recruiters Shun Campuses

When it comes to getting a job, Grambling Placement Director L.B. Smith has one short piece of advice: "You don't want to be a college graduate in 1983."

Nineteen eighty-three has been "the worst employment market in my 25 years in the profession," adds Victor Lindquist, placement chief at Northwestern and director of the annual Endicott Report of how students around the country are faring in the job market.

Although graduates of two-year colleges may be a little more successful this year in finding jobs than their counterparts at four-year schools, counselors around the nation are seemingly unanimous in calling this the worst student job market within memory for all collegians.

At some schools, as many as half the firms that normally recruit on campus failed to show up to interview students this year. Nationwide, job offers to all spring grads fell by 17 percent from 1982 levels.

Even engineering and computer science grads — who typically were fielding six or seven job offers just a year ago — have gotten 12 percent fewer offers than the Class of 1982.

Officials say things may be getting worse in the short run.

Job offers so far to four-year college grads are down an average of 34 percent since 1982.

Oddly enough, liberal arts majors are the only four-year campus grads doing better this summer and fall. Thus far they've entertained 10 percent more offers than the Class of 1982. Starting salaries for humanities majors rose 7.6 percent, a College Placement Council (CPC) campus survey released in August found.

Engineering majors continue to attract the highest starting salaries and the most number of job offers, but nowhere near the heights their predecessors achieved in the late seventies and early eighties.

Businesses have made 42 percent fewer offers to them, the CPC reports. And while the $26,736 average starting salary for chemical engineers ranked second only to petroleum engineers' $30,816, it was actually 1.2 percent lower than 1982's average figures.

According to Northwestern's Endicott update, the number of college graduates hired has declined a whopping 41 percent in the last two years.

Corporate recruiters, moreover, report their campus interviewing is down 62 percent in the same period.

Grambling's Smith says only about 55 percent of his school's spring graduating class has found jobs.

At Oregon State University, "We're wondering if all this talk of economic recovery isn't just politics," says Marjorie McBride, associate placement director. "The doors sure aren't swinging open here."

Oregon State's picture: 36 percent fewer recruiters visiting campus, 18 percent fewer student interviews, and "still the worst (job market) I've ever seen," McBride says.

"I don't know of any campus or any major that's been immune from (declines in the job market)," Lindquist says.

Community college grads, however, seem to be doing better.

"We have 87 percent of our grads placed, and 12 percent went into other continuing education programs," brags Ann Pierce, St. Louis Community College-Florissant Valley's placement director.

"But it's because we have so many technical programs," she explains. "Overall, we had a more difficult time, but like a lot of other community colleges we're finding that companies are looking for two-year graduates with specific technical training."

In fact, she adds, "many companies are choosing two-year technical grads over applicants with bachelor's degrees — even over engineers and computer science majors — because they don't have to pay them as much, and they can train them the 'company way' as opposed to a university's program approach."

"When my colleagues in engineering placement start complaining about their low placement rates," Lindquist jokes, "I'm telling them 'Welcome to the world of liberal arts placement.' "

But better times may be ahead.

Most job experts, along with corporate employers and personnel directors, expect 1984 to be a better year.

"Hopefully, it's going to look up the closer we get to the presidential elections," Smith says. "Between now and next spring I'm looking for a marked upturn."

Likewise, Oregon State's McBride is hopeful things will improve, "but we won't know for sure until we see how many (recruiters) actually show up in October."

Engineering grads, too, can "expect things to perk up a bit this year," according to Pat Sheridan, executive director of the Engineering Manpower Commission.

"But," he warns, "I don't think "Tyrant" off Sad Wings of Destiny (1976).

The best way to experience Judas Priest and heavy metal in general is through live performances. Judas Priest concerts are both crystal clear in sound quality and loud. Each note is sent through your body like an electric shock, and you can feel the strain on your chest cavity as each beat is pounded home. It's almost like having sex on a short-circuited waterbed!

In order to appreciate Defenders of the Faith one must accept the fact that he is experiencing the hardest rock on the market, and understand the talent required to produce good heavy metal. Producer Tom Allom deserves much of the credit as he has helped the group thrive for the last 5 albums. It is too bad that Judas Priest has remained virtually unexplored by all but the die-hard earthdogs, headbangers, hell rats, and defenders of the heavy metal faith who have found excitement in their music.

I would rate Defenders of the Faith as hard heavy metal music with excellent sound quality and overall album design. It seems as though the kings of heavy metal have produced another masterpiece of metal.

Recession Causes Drop

The silver cloud of the U.S. economic recovery may prove to have a dark lining for some colleges.

Enrollment, some fear, might finally dip as precipitously as experts once predicted it would during the early 1980s.

"If the recovery continues," says Lester Brookner, chief business officer at Miami-Dade Community College, "I'd anticipate a decrease in enrollment" because profitably-employed people don't go to college as readily as they do during recessions.

"It has been the conventional wisdom that in a recession people do enroll at a greater extent than at other times," observes Elaine El-Khawas of the American Council on Education in Washington, D.C.

"In times of recession, more people go back to school for additional training," agrees M.J. Williams of the National Association of College and University Business Officers.

But now that the recession appears to be over and jobs gradually become more plentiful, people may not need retraining in as great numbers as in the past few years.

There are signs that an enrollment decline may be beginning in certain kinds of schools.

An "informal" two-year college fall enrollment survey by the American Association of Community and Junior Colleges (AACJC) shows a slight drop in the number of students attending classes full-time, and an increase in the number of part-time students.

"Good economic times lead to an increase in the number of part-time students and a decrease in those attending school full-time," says James Gollattscheck of the AACJC.

"A lot of students who came here full-time are continuing school (part-time) and are working," adds Brookner of Miami-Dade, the largest community college in the country, where autumn enrollment fell 2.1 percent.

The biggest impact, in fact, may be on community and junior colleges. Enrollment at "low price-tag" urban schools may be the most sensitive to changes in the local job market, speculates Julianne Still Thrift of the National Institute of Independent Colleges and Universities.

Otherwise, "when people are optimistic about the economy, they're more likely to make an investment in their children's education," she adds. Consequently, "a good economy is good for us (four-year colleges)."

Nevertheless, colleges that rely primarily on 18-year-olds to fill their campuses also may be vulnerable.

Since the mid-seventies, experts have been forecasting a sharp drop in college enrollments because of the declining numbers of 18-year-olds. Enrollments have continued to rise — to a record total of over 12 million over the last two years — thanks largely to increased recruiting of "non-traditional" students.

"Non-traditional students," of course, are people older than the usual 18-to-24-year-old age group, and who may be returning to college for re-training.

"It's obvious that colleges must be doing a better recruiting job to fill themselves up with students," Williams notes.

But if the economy continues to improve, fewer non-traditional students theoretically need to return to school.

At Wayne School in Detroit, where the average graduate's age is 27, enrollment dropped marginally this fall.

But Wayne State, like virtually everyone contacted for this article, "would look forward to a recovery," according to Comptroller William Dean.

Dean figures that when more people work, more people pay more taxes to the state, and the state has more money to give to colleges.

State funding of colleges has in fact gone up this year. Total state appropriations to colleges are up 11 percent this year, says G.F. Hudgens of the National Association of State Universities and Land-Grant Colleges.

The University of Cincinnati, for example, got 18.5 percent more in state funds this year, though "we're still playing catch-up" from years of funding cuts during the recession, says Sigmund Ginsburg, the school's vice president for finance.

UC, moreover, "still depends on the traditional-aged full-timer" for its tuition revenues, although Ohio is "losing population of traditional (college) age," Ginsburg adds.

Others fear inflation might eat up any gains in state funding. If inflation this year goes up the four-to-five percent many economists predict, Hudgins says college administrators "will have to defer much-needed facility improvements and maintenance projects."

But the "overriding factor," given budget increases and an improving economy, on enrollment remains "the demography of college-aged students," contends Gordon Johnson, budget officer at the University of Colorado.

"Even if we continue to get some share of the market (of non-traditional and non-resident students)," he says, "we're still on a decline" because there are fewer 18-year-olds around to re-populate freshman classes.

things will ever get back to the levels in the late seventies and early eighties when grads were getting seven or eight job offers apiece and starting salaries were increasing at 12 percent a year."

Exxon, which this year hired "about a third" as many college grads as it did in 1981, expects to hire 10 percent more grads this spring, Professional Recruitment Director Ray Tickner predicts.

Hughes Aircraft, a major employer of engineers, will also be hiring more people next year, according to a company spokesman.

Texas Instruments "may hire slightly more engineers than this last year," says company spokesman George Berryman, "but we don't anticipate any major increase."

General Motors, though, says its hiring was already up 40 percent for spring 1983, "and may increase as much as 50 percent" for next spring, according to spokesman Bill Cowell.

"It's a mixed picture," observes Lindquist, "but we do hope the worst is over. Computer science and engineering majors are still the degrees of choice."

But before any major improvement occurs, he adds, "the shipping doors have to swing open before the doors in the employment office swing very wide."

Freshmen Consider Suicide

College freshmen "face a tremendous amount of anxiety and pressure" resulting in high levels of suicide contemplation, eating disorders, and self-doubt, according to a recent survey of students at an unnamed liberal arts college.

Twenty-five percent of all freshmen visiting the school's counseling center reported they had seriously considered suicide.

Over 75 percent said they sought counseling for psychiatric reasons.

"Clearly, students are under a great deal of pressure during their first year in college," says Professor Javad Kashani, a University of Missouri psychiatry researcher who co-authored the study.

"Freshmen are just changing from a high school life where it was free to live with mom and dad, where they had friends since childhood, and where they had a sense of community, to a college life where they have no support group, no ties to the community, and must manage things on their own," Kashani explains.

All these pressures, he says, mean freshmen "have much more serious pathologies" than their upper class counterparts: eating disorders, suicide gestures, feelings of worthlessness, and trouble concentrating on their studies.

"Americans seem to feel that at the age of 18 you should get out of the house and go off somewhere to college," Kashani says. "That's all right, but not every child is magically ready to deal with a new world at age 18."

Indeed, he points out, the pressure on freshmen is so great that over 40 percent of this fall's incoming students won't graduate with their class.

Results are in from V103 survey

by Jessie Amidon

The latest survey conducted by the college radio station, V103, indicates that listenership has dropped by 19.5% over last term's survey. While this may seem like a drastic decrease, John Lynch, station manager, attributes the drop in listenership to timing.

The survey was planned as a marketing research project and was taken in the fifth week of winter term when students are traditionally at an emotional low. The surveys are designed to help the staff arrange programming and the recent survey, "showed the management of V103 the need to compensate for mood changes from term to term," according to Lynch.

V103 plans to develop a personnel evaluation program wherein staff members receive feedback which will improve airplay. This program should generate more consistency among deejays, which will lead to a consistent image of the station in general.

The major purpose of the survey is to sample the musical tastes of the student body. Michael Jackson, The Police, and Billy Joel were rated as Juniata's top three artists. Journey dropped to seventh in V103's top twenty, while Genesis and the Rolling Stones are now included in the top ten.

Jacks & Wards on Top

by Kathy Harwick

Co-Rec Volleyball ended the 5th week of play last week. So far it looks like Geriatric Ward is in the lead for division A with their still undefeated record. Tuesday, January 24 they defended their first place spot with a win over Phase 9 (11-5, 15-10, 11-6). The Blood Clotters also seem to be a team to beat and they proved this once again with their victory over Mixed Nuts (15-13, 15-8). 407 & Buddies, with only two losses, defeated the Woo (15-7, 15-17, 12-10), while the Invaders beat Send in the Clowns (15-12, 9-15, 11-7) and the Flattii took a win from Merlin's Minstrels (15-7, 15-9).

In Division B, it looks like Happy Jacks are the team on top so far with only one loss. They took another win Tuesday, beating Julie Buckley's team (15-11, 15-4). Other wins went to Bumpin' Humpers II over B.H. and the P. (15-4, 15-5), Serving No Purpose over the Other Team (16-14, 10-5, 13-11), Out to Lunch over Ginny Krall's team (15-6, 3-15, 11-8), and to TCR BITES BACK (12-15, 15-0, 11-1) over Den of Degradation.

On Sunday, January 29 also saw some tough matches. In division A, 407 & Buddies took on undefeated Blood Clotters to come out on top with scores of 15-10, 17-15. The clowns battled each other with Send in the Clowns defeating Send in the Clowns II (11-15, 15-8, 11-0). Geriatric Ward remained undefeated after taking on the Invaders (15-9, 7-15, 11-1), while Les Enfants Terribles beat the Mixed Nuts (15-9, 15-4). Other wins went to Great Expectations (15-6, 14-16, 11-3) over the Flattii, to Phase 9 over N.D.T.L.O.C. (15-8, 15-3), and to the Woo over Merlin's Minstrels (12-15, 15-10, 11-7).

In division B, Happy Jacks defeated Miller Time (9-15, 17-15, 11-7), Bumpin' Humpers II beat Julie Buckley's team (15-3, 15-6), and other wins went to Serving No Purpose (18-16, 4-15, 11-3) over Out to Lunch, to Quantum Leaps over Ginny Krall's team (15-13, 11-15, 11-9), to TCR BITES BACK (15-2, 12-15, 11-3) over B.H. and the P. and to Bee Bopps (15-10, 15-8) over Den of Degradation.

Sports Corner

by Mark Shaw

Hello sports fans! Yes, believe it or not, this is the second Sports Corner in a row — I think that's a record for this year.

One thing that has been bothering me for the last few weeks is the definite lack of fan support for our varsity sports. Take a close look at our varsity sports' photos for this week. You could probably count the number of fans present on both hands (o.k., maybe I exaggerated a little — your feet too!)

This phenomenon has become quite prevalent on the Juniata campus. It was even somewhat present during the recent volleyball tournament in which our team finished second; sure the crowd was loud, but there were many empty seats.

Why have the Juniata fans apparently abandoned their varsity sports' teams? I don't want to hear: "Look at their records!" — that's a bunch of bull. Have you even thought that fan presence could help change that record? I think the teams would perform better if fans would show up. Another point is that even when we have good sports' teams, fan support is not great. The gym was never packed for the women's volleyball team. So, I ask again, "What is the problem?"

It can't be: "I can't afford it!" — we don't even have to pay to attend our regular sporting events. In other schools, students pay to see their varsity teams play; yet, the fans still turn out.

Well, now we're back to the original question: "Why doesn't anyone show up for our varsity sports?" As you can see, this is becoming a difficult question to answer.

I've been trying to come up with an answer but all I can do is come up with the poor excuses I usually hear. Maybe there is no valid reason for the poor attendance. I know what the poor reasons are, do you have any ideas on the good reasons? If you have a solution, please let us know. I'm sure many of the varsity players would like to know.

Cagers Present Gifts

Members of the Juniata College men's basketball team recently presented mementos of their Belgium trip to college president Frederick M. Binder.

The team presented the runner-up cup from the J.M. Louis Memorial Christmas Tournament and an 18 inch ceramic disc featuring scenic representations of the renowned Namur Citadel.

In making the presentation, team representatives expressed the appreciation of the entire squad to Dr. Binder and Juniata College for making the trip possible.

Those making the presentation were Juniata head basketball coach Dan Helm, Juniata President Frederick M. Binder, and team captain Dan Feruck.

Play-offs Near

by Andy Hiscock

The Men's I.M. Basketball season is winding down. Two weeks of the regular season remain before the play-offs begin. As the season dwindles down, the competition for the play-off positions becomes more intense.

On Thursday, January 26th, in Division "A" action "Just For Fun" defeated "We-can't-a-jama", 69-54. Steve Helm had a good all-around game for Fun which helped them to the victory. In other Division "A" games on Thursday, "The 69ers" defeated "One Leg Up", 55-44 . . . "?" beat "The Brighton Blur", 62-41. As it stands now, the following teams are in the top four Division "A" play-off berths: (1st) "Just For Fun" 7-2 . . .; (2nd) "The 69ers" 6-2 . . .; (Tied for the 3rd + 4th place) "We-can't-a-jama" 6-4 and "One Leg Up" 6-4. "Tarnished Heels" is currently in 5th place with a 4-4 record with the top four teams reaching the play-offs.

In Division "B" on Tuesday, January 24th, "Pat's Red Cockadades" beat "The Hackers", 36-25. Al Leydig had a good offensive game and Rob Greenlee made a good defensive showing for Pat which helped them to the victory. Also in Division "B", "Greek Rimmers" squeaked by "Team No. 14", 46-45 . . . "Running Rebels" snuck by "J-town", 39-38. The teams who are currently in the top six play-off berths in Division "B" are as follows: (1st) "Greek Rimmers" 7-1 . . .; "Hustlers" 6-1 . . .; "Babylon By Bus" 7-2 . . .; "Smegs II" 6-2 . . .; "J-Town" 5-3 . . .; and tied for the sixth spot are "Running Rebels" and "Pat's Red Cockadades" with 5-4 records. The top two teams at the end of the regular season will get first-round byes.

On Sunday, January 29th, two top Division "C" teams met in a close game. The game was a good example of a defensive battle, and was exciting right down to the last second. After the dust cleared, "Sturgeon Lips" was the victor over "The Big Ganglers" with a close, 32-30 win. Dave Sweitzer had a good offensive showing for the Lips. Jeff Meeker was the so-called "Chairman of the Boards" for the Lips making his home above the offensive and defensive rims the whole game. Scott Cody had a good game for The Ganglers on the defensive boards and was able to drive the hoop effectively on offense but they came up a bucket short. I think that these two teams might meet each other in the play-offs but I know that there are a couple of teams that want to stop that. There was one other Division "C" game played on Sunday with "The Lust Brigade" beating "The Cripples II" in another close game 47-44. Time is also running short on Mark Hudson's attempt to raise his 3.87 shooting percentage for the 3rd Cloister team before the end of the year. The following three teams are currently qualifying for the play-off positions in Division "C": (1st) "The Big Ganglers" 7-1 . . .; (2nd) "Sturgeon Lips" 7-2 . . .; and (3rd) "The Cripples II" 4-5. The first place team at the end of the regular season will get a 1st-round bye.

Men's B-Ball Faulters

by Joe Scialabba

The Juniata College men's basketball team has gone through a very tough week. Coach Dan Helm's squad, playing .500 ball since the Christmas holiday, fell three straight times to end any hopes of a Middle Atlantic Conference playoff berth.

The 4-13 Indians, 3-7 in the MAC, could still salvage a .500 or better 1984 portion of the season with a successful February. The Tribe is now 3-6 in the new year.

The only really good news this past week was the individual accomplishment of co-captain Dan Feruck. Feruck, a senior from Pennsville, NJ, went over the 1,000 career point mark with a double digit effort on Wednesday against Lycoming in Memorial Gym. He has been averaging over 14 points a game this season.

The three losses of last week came in similar styles. The Tribe got in trouble early and never recovered.

The 74-63 loss to Dickinson in Carlisle was the beginning of the disappointing week. Juniata had a 28-27 field goal edge, but the hosts rode a 20 for 29 foul line effort to JC's 7 for 12, for the victory.

Dickinson, which led 33-24 at halftime, was paced by Bob Jacobs' 21 points, and Ted Kirkpatrick's 20.

The Indians were led by Mark Rucinski's 20 markers. Feruck added 12 points, Jeff Ostrowski 11, and Dick Moses had 10 for the Tribe.

Juniata hoped for better things on Wednesday as Lycoming visited Memorial Gym, but the situation worsened.

Shooting a frigid 24 percent from the floor, the Indians had an uphill battle all night in losing 60-41 to the Warriors. The winners led 25-12 at intermission.

Ed Langer had 14 points to lead Lyco while Feruck and Moses scored 10 apiece for the Tribe.

Juniata, trailing only 18-17 at the foul line, could manage only 12 field goals for the game; Lycoming hit for 21.

The Albright Lions, 49-40 losers to Juniata early in January, got their revenge on Saturday in Reading as they coasted to a 68-54 win. The Lions jumped to an early 8-0 lead and never looked back.

Chip Carey and Gary Swavely had 20 points each for Albright, while Feruck hit for 20 for the Indians. Rucinski and Moses added 12, and 10 points, respectively, for JC.

Albright shot an impressive 56 percent from the floor to Juniata's 44 percent effort, and that was the deciding factor.

Coach Helm was puzzled by his team's sudden downward swing. "We had been playing pretty well the last few weeks, then we just fell apart," said Helm. "We were behind all week and could not catch up. We have to get our game back together quickly because things aren't going to be any easier in February. Hopefully we can put things together in the final eight games and finish 1984 over .500."

Swimming

by Beth Pierie

It was a cold day at Susquehanna, but some blistering times were being set by Juniata's swimmers. This past Saturday, the Men's and Women's swim team traveled to Susquehanna University for a 1:00 meet.

The Juniata Swim Club was represented by five women and four men. Amy Reed and Stan Wampler swam the 500 yard freestyle with amazing endurance. Short distance freestyle was finished quickly by Beth Pierie, Risa Herell, Anne Blycher, Pat O'Dowd, Eric Bortell and Stan Wampler.

With phenomenal strength, Tom Swivel, Lisa Wilson, Risa Herell and Amy Reed completed butterfly and individual medley events. Backstroke was successfully swam by Beth Pierie, Pat O'Dowd and Risa Herell.

Anne Blycher and Eric Bortell captured two first places in diving while each other member of the team seized at least one first place.

Lady Indians Sweep

by App

The women's basketball team inched closer to the magical .500 mark by scoring a pair of impressive victories at home last week. On Wednesday, Juniata thrashed Lycoming 67-52 and on Saturday, they defeated Messiah 56-47. The Lady Indians are now just one game under .500 with a 6-7 record, thanks to three wins in four home games.

Lycoming jumped to a short lived 6-0 lead, which the Indians quickly erased. The key to the game was a tenacious fullcourt zone trap press which forced 31 Lycoming turnovers and led to many cheap Juniata buckets. Despite the early deficit, Juniata still led by 19 points, 42-23, at half time.

In the second half, Lycoming outscored the Indians but the game was never really in doubt as Coach Latimore was able to give the entire squad playing time. Another key factor in the win was the big edge in team rebounding, as Juniata won the battle of the boards, 57-37. Patty Ryan led the Indians with 20 points and 12 rebounds. Holly Crable added 14 points to the winning cause. Debbie Rahm led the team with 15 rebounds and Peggy Evans helped the board effort with 10 caroms.

The full court press was also instrumental in the Indians' win against Messiah, as it caused 25 turnovers. This was important because Juniata was outrebounded by a taller Messiah team, 49-33. The Indians jumped to an 11 point lead but Messiah closed the gap to 6 points at halftime, 24-18.

In the second half, Messiah closed to within 2 points but Juniata was able to regroup and build the lead to a more comfortable margin. This enabled them to cruise in for the victory.

Once again, Ryan led the Indians, with a fine individual effort consisting of 22 points and 8 rebounds. Evans tallied 12 points and hauled in 7 rebounds. Carol Stambaugh led the Indian board effort with 9 rebounds and Karen "Cheese" Fonner dished out 6 assists.

The Lady Indians are away this week for two games. On Wednesday, they met a strong Elizabethtown team and on Saturday, they will travel to King's College to match up with the Colonels. Good luck women!

Wrestlers Win

by Mark Shaw

The grapplers from Juniata upped their season record this past weekend to 3-4 with a convincing 33-12 victory over the Altoona Campus of Penn State.

After the first two matches (118 lb. & 126 lb.), the score was tied at six. Both victors won by forfeit; Paul Bernhardt (118 lb.) for Juniata and Jim Bickle (126 lb.) for Altoona.

Unfortunately for Altoona, 6-6 was the closest they would get all day. Juniata took six of the next eight matches to soundly defeat the Altoona team.

Captain Rick Noll (134 lb.) led the Indian charge with a 6-4 decision over Altoona's Todd Campbell. Next was Dave Cooper (142 lb.), who defeated Kurt Fink of Altoona 5-3. Then Dave Sloan (150 lb.), who is having a good year, pinned his opponent, Bill Miller, at the 7:26 mark. Capping off Juniata's four match run was Eric Olsen, who won his match by forfeit.

With Juniata maintaining a commanding lead, Altoona tried to make a comeback in sweeping the next two matches. Gene Wilson (167 lb.), for Altoona, narrowly defeated Craig Stafford 8-7, while Altoona's Andy Keirn downed Juniata's Steve Feltenberger 8-5.

However, the big men of Juniata did not falter, as Randy Smith (190 lb.) defeated Dan Traverny 8-5, and Rick Brown (hwt.) pinned his opponent Paul Molchany in 1:35.

One-Act Plays Open Tonight

Three one-act plays directed and staged by Juniata College students will be presented in Oller Hall beginning tonight and continuing through Saturday at 8 p.m. Admission is free.

This year's "Round of One-Act Plays" will feature "The Open Window" directed by junior Wendy M. Whitehaus of Hummelstown, "The Private Ear" directed by senior John R. Molcan of Mt. Airy, Md. and "Motherlove" directed by junior Kari E. Dubbel of Huntingdon.

"The Open Window" takes place in an English country manor and deals with a young man who has come to the manor to rest after suffering a nervous breakdown due to academic pressures. The young niece of the manor's proprietor notices the student's nervousness and attempts to deal with the situation.

The student cast consists of senior Christopher D. Collins of Ebensburg, sophomore Sharon K. Dotts of Chester Springs, sophomore Jocelyn A. Fowler of Springfield, sophomore Jayne W. Stein of Holmdel, N.J., junior Gary B. Cole of Haddon Heights, N.J. and sophomore Ronald A. Markey of Harrisburg. Senior Jon R. Cooper of Oxford is the stage manager for the play.

Set in a small, dreary London flat, "The Private Ear" is the story of a lonely office worker who is obsessed with classical music and his own idealistic thoughts. One night, he gathers the courage to invite a girl over for dinner for the first time in his life. However, he is reluctant to be alone with her, so he invites his friend to come also. Through the course of the evening, the lonely man must deal with his relationship with the young woman, his friend and his idealism.

The play stars freshman Stephen B.Q. Meyer of Bethesda, Md. as the lonely man, freshman John E. Ploumis of Media as his friend and freshman Sheri L. Kidd of Jeannette as the young woman. Freshman Robert W. Boyer of Greentown is the stage manager for the play.

The third play, "Motherlove," is set at a seaside resort cottage in turn-of-the-century Sweden. A young woman whose life is dominated by her mother, tries to break free from her family and their reputation, but some startling truths told to her by a friend continue to hold her captive.

Cast members are senior Alyson Pfister of Willingboro, N.J., sophomore Cheryl E. Kimbrough of Lansing, Ill., Gabriele Vogelsang from West Germany and freshman Elisabeth T. Oishi of Baltimore, Md. The stage manager for "Motherlove" is freshman Lois A. Buchanan of Malvern.

Seating for the plays will be arena style on the Oller Hall stage, so the number of seats for each performance is limited.

Alumnus Gives J.C. Cottage

by Marie Pluta

Juniata has received a cottage as a gift from Dr. and Mrs. Robert B. Patrick.

The cottage is located on 6.6 acres in the Diamond Valley, and will be used by the college for meetings, conferences and retreats. The facilities are available to faculty, administrators and student groups.

Ellen Wallace, Office of College Advancement, has described the cottage as an appropriate place for creating an educational atmosphere, and working in small groups.

The cottage can be reserved through Wayne Justham, Director of Programming. Reservations must be made two weeks in advance. Priority will be given to administrative and educational programs although the cottage may be used for recreational purposes.

The cottage has a large living room with a fireplace, three bedrooms, two full baths, an enclosed sunporch, and a fully equipped kitchen.

Dr. Arnold Tilden, Dean of Student Services, said the cottage is rejuvenating because it is in the wilderness. "Conferences and programs will be more profitable without the distractions on campus."

Dr. Patrick graduated from Juniata in 1926, and recently retired from teaching at the Pennsylvania State University. He and his wife, Mabel, now reside in Orange City, Florida.

Matt Weinstein, director of Playfair each fall here at JC, spoke with students Saturday at the Leadership Conference. Discussions at the conference focused on community building, personal growth, and leadership skills.

Juniata Talent: "showed what they had"

by Mary McDougall

Performers from Juniata student body and staff came together last Thursday night in Oller Auditorium for a talent show sponsored by Lesher RHA.

Sophomore Debbie Waltz and freshman Alicia Griffith captured the first place prize of $25 with a rendition of Billy Joel's "New York State of Mind." Second place honors and $15 went to Robert Klippert, Juniata's harmonica-playing security guard. Klippert's presentation which combined music and monologue was entitled "Sweetest Music This Side of Muddy Run." Joanne Jackson, organizer of the show, won the third place prize of $10 with a gymnastic routine to the tune "Maniac" from "Flashdance."

Judge Doris Goehring remarked on the "versatility" and "energy" displayed by the participants. "The show came off quite well. I think we can expect to see more participation in coming years."

The remaining acts were dominated by musicians. Opening the show was a rock band billed as "ZZ Top" featuring hits from their namesake and Robert Hazzard. Chris "Corky" Collins sang lead, backed up by guitarist Dan Vukmer, Eric Barnes on bass and Tom Welch on drums.

Other singers included Dan Miller who played the guitar and performed original songs "It'll Be Alright" and "She Loves Doritos But She Don't Love Me." Eliza Beers, six-year-old daughter of Lesher RD Mary Lou Beers, performed "Tomorrow" from the Broadway hit "Annie."

Another band, "Phase 9," featured the vocals of sophomore Jim Younkin. Performing music by the Romantics, Eddie Money and Night Ranger were Lee Canfield on lead guitar, Joe D'Amico on rhythm guitar, Grant Angeny on bass and drummer John Ashman.

Judges for the competition were Wayne Justham, Director of Programming, Doris Goehring, Professor of Speech and Theater, and Rich Mrosky, chairman of the Artist Series Committee. Creativity, originality, execution and audience appeal were the criteria for judging.

The Chemistry Club will hold its interscience club volleyball tournament on Friday, Feb. 10, from 6-10 p.m. in the Memorial Gym.

"This is going to be the social event of the year," remarked Chem Club Social Committee Chairperson, Anne Garstka. "There will be leaded and unleaded punch and partying before, during and after the tournament."

Student members and professors of the Chemistry Club, Scalpel and Probe, Tri-Beta, Society of Physics Students, and the Andrew Lawson Geological Society are all invited.

"We already have several teams and we're expecting more participation," reported Garstka. A trophy will be awarded to the club sponsoring the winning team and gag gifts will also be given out at the end of the evening. "This is the first volleyball tournament among the interscience center studies — hopefully it will be a success," said Garstka.

Apathy Strikes Again

The second weekend in February has arrived and it has yet to happen. Wake up Juniata. It's not going to happen.

That's right — Winter Weekend, the seasonal highlight of these seven long weeks has been erased from the calendar, at least for 1984, if not permanently.

And remember SpringFest Weekend, also a seasonal highlight designed to break up those weeks between Easter and graduation? Get ready for another rude awakening: SpringFest '84 doesn't even exist.

Both Winter Weekend and SpringFest were Centerboard sponsored events. So why the cancellations? To Centerboard members, both events were termed a failure on Juniata's campus because they were too expensive to keep going for the amount of student participation they generated.

The Juniatian has witnessed the downfall of these weekends. Two and three years ago, SpringFest Weekend couldn't be missed. There were booths sponsored by residence halls, fiddle players, camel and elephant rides, and dances on both weekend nights. Last year, SpringFest Weekend couldn't be found. It merely consisted of a performance by two folk singers and three small booths on Oller lawn.

Winter Weekend was revived a few years ago, only to fall by the wayside again. Last year, the Sharks Concert and jazz concert had low turnouts, both with 250 people at most. This year, not one person showed up at either of the organizational meetings. The Winter Weekend Committee had no members — not even a chairperson.

This is not the first time The Juniatian recognizes the apathy which runs wild on this campus. At the same time, we feel this apathy may not be the sole reason for these failures. The Juniatian thinks publicity and advertising have a crucial role in promoting interest. Perhaps events like these weren't and aren't publicized enough or in the proper way to ensure their continued success.

The Juniatian staff, like many people, continues to search for answers. In the meantime, we cannot ignore the sad results. As special weekends here and there drop off the calendar, Juniata loses more and more of the unique character it so proudly boasts. This year, the character has definitely reached an all time low.

"ON SECOND THOUGHT..."

Letters to the Editor

Dear Editor,

Recent stories in several area newspapers concerning The Gourman Report survey of colleges and universities have stated that the report rates Juniata College as "marginal." Not only is this rating inaccurate, but the methodology Professor Gourman uses to arrive at his rating is highly suspect.

In his report, Professor Gourman says that an institution's evaluation is based in part on data submitted by the institution in the form of a questionnaire. Juniata has no record of ever receiving such a questionnaire or a request for information for The Gourman Report. How then did Professor Gourman obtain his data on Juniata?

In 1980, David S. Webster, Chancellor's Intern Fellow at the University of California at Los Angeles Graduate School of Education, critiqued the methodologies used in several college-ranking studies. That critique described Professor Gourman's methodology as "wildly eccentric" and "bizarre". Mr. Webster goes on to say that "Another idiosyncracy of Gourman's is his habit of vastly overrating the excellence of large universities compared to small colleges."

There are many excellent colleges and universities in Pennsylvania, and any report that ranks 94% of those institutions studied as "adequate" or "less than adequate" cannot be taken seriously.

Juniata's "marginal" rating has no basis in fact. In a recent study conducted by Franklin and Marshall College of 867 four-year, private, primarily undergraduate institutions, Juniata ranked 82nd in the absolute number of alumni who had received Ph.D. degrees between 1920 and 1980. When controlling for the size of the alumni population, Juniata ranks in the top 2% of those institutions and third among all colleges in Pennsylvania behind Haverford and Swarthmore. A similar study of 100 institutions conducted by the College of Wooster ranked Juniata 31st in the nation in the percentage of alumni with Ph.D. degrees.

Recent surveys of Juniata students conducted by our Office of Institutional Planning and Research show that 86% are satisfied with the college. Comparative national norms from the American College Testing Program show that nationally only 75% of students are satisfied with their college.

Juniata's academic excellence may be demonstrated in many ways. For example, in the last two years, 100% of those students applying for admission to either medical, dental, veterinary or Question: If you were given the chance, what's the thing you would most like to change here at Juniata?

Mike Mower, Senior: "I would change the meal plan. They're trying, but this year as compared to previous years, the food's been bad."

Alayne Unterberger, Freshman: "Oh, make L & L go away for this year, since it's ineffective for next year."

Todd Hazlett, Freshman: "The food!"

Basil Beltran, Senior: "I think I would change the $25 late registration fee. I just had to pay it."

Allan Reyes, Freshman: "The food! I've come here because I have no other place to go."

!!!NOTE: The rating on Judas Priest, Defenders of the Faith, last week should have been  out of 5 instead of the printed rating.

The new release from Night Ranger is Midnight Madness. The relatively new group follows up its previous album, Dawn Patrol, with this attempt at rock and roll with a popular touch. Similar to Sammy Hagar in rhythm, the music will appeal to most moderate rockers and may not offend dance music fans.

Jack Blades (bass, vocals) writes most of the songs on Midnight Madness and harmonizes well with the three other singers in the group. Guitars are strummed by Jeff Watson and Brad Gillis, who also adds background vocals. Drummer Kelly Keagy adds a hard rock sound to the cuts with prevalent cymbal and snare work, and an occasional roll. The band complements the effort with Alan "Fitz" Gerald on the necessary component to any new rock band, the keyboards.

The best song on Midnight Madness is "You Can Still Rock in America." This combines fast guitar work with a good drum beat. The song moves itself along with a loud and patriotic chorus. Jack Blades has also written himself a dynamite bass line which is brought out by the drumming. Other good cuts include "Why Does Love Have to Change" and "Touch of Madness." These songs have lyrics which are a great improvement over the last album's "Don't Tell Me You Love Me," which has the title repeated over 20 times in the song. Overall, the lyrics on Midnight Madness have to do with growing up, which suggests that the intended audience for Night Ranger is probably teenagers.

One drawback to the album is that the tracks seem to blend together. The guitar solos are very similar, and although tricky at times, get monotonous when coupled with "common" vocals. The incorporation of the keyboards saves the group, and you even find yourself tapping to the beat.

I would rate Midnight Madness as a moderate rock album similar to Loverboy and Sammy Hagar in respects.

health professions schools were accepted. This success may be traced back to the high quality of Juniata's students.

The annual Cooperative Institutional Research Program's ongoing study of entering freshmen students have ranked Juniata in the "Highly selective" category. This means that Juniata's average SAT score for entering freshmen falls in the 1025 to 1175 range. The national SAT average score for 1983 was 893.

Additional statistics about Juniata's success as an institution of higher education, are equally impressive and rival those of other excellent colleges and universities.

It is unfortunate that these newspapers did not examine Professor Gourman's track record before publishing their stories. On a scale of 1 to 5, we give The Gourman Report a zero.

Club Serves Campus

by Cathy Hoffman

There is a group of students on campus who work to help the community and relations between Juniata and the local area. They don't get paid with money, but they do have a name. They're called the Social Service club, a very appropriate name indeed.

The club provides many services for fellow students, quite often in the form of lectures. One such lecture was given on February sixth by Charles Walford, the Director of Social Services at Lewistown Hospital. His lecture, although valuable to all, was of special value to students interested in social work and the medical field.

Other than lectures there are activities which involve the campus in helping to raise money for charities. Jeff Meeker, Lisa Gress, Jay Jones and Kay Rockafellow were just a few of the "Bowlers for Breath" who helped raise $1,356.57 for Cystic Fibrosis by bowling at the local alley.

Most of us also helped support local charities by attending a recent lounge party the club sponsored. Some of their other activities are a Valentine Carnation sale going on now, a Big Brother-Big Sister program, and tutors for Chestnut Terrace housing project children.

Projects like those and more are constantly being planned by the Social Service Club. The members continue to help charities, the community, and Juniata through their efforts and your support.

Gifts Reach High

NEW YORK, NY (CPS) — Thanks largely to a change in tax laws, some new savvy by campus fundraisers, and perhaps even shrewd marketing by computer companies, corporate gifts to colleges amounted to a record high of $1.3 billion in 1982, the Council for Financial Aid to Education (CFAE) has found.

While CFAE President John Haire attributes the increase — which amounts to $220 more than what was given in 1981 — to corporations' "strong commitment to education," CFAE Vice President Arthur Kammerman adds new tax laws played a large role.

"We know for one thing there was a considerable increase in gifts-in-kind because of the Economic Recovery Tax Act of 1981," he says.

The tax act lets companies deduct more of the value of a gift as a charitable contribution. Consequently, the companies pay less in corporate taxes.

Kammerman adds that colleges may be benefitting from increased competition among computer makers.

"We know there were a lot of computers given," Kammerman says.

"Another reason for the increase in corporate giving," Kammerman adds, is that "colleges are doing a better job of selling themselves to corporations. Most colleges in the country now have promotion departments."

Haire was especially pleased the jump came during a year of declining corporate profits.

HUNTINGDON — The Juniata College men's basketball team started the final month of their season with two consecutive road victories. Coach Dan Helm's Indians upset Middle Atlantic Conference Northwest division leader Elizabethtown 54-51 on Wednesday, and then whipped King's College 49-47 on Saturday in Wilkes-Barre.

The two league wins left the Tribe 5-7 in MAC and 6-13 overall. Juniata is now 5-6 since Christmas break.

The E-town win was attributed to "smart play," according to Coach Helm. "We took good shots, rebounded well, and kept our poise in the end when we had to," said Helm. "Elizabethtown has a good team and beating them was a great accomplishment. The team put together a great effort, and did a good job coming back from those straight losses."

The Indians were in control most of the night, despite a 26-24 halftime deficit, and led the Blue Jays by as much as eight points, 40-32, with 10:50 remaining. The hosts, however, fought back to take the lead by one point twice in the last two minutes before Dick Moses canned a 12-footer from the baseline to give the Indians a 52-51 edge with :25 left. E-town came up short on a 15-foot jumper with three seconds left, and Jeff Ostrowski then sank two free throws to set the final score.

Moses and Mark Rucinski led Juniata with 14 points apiece. Paul Kardish added 12; Ostrowski 10.

Art George and Brian Crouse has 13 points apiece for Elizabethtown, which fell to 11-7 overall and 6-3 in the league.

On Saturday, Juniata overcame foul trouble and a frigid second half to hold on to beat King's. After leading 33-26 at the half on the strength of a 61 percent field goal shooting effort, the Indians thought someone put a lid on their rim in the final twenty minutes as they could manage only five field goals.

The hosting Monarchs got within two points three times down the stretch but could never notch a tying basket. The Indians survived with some clutch free throws and gutsy defense.

The Tribe, despite its horrible second half, still managed a 21-18 field goal edge. King's made 11 of 18 foul shots; Juniata hit 7 of 14.

Mark Feistl had 26 points for King's, while Dan Feruck led Juniata with 4 points, before fouling out with four minutes left. Rucinski added ten points and seven rebounds.

King's fell to 7-11, and 4-4 in the conference.

Coach Dan Helm was pleased with his team's play this past week. "We turned things around," said Helm.

Ladies Lose

by App

The Women's basketball team dropped two away games last week as they watched their near .500 record fall to 6-9 for the season. On Wednesday night, they traveled to Elizabethtown and were beaten soundly by the undefeated nationally ranked No. 1 team 89-51. Then, on Saturday, they traveled to King's College and dropped a close contest by 4 points.

The Elizabethtown game wasn't much of a game. The Indians stayed close early but were eventually overpowered by the basketball machine from Elizabethtown. E-town dominated the boards by a wide margin, 63-24, which allowed them to attempt 31 more shots from the field than we did. E-town built a 19 point, 39-20 lead at halftime and were never threatened. Patty Ryan led the Indians in scoring with 13 points and Holly Crable chipped in with 12 points. Peggy Evans led the weak board effort with 4 rebounds.

On Saturday, the game was close throughout. The first half was nip and tuck the whole way with the Lady Indians leading by 1 point a halftime. The Indians scored the first 6 points of the second half to stake themselves to a 7 point advantage. However, King's came back with a streak of their own to eventually draw even and then with about 10 minutes left in the game, they scored 4 consecutive buckets to gain an 8 point lead. Juniata closed to within 4 points late in the game but couldn't make it the whole way back in suffering a very tough defeat.

This week the Lady Indians have two games. This past Tuesday the Indians hosted York and on Saturday the Lady Indians pay a return visit to Messiah College.

Two teams are shown here battling it out on one of the last nights of I.M. Co-Rec V-Ball regular season play.

I.M. V-Ball Season Ends

by Kathy Harwick

Last week ended the second to last week of intramural volleyball pool play, with last night's action concluding pool play. In division A play, Tuesday, January 31, brought no unexpected wins. Closely matched Send in the Clowns II and the Flattii saw the Clowns pull out the win (13-15, 15-6, 11-6). As the Blood Clotters battled Phase 9 in another evenly matched game of the night, The Blood Clotters stopped Phase 9 (13-15, 15-13, 11-1), taking the match a full three games. Send in the Clowns gave Les Enfants Terribles a scare when they also took the match to three games. But Les Enfants came out on top (15-4, 10-15, 11-7) to remain one of the top teams in division A.

Surprises did happen Wednesday, February 1, however. Still hot from the night before, Les Enfants Terribles became the first team to defeat Geriatric Ward, taking the match to three games (14-16, 17-15, 11-7). Another surprise came when the Invaders beat the Blood Clotters (12-15, 16-14, 11-5). The other games played Wednesday were pretty evenly matched. Phase 9 defeated Mixed Nuts (15-5, 9-15, 11-2), Send in the Clowns beat the Flattii (15-10, 15-2), and N.D.T.L.O.C. defeated Great Expectations (15-4, 15-6).

In division B, Tuesday and Wednesday didn't result in any real surprising matches. On Tuesday, TCR BITES BACK defeated Ginny Krall's team (15-9, 15-12), The Other Team beat Bee Bopps (11-15, 15-8, 11-4) and B.H. and the P. overcame Den of Degradation (15-6, 15-1).

The only surprise occurred Wednesday as top team Happy Jacks fell to The Other Team (15-12, 9-15, 9-11). Ginny Krall's team pulled out a win from Den of Degradation (15-7, 15-5), while the Quantum Leaps leaped over Miller Time (15-10, 10-15, 11-9). With the help of connections between Jeff Rush and Sherri Herold, Out to Lunch defeated Bee Bopps (15-11, 15-13), and Serving No Purpose topped TCR BITES BACK (15-7, 15-1).

On Sunday, February 5, Steve Poska helped 407 & Buddies take two victories in division A play. The Buddies toyed with both teams, taking each match to three games, but they "faced" both Phase 9 (12-15, 16-14, 11-8) and the Mixed Nuts ((15-3, 11-15, 11-9). Steve DePerrot worked hard to make up for his Geriatric Ward's first and only loss that took place on Wednesday, by sending Send in the Clowns II away with a (11-15, 4-15) loss. With awesome serves by Todd Graybill and hard dunks by Eric Ober, the Blood Clotters also defended their team's high rank by beating Merlin's Minstrels (15-7, 15-8). Les Enfants Terribles pulled out another victory, this time against the Flattii (15-7, 15-12), while the Invaders protected their play-off spot, defeating N.D.T.L.O.C. (15-4, 15-6). The Mixed Nuts had a rough day, losing another match Sunday against Send in the Clowns (12-15, 13-15). And in final division A play for the day, the Woo defeated Great Expectations (7-15, 15-6, 11-5).

In division B play on Sunday, highly ranked TCR BITES BACK fell to Julie Buckley's team (16-14, 11-15, 11-8) after fighting hard to defend their ranking. Another top ranked team, Happy Jacks, saw their second loss of the week, this loss given by the Bee Bopps (10-15, 17-15, 11-8). Serving No Purpose and Bumpin' Humpers II, other top ranked teams, both defended their ranks. SNP defeated the Quantum Leaps (17-15, 15-12) to stay on top, while the Humpers beat Miller Time (15-10, 15-7). Smiling Sue Simpson fought tough to get Ginny Krall's team a win over B.H. and the P. (15-2, 11-15, 11-9), while the Den of Degradation put up no fight against the Other Team, forfeiting the Other Team a win.

Play-off Night

The I.M. department announced that there will be a championship night next Wednesday, February 15, starting at 6:30. The championships of all of the I.M. sports will be decided. So, please come out and support your favorite I.M. team! The playoff schedules will soon be out containing the times and places of all the games.

Skiers Compete

Ski fever has definitely hit the Juniata campus in full force this year. The result of this "ski fever" has been the formation of a ski racing team at Juniata college.

Interest for a ski racing team surfaced during the middle of last year's ski season. A small group of students organized a club, elected officers and managed to enter one race last year. During the spring of last year, the newly formed club began seriously planning for the 1983-84 ski season.

Elections were held and the winners were: Jack Makdad, President; Steve Helm, Vice-President; Nancy Briggs, Secretary; and Tim Parnell, Treasurer. These officers set the groundwork and planned all of this year's activities.

This year's ski team members began training right after Thanksgiving break. Their conditioning involved lifting weights, exercising, and running everyday. The team was quickly preparing itself for the beginning of the race season in January.

The ski team has received financial assistance from a couple of sources. The most important source of funding was a sponsorship from the Blue Knob Ski Resort; this provides them with free access to the slopes once a week and lessons from a professional ski racer. The club has also received support from Student Government in the form of a $350 grant. In addition to the grants, the club has sponsored fundraisers to help support their cause.

The ski team competed in its first race on January 21 at Seven Springs. Representing Juniata were Jamie Van Buren, Randy Ketchum, Mark Rich, Tim Parnell and Steve DePerrot (team captain). These racers were chosen upon the results of time trials at the Pop Sheetz Race held on January 14.

Juniata placed third among a very competitive field of five. Also competing in the races were West Virginia University, Garret College, Frostburg College and the University of Pittsburgh.

In the Giant Slalom, Parnell placed eighth, DePerrot placed tenth, and Rich placed fifteenth. In the Slalom, Parnell finished sixth and Rich finished eighth. In both races there were 50 racers.

The next week saw the race going to Ski Roundtop near Lewisbury, PA. The Juniata team competed against 13 teams: Penn State, Pitt and Bucknell to name a few. The Juniata ski team finished seventh out of thirteen.

In the Giant Slalom, Parnell finished 18; in the Slalom, Dave Hildebrandt finished 4; Helm, 8; Makdad, 25; and Ketchem, 26.

The team would like to especially thank the Hildebrandt family for providing lodging and meals for the Juniata racers during their stay at Ski Roundtop.

Vol. XXXV, No. 16 | Juniata College — Huntingdon, Pa. 16652 | February 16, 1984

J.C. Concert Choir To Tour Over Break

Religious selections featured

A wide variety of sacred and secular selections will be featured when the Juniata College Concert Choir performs Feb. 26 through March 1 in Pennsylvania, Maryland, Delaware and Virginia on its 1984 tour.

Directed by Bruce A. Hirsch, associate professor of music, the 42-voice Concert Choir will open its program with a broad selection of religious works which illustrate how sacred texts and concepts are communicated through different musical styles. Featured will be such composers as: George Friderick Handel ("Sing Unto God"), Luther-Mueller ("A Mighty Fortress is Our God"), and Antonio Lotti ("Crucifixus").

Included in the secular half of the program are composers Kevin Kunz ("Laugh Lady Clown"), and Vincent Persichetti ("Sam Was a Man").

Hirsch, a member of the Juniata faculty since 1965, holds a bachelor's and master's degree from Westminster Choir College, Princeton, N.J., and has completed additional graduate work at the University of Southern California.

His credits include some 50 concerts with New York, Boston, Philadelphia, and Athens (Greece) orchestras; voice studies with J.F. Williamson, William Venard and Mme. Koldovosky; and conducting and musicology studies with Nicholas Harsanyi, Julius Herford, Charles Hirt and Robert Shaw.

Juniata College choirs have been touring since 1920, when separate glee clubs for men and women completed their first tours. The combined choir has toured every year since 1932, with the exception of three years during World War II.

The Juniata Concert Choir — which has toured as far as Maine, Florida, and Illinois — has appeared on radio, television, in the Pennsylvania House of Representatives and in Harrisburg's William Penn Museum. In addition, it has staged many costumed productions of operas, operettas and Broadway musicals. In May, the choir will participate in the Juniata Department of Music production of Gilbert and Sullivan's "Patience."

The Juniata College Concert Choir, which will perform locally as part of its 1984 tour, is drawn from the college's Choral Union shown here performing at Christmas. Juniata College choirs have been touring annually since 1932 and perform a variety of sacred and secular music.

Seniors Provide Plants

by Bettina Tweardy

The Senior Class of 1984 has finalized plans to landscape the site of the old gym as their parting gift to Juniata College.

The idea was suggested at a class meeting earlier this year. "We wanted to give something to the school that we really thought was needed," said Mark Shaw, senior class president who worked on the specific plans for the gift with James A. Weikert, a consultant for the Huntingdon Area Lawn Care Service.

According to the plan, the newly-constructed circular announcement center between Lesher and Good Hall will be encircled with benches and shrubs. Shrubbery will include three Burning Bushes, two Flowering Holly Bushes, three Spreading Yews and a Red Rhododendron.

A Colorado Blue Spruce and a Japanese Weeping Cherry Tree that blossoms in the spring will be planted in the lawn between the announcement center and Lesher. The two walkways radiating from the center toward 18th Street will be lined with seven Crimson King Maples.

The trees and bushes, which cost $900, are expected to be planted in the spring. Most of the money for the landscaping gift was raised this year and, according to Shaw, the senior class will be holding more fundraisers to finance senior week.

Students Direct One-Act Plays

by Tom Cancelmo

The college community was treated to three student-directed one-act plays this past weekend in Oller Hall. Each of these plays was performed in front of crowds exceeding one hundred people.

In "The Open Window", which was directed by Wendy Whitehaus, Chris "Corky" Collins humored the crowd with his British character, Framton Nuttel. Nuttel goes to the English countryside to rest after suffering a nervous breakdown due to academics, but suffers another one due to the crazy antics of the Sappleton family. Family members included the mother, Sharon Dotts; Vera, Jocelyn Fowler; and the maid played by Jane Stein. Also included in the play were Gary B. Cole as Mr. Sappleton and Ron "Sparkey" Markey as his son.

Set in a small London flat, "The Private Ear" delighted the crowd with its humorous and arrogant character Ted, played by freshman John Ploumis. This play is the story of a lonely office worker played by Stephen B.Q. Meyer who deals with a girl for the first time, fights with a good friend, and weighs his own concepts of life all in one night. The three combined to make a very entertaining play and my personal favorite.

The third play, "Motherlove", directed by Kari Dubbel, is set at a seaside resort in Sweden. An excellent performance was turned in by Gabriele Vogelsang who played the dominant mother who would not let her daughter be seen in public without her. The daughter was played by Alyson Pfister. The daughter's friend, played by Cheryl Kimbrough, had different ideas and confronted her mother with the problem. This conflict throughout the play made it very interesting and entertaining.

Doris Goehring, Professor of Speech and Theater, commented that the students did a great job and she was very happy with the performance.

Spirit Week Scores

by Kathy Manzella

Competition was tight in the Spirit Week Events sponsored by the Residential Life Committee. Cloister with 27 held a one point lead over Tussey-Terrace at the time of this writing. All events for the competition were scored except the Penny Jar collection. Lesher was in third place with 26 points.

In the Co-Rec Volleyball Tournament, the Off-Campus team defeated South and then Tussey-Terrace to capture the title. Tussey-Terrace earned second place honors after defeating the team from Cloister. In Women's Soccer action, East houses took first place. South finished second followed by Lesher third. The men's

Stud. Govt. — fails to get the vote

The United States Constitution provides Americans with a unique and often envied privilege — the chance to elect all government officials into office. While nearly all students at Juniata are of age to vote, the Juniatian wonders how many actually participate in the voting process. Better yet, how many are even registered to vote?

Chances are the registered and participating voters are in the minority. National figures indicate that the percentage of people in the college student age bracket who voted in the 1980 general election was only 38%.

Imagine only 38% of America's future businessmen, politicians, and social leaders cared enough to turn out at the polls. That's frightening.

One may think that voter registration was a difficult process, but it's fairly easy. One merely obtains a registration form and mails it to his home district for processing. In Pennsylvania, a person must register with a particular political party in order to vote in the primary election.

If registering to vote and voting are so easy, why are they so rare? One reason might be that students can't vote in person at their home district polls if they are here at college. Therefore, in order to vote a student must obtain an absentee bailot. This process takes at least a month and requires that the student write away for the ballot. They then must have it mailed back to the home district before Election Day. For many people, voting in absentia is not worth the hassle.

The Juniatian does not hold this attitude. It would please us to see voter registration and voting in absentia campaigned heavily by an organization such as Student Government, which after all, is an elected body of officials. Currently, Student Government is a member of a National Student Registration Poll Drive and for the past two years has made an attempt to increase voter registration. Admittedly, Student Government was not too active in the project and the results in both cases were poor.

The Juniatian finds fault with Student Government for not pursuing this interest more fervently. It is particularly that governing body's duty to publicize and provide information on an issue that is in fact crucial to that organization's success. For Juniata students there is still enough time for Student Government to make the process at least more accessible than it currently is.

I was sick that bright sunny day in February. Napping for as long as I could, I walked to Ellis for the very last registration I would have to endure. Being a senior humanities major, I wasn't worried about getting shut out of any class that I might be interested in. I figured I might as well arrive fashionably late. But when I got to Ellis, there was no line! At first I was impressed — this was truly admirable senior apathy! But then it was pointed out to me that registration, as it said in the directions - that - no - one - ever - reads-that-come-in-the-mail, was in the multi-purpose room over at Fred's Gym. What a thing to do to a senior, who by definition is now a creature of habit.

When I got to the gym I realized that the location was not the only thing that had changed. Registration had, literally, turned into a suppressive police state. Hadn't I seen it coming with the drop/add fees? I couldn't believe it, but indeed, this is what I saw with my own eyes:

Seniors, juniors, sophomores, all packed together in a dark, narrow corridor, seemingly voluntarily. Could it be an act of their own will . . .? I tried to turn back, but it was too late. Too many people coming from behind, and as painful as it was, I knew I, too, had to register. But why? Why did I feel that way? I couldn't will myself to leave. Some other force was taking over . . . and suddenly I knew. Big Bureaucracy was watching me.

There were juniors ahead of me. Die hards. They knew we seniors had to go first. I suspected they were making a grave error this time. I discovered why, once the line started moving, beginning the registration process for seniors.

Juniata had hired and trained militia for the occasion of registration. The big men in their

Editor's Note: David Moore is a junior at Juniata College who is currently studying at Hull College of Higher Education in Hull, England.

Dear Friends,

Yes, I am attempting to inform you all of my travels during Christmas break — it will most likely be a very long-winded letter, completed only after many days of sweat and tears!

While at Hull, the days winding down closer to vacation, I really had no idea of what or where I wanted to go, but things fell into place when I decided to visit London for a couple of days; from there I decided to go direct to Paris. In London, however, I walked around the parts of the city which I missed during my first visit. That London excursion took me to Thursday the 15th, school vacation officially began the 16th. Early Thursday I boarded a train in London's Victoria station to go to Falkstone, very near the White Cliffs of Dover for a very rough ferry crossing of the North Sea to Calais, France! Boy, oh boy, was that sea rough — up and down, up and down — spent all two hours out on the deck looking at the horizon (I was once told that it helped?!), braving the very cold and wet winds — no matter, I survived in good shape.

There I was, standing on French soil while people speaking the native tongue whizzed past me probably speaking to me — I somehow stumbled onto the right train heading for gay Paris. That ride took an hour and a half and

New from Huey Lewis and The News is Sports. This album follows closely to the same style of their former Picture This and debut album Huey Lewis and The News. Picture This left us with such favorites as "Change of Heart" and "Workin For A Livin". Sports is destined to make the same mark on the public with its popular cuts.

The music of Huey Lewis and The News has a style all its own. The heart of the rock is a steady percussion part. This is emphasized by saxophone, bass, guitar, harmonica and keyboard parts all adding, sometimes sporadically, smaller pieces to the final copy. The beat is 'bouncy' and makes great party music for listening or dancing. The lyrics on Sports are not difficult to follow and have rather long chorus lines which make it possible to remember the songs easily and sing along with them.

Huey Lewis and The News has an almost traditional jazz or rock blues sound to much of its music. This is brought out by the extensive use of the saxophone and harmonica. This, however, does not make the songs less appealing, as it gives the listeners the effect of real feeling in the use of acoustic instruments.

Another feature of Huey Lewis and The News is their heavy reliance on vocals. Many songs include harmony parts with all the group members combining to add a special flair to their music.

The original and current group members are: Huey Lewis (vocals and harmonica), Mario Cipollina (bass), Johnny Colla (vocals, saxophone, guitar), Bill Gibson (drums, vocals, percussion), Chris Hayes (lead guitar, vocals), and Sean Hopper (keyboards, vocals).

My 2 favorite songs on the album are "Heart and Soul" and "I Want a New Drug". "I Want a New Drug" incorporates a jumpy guitar line with brazen saxophone playing and a good drum beat. This all blends to create a great dance song. In fact, the overdose of saxophone by Johnny Colla gives the album the rudimentary rock and roll sound.

Sports and Huey Lewis and The News in general have a great sound. They combine the rock of today and yesterday with danceable rhythms to produce good all around sounding music. I would recommend this album for anyone who likes light moderate rock and roll of an upbeat style.

It's nice to see a little originality in today's world of computer oriented, synthesizer rock and roll.

Health Services Expand

by Bettina Tweardy

There is a bright new look at Juniata's Health Center, courtesy of Jane Brown, head nurse for the past eight years, and resident nurse Kim Rossi.

The walls of the waiting room have been brought to life with a fresh coat of antique white paint and wood-framed Norman Rockwell doctor's office prints. A wicker basket filled with apples rests on the table alongside a rack filled with many helpful health information pamphlets.

Brown hopes to extend the facelift into the Health Center itself, adding, "I would like to see the Health Center made more attractive for the students' sake."

In addition to Brown and Rossi, the health care staff is comprised of Dr. Philip Shoaf, D.O. and trainer Daniel Helm. Orthopedic referrals are made to the consulting firm of Mihelic, Jones and Berger, while psychiatric referrals have been made in the past to Dr. Frederick Wawrose, M.D.

The Health Center services an average of 15 to 20 students a day with an all-time high of 35. The most common health care needs are treatment of nose, throat and respiratory problems, musculoskeletal injuries, gastrointestinal illnesses and skin abrasions and lacerations.

Many additional services provided by the staff include birth control counseling, free pregnancy tests, V.D. counseling, pelvic examinations, pap smears, and preliminary screening for mononucleosis. All information is kept confidential.

Also provided are administration of prescribed injections, simple drugs and dressings at no charge, diet counseling, weight programs, short-term care for serious illnesses and injuries, referrals and help with all other health care needs.

"We're about as sophisticated as we can get for a primary health care center without increasing our staff," said Brown. She added that the only specific change she would like to see at the center is an increase in doctor's hours. At this time, Dr. Shoaf's hours are limited to three per week.

Regarding campus rumors concerning a proposed charge for medication and health services, Brown said, "There has been some discussion, but that will be an administrative decision," adding that she hopes that several options will be explored. One alternative to a rumored charge for individual visits, which might discourage students from seeking health care, would be a flat health care fee for all students.

In addition to her work at the Health Center, Brown is always willing to lead informal discussions on topics such as First Aid and women's health care as hall projects. Additionally, she "tries to implement First Aid and CPR

V103 elects new Board

Juniata's radio station, V103-FM, has recently elected a new management board, who will assume their positions starting spring term.

The newly-elected board members and their positions are as follows: Station Manager — Dave Peters; Program Director — Shelly Guest; News Director — Linda Ramsay; Chief Engineer — Greg Molchany; Business Manager — Mark Kirchgasser; and Chief Announcer — Alan Shaeffer. Each was elected to office by fellow staff members at last week's Wednesday night election.

The new board will be helped through a transition period in the beginning of spring term by current board members. They will also be responsible for appointing several positions within their respective departments.

The new management board hopes to continue in the direction of previous management — to keep V103 in the number one spot of listenership on campus. The new board also hopes to continue to be an information source for the Juniata community.

V103 has made some influential changes this year to better serve their listeners. The most striking change was the employment of two new turntables in the broadcast booth. The Engineering Department has also been making necessary improvements around the station, ranging from rewiring to fixing and installing equipment.

Another noticeable change has been in the News Department. News Voice has focused their efforts on campus organizations and has provided excellent coverage of major campus events. V103's programming staff has also recently established an excellent relationship with major record companies, bringing virtually all newly released music into the station.

V103 has been run for the past year under the leadership of John Lynch, Station Manager. Other board members who will be leaving their posts are Tom Welch — News Director and Dan Vukmer — Chief Announcer.

The current board feels they have come a long way in developing a consistent, improved sound for V103. They also feel that V103 is being used effectively as a source of campus information. The new board will work to uphold not only student listenership, but to remain "The Voice of Juniata College."

Operation Extern Underway

by Marie Pluta

Fifteen Juniata students will participate in Operation Extern during the up-coming term break.

Operation Extern is a program sponsored by the Office of Career Planning and Placement and the Alumni Office. This program places juniors and seniors with alumni working in the areas of medicine, business, political science, and computer science. Its purpose is "for students to gain insight to the realities of the professional environment," said William Martin, Director of Career Planning and Placement.

Students are chosen on the basis of academic performance, career interest, and commitment to the program. They are then matched with alumni according to geographic location and career interest. The Alumni Office assumes the responsibility for contacting the alumni.

Once the contacts have been made by the Alumni Office, students are responsible for calling the alumni and setting the dates and times for the visit. The students are required to spend a minimum of two days on the job. They are also responsible for all costs of transportation and meals.

Operation Extern occurs every other year, on the off year of the Career Fair, this year being an exception. Career Fair operates on the same premise of Operation Extern, except that the alumni come to the campus.

Mr. Martin believes this is an opportune way for students to define their career objectives. He warns that while this opportunity does not guarantee a job, it does make the student more marketable.

The students and the alumni involved then complete questionnaires about the visits. This provides the two offices with feedback, so changes can be made if necessary.

World Banker Speaks

The director of the International Relations Department at the World Bank in Washington, D.C. spoke at Juniata College Tuesday, Feb. 14 as part of the college's Baker Lecture Series.

"The Debt Problem and the Future of the Developing Countries" was discussed by Shahid Javed Burki at 8:15 p.m. in the Ellis Hall faculty lounge. The public was invited to attend this free lecture.

A native of Pakistan, Burki did his undergraduate work at Oxford University as a Rhodes Scholar and graduate work at Harvard University as a Mason Fellow. Burki was a member of Harvard's economics faculty and served as senior research fellow at its Center for International Affairs. He also worked with Harvard's Development Advisory Service.

Before going to Harvard, Burki held a number of positions in Pakistan including economic adviser to the Ministry of Commerce.

Burki is the author of two books, "A Study of Chinese Communes" published in 1969 and "Pakistan Under Bhutto, 1971-77" published in 1980.

Juniata College's Baker Lecture Series is sponsored by the Peace and Conflict Studies Committee and the political science department.

CPR Classes Offered

by Karyn Cable

Cardiopulmonary resuscitation classes will be held for East House residents as a part of the RHA's spring programs.

On the suggestion of East House residents, RHA president Jack Makdad set up classes to begin in March. Joe Ruhl will be the instructor for the class, which will run from Sunday, March 11 through Thursday, March 15. There are 25 openings for the class and participants will be tested on their skills on Sunday, March 18.

The RHA also has plans for other spring programs for its residents. On the drawing board are plans for a Beef & Brew picnic and continuation of the Tuesday night movies. Friday night skiing will also continue as long as slope conditions permit.

East House residents interested in participating in the CPR course should contact RHA president Jack Makdad.

brown uniforms were threat enough themselves, but just in case they weren't, they carried guns with bayonets. Some of the juniors turned around and headed toward the end of the line. A sudden mood of hostility overtook the seniors standing in line, who began to yell "non-senior!" (and other nasty names) viciously at the trembling underclassmen, who, not possessing a pink computer card, had been taught a lesson.

Other juniors obstinately stayed at the head of the line, letting seniors pass them, but not messing with the guards. There were a few brave souls who tried to get by, but were stopped by the bayonets, whereupon a wave of "dead junior" jokes passed through the mob.

No windows, no air . . . showing my pink card, double ID, and being frisked before entering the multi-purpose room was almost a relief. Yet somehow the cameras surveying the crowd from every corner of the room seemed predictable.

As I suspected, I had no trouble getting into the classes I'd chosen. But, as had happened every registration since my first, I couldn't remember exactly what I was supposed to write down on my computer cards before turning them in. I made the mistake of letting the Bureaucracy Bouncer hear me. The Bureaucracy Bouncer was a former mud wrestler roaming the multi-purpose room for the single-purpose of roughing up anyone slowing down The Process (like myself). After he knocked me to the floor, I understood that the curriculum

Scholarship Day well attended

One hundred and forty-eight prospective students visited Juniata College Saturday and took tests to compete for the Brumbaugh-Ellis and Alumni Scholarships.

Admissions spokesperson Mollie McKibber said that in addition to those that took the tests here, approximately 60 more took the test at their own high school.

Students who do well on the tests may receive one of 10 Brumbaugh-Ellis scholarships, worth $2,000 annually, or perhaps one of approximately 30 Alumni Scholarships that are worth $500 to $1500 per year. Students who receive these scholarships must maintain a 3.0 grade point average.

The tests, which include questions covering a variety of subject areas, are reviewed by Dean Hartman, faculty members, and the Admissions staff. McKibber said they are looking for students who can think logically and express themselves clearly. The results of the tests will be used along with students' high school records to determine who receives scholarships.

Music Students Perform

Music students at Juniata College will present two public recitals Sunday, Feb. 19 in Oller Hall. The first recital will begin at 2 p.m. followed by a second program at 3:30 p.m.

Piano students will perform compositions by Shostakovich, Chopin, Schumann, Mozart and Bach. The participants have studied under the direction of Mary Ruth Linton, associate professor of music, and Teresa Murray, Patricia Lloyd and Katsuko Ochiai, all instructional assistants in music.

Also participating in the recitals will be Mrs. Linton's harpsichord students and flute students of Diane Gold, instructional assistant in music. Harpsichord selections will be by Bach and Jeremiah Clarke while the flutists perform compositions by Gluck, Hindemith and Faure. Some of the flute selections will be duets or accompanied by the piano.

The two Feb. 19 recitals are open to the public at no charge.

European Satellite Beams J.C. Signal

by Ron Renzini

What do Juniata College and the European Space Agency have in common? Ask any student involved with the college's Amateur Radio Operators club and they will tell you they both have a mutual friend — Oscar-10.

Oscar-10 is the newest and most sophisticated satellite presently in the Earth's orbit. The satellite is complete with an onboard transponder hook-up that allows for two-way communications with Amateur Radio operators (HAMS) throughout the world.

Juniata has the only two-way satellite communications set-up in this part of Central Pennsylvania that allows HAMS to use OSCAR-10 when they want to talk to other HAMS at distances over 100 miles. According to Bill Blazina, instrument technician for the college, "not even Penn State has the set up and capability to use Oscar-10."

Founded in 1981, the college's Amateur Radio Operators club was organized to let students, who had become inactive in HAM operations when they came to college, get back into the hobby. Presently, the club numbers eight members, all of whom have diverse majors and backgrounds. "We just want to have a fun club, a place to come and play with HAM radios," states Blazina.

Faced with the problem of having to find adequate equipment and users for the machines, the Amateur Radio Society did two things. First, they got old scraps of equipment out of the Physics department and built much of their present equipment. Second, Blazina has been offering free lessons to anyone who is interested in getting their novice license from the FCC for HAM operations.

According to Blazina, "you really don't get into amateur radio until you get your novice license. Then once you get on the air and make your initial contact, it is like a catalyst for more and more involvement."

The club has now been trying to gear itself towards the space communications end of HAM radio. Space communications is where all of today's pioneering in technology is being done.

It was this theme of space communications that originally got Juniata involved in the launching of Oscar-10. This satellite, funded by an international non-profit corporation known as the Amateur Radio Satellite Corporation (AMSAC), is one of five satellites now rotating around the earth. The other four satellites are Russian-owned.

Oscar-10 was a joint effort of many countries and individuals worldwide. Germany, Japan and the United States all contributed parts and advice to the final Oscar-10 satellite. This whole building process was coordinated through AMSAC in Washington, D.C., with the actual launching of the satellite being done by the European Space Agency.

So how did Juniata and its students come to use such a state-of-the-art piece of equipment? According to Blazina, "the satellite is just sitting up there (in space) waiting for someone to use it. No special permit is needed for licensed operators who wish to bypass traditional modes of HAM communication and use it."

The process for using the satellite is made easy under the direction of one of the club members. First, the HAM operators must determine if the satellite is above the horizon, the main key for successful two-way communication.

When the satellite is above the horizon, (12 hours a day), then the operator must determine which direction to point the antennas that are located on the top of the college's science center.

This determination is made by consulting a computer program (taken from an AMSAC bulletin board in Corpus Christi, TX) and then tracking down the satellite across the sky. Two antennas are necessary for communication with the satellite, one for the uplink and one for the downlink.

Wayne Bevin, a junior geology major and the president of the club on campus believes there are two main benefits to having a satellite hook-up.

First, satellite communications takes a lot of guessing out of traditional HAM operations. Bevin says, "No longer are you as an operator at the mercy of Mother Nature for the successful transmission of a message."

Second, satellite communications is a chance to foster internationalism. "You get a chance to talk to people from all different parts of the world — it is very ex-

By the time this article appears, we will be nearing the end of the term and heading into the examination period. What better time to read (or write, depending on one's perspective) an article on stress management? Indeed, exams, research papers, and course presentations have a way of contributing to our anxiety. Most situations in which our performance is being evaluated have the potential to cause undue stress. And yet, if handled properly, the stress associated with these academic exercises can be productive and facilitative.

Hans Selye, a pioneer in the study of stress and currently at the International Institute for the Study of Stress at Montreal, differentiates between eustress and distress. In the case of the former, eustress, Selye describes this as positive or good stress. Distress is that which is counterproductive and debilitating. Selye goes on to say that life without stress is death. It may very well be that the quality of life is highest at moderate levels of stress but we must learn to discriminate between acceptable stress levels (eustress) and too much stress (distress).

A helpful way of conceptualizing stress is by use of the A-B-C Theory. Point A is the potential stressor and it can be a person, situation or a place. For our purposes, the potential stressor may well be a paper or an examination in a course. It may also be the professor. Point B is our interpretation or internalization of the potential stressor. For some students, the final exam is an opportunity to do well while others may view the exam as yet another situation in which failure is likely. He/she may be threatened by the exam which leads to the response at Point C. Point C is the reaction to the potential stressor based upon our perception at Point B. In other words, most stress is a function of how we view things. We need to change the counterproductive thought processes at Point B in order to control our response at Point C. Put yet another way, the stressor can be seen as neutral with the important element being how we react to it.

Richard Lazarus, a Cal-Berkeley psychologist, states that stress resides neither in the person nor the situation alone, but depends on how the person appraises particular events.

In the next article (should you survive the potential stressors of final exams and return next term) we will discuss some positive ways to appraise events and examine a number of additional stress reduction techniques. Do well on your finals.

I arrived in Paris around 7 p.m. and immediately looked for a bed for the night. Luckily I ran into 4 other Americans traveling from breaks, and so we hitched together for that night. We ended up spending the night in a cheap hotel, sharing a double bed — but better conditions were to come! The next day, I situated myself in a Youth Hostel in a key location near the huge Louvre — great accommodations at a very reasonable price. By this time, those Americans had gone their own way, and I was once again alone. In the subsequent 6 days — 5 nights, I wandered Paris going to such tourist spots as the Louvre, Eiffel Tower, Notre Dame, the Bastille, etc. But by far the most enjoyable moments were at night, walking along the Seine River with all the various buildings and monuments lit up. Just beautiful! To me, Paris is the most beautiful city I've ever been to — architecture is very distinctive and similar, yet not boring.

After calling Austria to make final arrangements for my stay, I was sorry to be leaving Paris, although I was exhausted and could use the rest. At 11:15 p.m., I boarded the Orient Express train to reach Vienna in 16 hours!

Salzburg Province (called a Lander) is a very Alpine area, and is considered one of the coldest in Austria — we stayed in a town some 60 miles SE to Salzburg — Manterndorf, it was called — real quaint, chateau looking buildings, no ugly city buildings or even houses for that matter. Manterndorf was nestled in a valley, cowering underneath the mighty Austrian Alp Mountains — and I do mean mountains! My view upon waking up every morn was looking out to see a rather large mountain — what a neat view to wake up to.

My experience there was dominated by memories of skiing on a place called Obertavern — WOW! Now that is what I have dreamed of — about 10 mountains all included, all interconnected by

by Paul Bomberger

About 25 sexy girls were swinging their hips round and round in unison, to the lively beat of Michael Jackson. Perspiration dripping from their foreheads, they stared straight ahead, in deep concentration, following every move of their tireless leader.

That leader is Polly Oliver, a blonde, blue-eyed freshman, who overflows with energy. Her body movements blend with the beat of the music, as she leads the girls through a 45-minute aerobic workout.

As one stands off to the side and watches the workout, the urge to experience this aerobic exercise is overwhelming. And the first time you participate, you'll think it was the most strenuous exercise session you've ever struggled through.

It is difficult not to have respect for this young 18-year old girl, who has the charisma to lead a group of girls, many upperclassmen, with great poise and self-confidence.

"My mother deserves most of the credit for my keen interest in exercise and nutrition. She made me more aware of fitness and just how important it is." Polly's mother joined a weight watchers program and learned a great deal about proper nutrition and exercise, which rubbed off on the entire family. She also credits her high school field hockey coach for giving her the push she needed to get in shape.

Polly recalled an experience she had the first day of field hockey practice her freshman year, which inspired her.

"It was about 100 degrees out on the field and I was really dragging because I was so out of shape. The heat combined with the workout made me sick." The coach advised her to eat properly and exercise in the off-season and then the practices would not be as difficult.

That hint from her field hockey coach was the spark that lit the fire. Polly was determined to get in excellent shape so that she could handle the practices. "Each season after my freshman year I improved," Polly said.

The summer before her senior year she enrolled in aerobic classes at the Fitness America Health Spa in Lancaster. "I was overwhelmed and in awe at what those women were doing." When the class was over, Polly walked over to the instructor and told her . . . "by the end of the summer, I'm gonna be able to do the entire workout that you just did."

Polly attended aerobic classes regularly and learned the routine so well, that she began making up her own routines to the beat of her favorite music. However, she had no intentions of leading others in aerobics.

Polly entered Juniata College last fall and played varsity field hockey, her favorite sport. It just so happened that on rainy days the team would do aerobics instead of practicing outside. They were exercising to a cassette tape similar code went beside my name. Luckily, he was needed elsewhere immediately. Some woman had wandered in who still owed the school money. "But it's a Xerox bill!" she screamed, as he pulled her out by her hair. "It was only 20 cents!" I shudder to think what happened next.

I was about to leave when I ran into a friend. "What do you make of all this?" he asked me.

"It's scary," I told him. "And I can't risk talking to you."

"Get in line like you're registering," he persuaded. I must have looked uneasy. He grabbed my hand and pulled me in line. "It's okay," he assured me. "Just try to look natural, like we're staging a coup or something."

I laughed, and falling into the familiar role of registrant, relaxed a little.

"I think it's Big Bureaucracy," I said. "He's watching us."

"Yeah, I feel it too. And people are being sucked into the supportive nationalistic mass."

"Those with no problems, you mean. The only people who get roughed up once they make it this far are the defiers of their standards."

"Your crime?" he asked, noticing my torn shirt.

"I forgot what I was supposed to put on my computer card. And yours?"

"A drop/add." We got to the front of the line and he turned his cards in.

Looking over to the closest corner of the room, we noticed coffee marked "refreshments for faculty and staff." As dissenters, we knew what we had to do.

"Anarchy now!" he whispered.

Determined, we walked over to the table, drew our coffee, and drank. To our last registration. To the defiance of bureaucracy.

The Bureaucracy Bouncer, wrestling with a guy who had been closed out of a course and didn't have a ready alternative, was too busy to notice us. Big Bureaucracy was watching us. But we were seniors. We didn't care.

lifts and "runs" — lots of snow there (8 ft). Words cannot describe the experience, but I'll try: Awesome! If pictures come out, you'll see what I mean. This place is about 20 times bigger than anywhere in Eastern USA — no waiting lines, 0, and as I said, ski conditions were heavenly!

It is Jan. 1 today; 1983 was a great year for me. I was able to fulfill my major goal of traveling and studying abroad, and for that I am very grateful. I'm really having the times of my life here — learning so much that is unattainable in the classroom. And I'm sure 1984 will be as good as 1983.

You know, I almost forgot to tell you about my two day excursions to Vienna from Felixdorf (only 29 miles south). I suppose if the West is considered the capital of Christiandom, it was in the past, then Vienna must be thought of as the capital of the Christian Kingdoms and of Europe. Vienna is the home of such notables as Mozart, Schubert, Goethe, Freud — they walked the same streets as I have walked; influenced by the Christian influence, and sometimes repulsed by its shallowness. The great St. Stephen Cathedral is in the middle of the town towers over the Christian world, tempting all people to defy its strength and majesty. It is truly the most gothic of all cathedrals I have seen personally or in pictures. The inside is so intricate and ornate that one wonders how many man-hours it took to complete such beauties.

As you can tell, I get carried away with the history of cities — I've been in 3 of the major cities in Europe — London, Paris, and Vienna, and I'm not done yet.

I've taken over 200 pics during this trip — hope they come out — if they don't I'll just have to do it all over again!

Best Wishes,
David Moore

to a Richard Simmons workout, but the girls got very bored with it.

"I told Coach Rosalyn Hall that I had some experience with aerobics and I would be glad to make up a routine and lead the workout." From then on, Polly led the field hockey team through their aerobic workouts on rainy days.

When the season came to an end, the girls had a great liking for the aerobic workouts, because it was a way for them to keep from gaining weight and stay in shape.

"One of my teammates suggested to me that I continue the aerobic sessions through winter term. I thought this was a good idea so we decided that Monday and Thursday nights were convenient for us to exercise together."

Word spread around campus that this aerobic workout was fantastic and everyone should go and give it a try. The attendance increased from an average of 10-15 girls, up to 30-35 girls, in only a three-month time span.

Just recently, Polly started leading the women's track team through aerobics on Tuesdays. Now she leads aerobics on Monday, Tuesday and Thursday. Many girls have become regulars and come to all three workouts each week. "The classes keep getting larger; people call and ask me if they can come. The tennis team and lacrosse team have joined in and I welcome anyone else who wants to attend the workouts," Polly commented.

Polly admitted that three sessions a week "is a bit demanding timewise, because I'm also a Brownie leader and I play lacrosse and have my schoolwork."

She says there is sincere interest among a few of the girls who attend her workouts regularly, to learn the routine. Then they too could lead the workout sometimes. "If someone could fill in for me occasionally when I have work to do, that would make it much easier."

Since she has received so much positive feedback about the aerobic sessions, Polly plans to continue leading the workouts until the end of the school year.

What is the force that drives her to continue leading aerobic workouts three times a week? "It makes me feel good to help others stay in excellent shape and it gives me a sense of accomplishment. Fitness and nutrition will always be a part of me."

courses as instructors are available."

Many students seem to view Jane Brown as not only the head nurse, but as their friend too. As one student stated, "She's always so happy and helpful and willing to listen."

Brown herself feels that sometimes students need someone just to listen. "As a mother of four grown children, I feel that I have a lot of insight into the needs and problems of young people and can often speak with the voice of experience," said Brown.

Although Jane Brown can't replace "good old Mom" when you are feeling sick or blue, she often comes close and tries, as she said, "to give the care and show the concern for everyone's children here as I would show for my own children."

Student Funds Dropped

The heads of 14 of Pennsylvania's public colleges and universities have stripped one of the most active and effective state student associations in the country of its money-raising mechanism.

Some critics, moreover, maintain the Pennsylvania Board of Governors was retaliating against the group, which has been very effective in lobbying against tuition hikes and for various student issues.

The move could also set a "dangerous precedent" for all the 70-some state student associations across the country.

The Board of Governors, on the other hand, says it was acting only to comply with a recent court ruling stripping the New Jersey Public Interest Research Group (PIRG) of its student funding.

Whatever its motive, the board has stopped the state's Commonwealth Association of Students (CAS) from collecting a mandatory $2 fee from students.

The New Jersey District Court will soon rule in a similar "negative check-off" case against the PIRG at Rutgers University, she says. She fears the system violates students' rights.

The PIRG case is being pursued by the Mid-Atlantic Legal Foundation, a group of conservative lawyers that is pressing the case as part of a nationwide legal assault on the Ralph Nader-founded PIRGs. The case goes to trial in December.

Applying an as-yet-unmade decision is "a smokescreen to abolish CAS as a student organization," says CAS spokesman John Ross. "We recently stopped (the board) from implementing a $75 mid-year tuition hike. We've fought for additional funding. We've lobbied on financial aid issues, and I think they'd just like to crack down on us."

Crawford says the board still may let CAS collect fees if it finds a way to let students decide if they want to contribute as they register.

CAS's Ross, who stresses that students at all 14 campuses vote every two years whether or not to renew the negative check-off system, says CAS "could survive without the university collecting fees for us. But if that happens, we'll be spending all our time and resources fundraising instead of working on student concerns."

Baseball Outlook

1984 Season Looks Bright

Opening the 1984 campaign with one of the most experienced teams he has had in a number of years, Juniata College baseball coach Bill Berrier is rightfully optimistic about this year's squad.

The Indians open the season on February 25 when they take their annual southern tour of exhibition games. The Tribe will face Pfeiffer College of Misenheimer, N.C., to open the seven game tour. The regular season begins on Saturday, March 17, when the Indians travel to Westminster, Md., to face Western Maryland College.

In his 16th season as the Indian mentor, Berrier sees the 1984 team as a veteran club, despite the fact that there are only three seniors on the roster.

"With fourteen letterwinners returning from last year's 20-7 squad," Berrier said, "we are stronger going into this season than we have been in a number of years. We have people returning to seven of our starting positions and, with the addition of a fine group of freshmen athletes, we have a good, strong pitching staff."

Heading the list of returners are junior center fielder Dave Murphy (Camp Hill), the Tribe's leading hitter to return from last season (.372) and an All-MAC performer, and senior catcher Grady Paul (Hummelstown), who led the 1983 Tribe with eight home runs and 31 RBI's.

Rounding out the infield for the 1984 Indians should be sophomores Jim Laphan (Pennsauken, NJ) at first, who hit .278 last season, .236 hitter Scott Cole (Bloomsburg) at second, and Steve Poska (Carlisle), who will anchor the third base corner after missing much of last season with a knee injury.

The 1984 Indian pitching staff will possess two traits that have been lacking in previous mound crews, experience and depth. "We have six starters returning from last year's pitching staff," Berrier said, "and we have seven promising freshmen who can throw the ball well, so I would have to say that our pitching looks good for this season."

Back is sophomore hurler Rich Howey (Marlton, NJ), an 8-0 performer in 1983 with an ERA of 2.79. Also returning will be seniors John Summers (Akron) with a 1983 ERA of 2.22, and Dave Heydrick (Frederick, Md.). Heydrick, who missed last season while studying abroad, lettered as a sophomore in 1982.

Also returning will be junior southpaw Dave Musser (Lancaster), who posted a 3-1 record last year, and junior righty Dave Lesser (Ambler), who finished 1983 at 2-2. Rounding out the pitching staff will be junior Kevin Smith (Hagerstown, Md.). Smith saw limited action in 1983, but will be called upon to add strength to the pitching staff.

The complete Indian schedule:

Feb. 25-Mar. 3, Southern Tour

Mar. 17, at Western Maryland; 24, Elizabethtown (DH); 26, Dickinson (DH); 28, at Susquehanna (DH); 30, at Penn State (DH).

April 4, at York (DH); 7, Albright (DH);. 10, Lebanon Valley (DH); 12, Messiah (DH); 21, at Washington & Jefferson (DH); 24, at Gettysburg; 26, PSU Capitol Campus; 27, at King's; 28, at Wilkes (DH).

May 1, Bucknell; 2, Point Park (DH); 7, at Lock Haven (DH); 9, at I.U.P.

Rucinski
Top Bounder

Juniata College center Mark Rucinski is currently leading the nation in the NCAA Division III rebounding category.

The 6'7" junior is averaging 13.7 rebounds per game, according to The NCAA News, the official publication of the National Collegiate Athletic Association.

A native of Olean, N.Y. and a 1980 graduate of Archbishop Walsh High School, Rucinski currently leads the Juniata Indians in scoring, as well, averaging 14.2 points per game.

A business/psychology major, Rucinski is the son of Michael and Sophia Rucinski of Oak St., Olean, N.Y.

Two teams are shown here battling it out on Wed., February 8th, the last night of I.M. Co-Rec V-Ball regular season action.

I.M. Basketball Play-offs

by Andy Hiscock

Men's I.M. basketball play-offs have begun. Out of the six games played, two upsets were recorded. Divisions "A" and "C" held their Semi-final play-off games on Sunday, February 12th while division "B" held their 1st round play-off games on Sunday. Division "B" will hold their Semifinal play-off games on Monday, Feb. 13th. All three divisions will hold their FINALS on Wed., February 15th with games scheduled to be played at 8:30 and 9:30 with everyone invited to attend.

In the first game of the Division "A" Semi-finals, "Tarnished Heels", who finished the regular season in 3rd place with a 6-4 record, played "One Leg Up", who finished the season in 1st place with a 7-4 record. "Tarnished Heels" were able to upset the Legs, 49-38, with the good inside shooting by co-captain Chris Coller. In the other Semi-final game, "Just For Fun" (7-3) defeated "We-can't-a-jamma" 61-49. Randy Dieke had a good all-around board game for "Fun" which led to a number of points for their offense.

In the 1st round play-off games played in Division "B", one team seemed to overpower the other, with no surprise victories recorded. "J-Town" who finished the regular season in a fourth place tie with "Greek Rimmers" was able to come away with a fairly comfortable win, 60-47. Mike Azar and Bill Miller made some good passes during the game, which helped them onto the win. In the second game, "Smegs II", who finished in 3rd place, defeated "Seldom Worked", who finished the regular season with a 6th place (6-6) record. Shane McCarthy had a good inside offensive game for the Smegs. "The Hustlers", who finished the regular season in 1st place with a 9-1 record, and "Babylon By Bus", who ended up in 2nd place with a 9-2 record, had 1st round byes.

In Division "C" on February 12th, a big upset was recorded. "Sturgeon Lips", who finished the regular season in 2nd place with a 6-3 record, played "Cripples II" who had a less than spectacular 2-6, 3rd place season. The Cripples cashed in by making the play-offs by route of a tie-breaker system. The first half of the game was a typical example of a defensive struggle with the score, 16-12, favoring The Lips. As the game went on, missed opportunities and steals held the scoring low. With 5 minutes left in the game, The Lips held a fairly sizable lead, 30-23. A series of breaks then led to The Lips' demise. Tom Yokoyama hit a key basket and then stole the next offensive drive by the Lips and fed Scott Hinish for the basket to give the Cripples a quick offensive spurt. With 10 seconds left and the score, 30-29, (Lips), the Cripples got the break that they were looking for when they earned a trip to the charity line. "The Cripples II" came away empty and then were forced to foul The Lips to get a chance to get the ball back. The Cripples luck held out as the Lips missed both shots and Mark Loeper came away with a crucial rebound for the Cripples. Immediately, (2-sec. remained) "The Cripples II" set their offense and set the stage for a fantastic finish to a great game. The inbound pass came to Mark Loeper and he put up a 30-footer that sank at the buzzer. The final score stood at 31-30 with "The Cripples II" winning. They will now face the 1st place "Big Ganglers" who had a first round bye.

I.M. V-Ball Ends

by Kathy Harwick

The last night of Co-Rec Volleyball pool play took place last Wednesday, February 8. In division A, N.D.T.L.O.C. put up a good fight, taking Merlin's Minstrels to three games, only to end up defeated. N.D.T.L.O.C. took the first game, 16-14, but the Minstrels came back in the second game, 15-3. Anything could have happened in the third game. Even though N.D.T.L.O.C. fought hard, keeping the score close the whole game, the Minstrels pulled ahead to take the match in the third game, 12-10. Geriatric Ward was kept busy, playing two matches and winning both, on the final pool play night. The first match was against Great Expectations, which the Ward took 15-7, 15-9. The second match wasn't going to be as easy for the Ward. Sonny Varner and the Blood Clotters were ready to put up a fight, and indeed they did. But the Ward came out on top 15-12, 15-11, to hold their first place spot. Other Division A play on Wednesday, saw the Invaders defeat the Woo 15-4, 15-8.

In Division B play on Wednesday, Miller Time came up against Out to Lunch. The first game stayed close, with Miller Time winning 15-12. But in the second game, Out to Lunch shut-out Miller Time 15-0. However, Miller Time wasn't ready to give up. They came back in the third game to win the match 11-1. The Quantum Leaps also put up a fight, taking Julie Buckley's team to three games, but the Leapers fell behind (15-13, 4-15, 12-10). And for the final game of the night, the Bumpin' Humpers II swept past Serving No Purpose (15-4, 15-8).

Co-Rec play offs began Sunday, February 12. For Division A, in the first round of play, Phase 9 took on 407 & Buddies. Phase 9 played tough, making a comeback in the second game, but nothing could stop the Buddies. They were determined to win, defeating Phase 9 (15-4, 12-15, 11-5) to advance to semi-finals. The Invaders also fought hard, taking on the Blood Clotters. But the Clotters were out for blood, clobbering the Invaders 15-13, 15-9.

In Division B, first round of play-offs also gave some teams the "thrill of victory," while leaving others with the "agony of defeat." TCR BITES BACK took the thrill and left Out to Lunch with the agony of defeat (15-7, 17-15). Bumpin' Humpers II also took the thrill as they defeated The Other Team (16-14, 15-10), advancing to semi-finals on Monday night and working towards championships on Wednesday.

Matmen End Season

by Mark Shaw

The Juniata Wrestling team finished its season on Saturday with a 35-18 victory over Elizabethtown and losses to Muhlenberg, 21-12, and to the University of Scranton, 42-7.

Against Elizabethtown, the Indian grapplers were quickly spotted 18 points as Paul Bernhardt (118 lb.), Pat McDonough (126) and captain Rick Noll (134) won for forfeit. Elizabethtown's Andy Pintor then pinned Juniata's Eric Olsen (142) at the 1:31 mark.

Juniata proceeded to sweep the next four matches to give them a commanding 35-6 lead. Dave Sloan (150) decisioned Ernie Gibble 5-1; Craig Stafford (158) decisioned his opponent, Liam McGuigan 5-2. Mark Murdoch (167) won by forfeit and Steve Feltenberger received a superior decision over his opponent 17-4.

Elizabethtown took the last two matches, but it was too late to stage a comeback. Kerry Holsinger (190), pinned J.C.'s Bill Swope in 1:33 and Jim La Porte (HWT) pinned Rick Brown in :54.

Unfortunately for Juniata, Muhlenberg and especially Scranton proved to be tougher opponents. The Juniata-Muhlenberg contest resulted in many close matches; four had two or one point spreads.

Muhlenberg jumped out to a 6-0 lead with victories by Crossman (118) over Bernhardt 5-0 and Davenport (126) over McDonough 11-7. Noll (134) evened the contest with a forfeit win, but Muhlenberg's Stoyer (142) defeated Frank Biddle 5-2.

The contest continued to seesaw for two more matches as Sloan (150) narrowly defeated Trenker 6-5 and Muhlenberg's Strober got by Stafford 5-4.

The Muhlenberg heavyweights then took control as they swept the next three matches. Waller (167) defeated Murdoch 15-8; Porter (177) defeated Feltenberger 5-4; and, in another close match, Wasson (190) defeated Randy Smith 10-8. Juniata's Brown (HWT) finished the contest with a 6-2 victory over O'Brien.

The University of Scranton totally dominated the Juniata grapplers in their 42-7 victory. The Scranton grapplers won the first two matches as Roabe (118) pinned Bernhardt in 3:36 and Speicher (126) won by forfeit. Next, Noll (134) defeated Otto 5-0 for the only Indian victory of the contest.

Scranton's Manini (142) pinned Biddle in 1:03 while Sloan (150) and Battisti drew 7-7. The Scranton team then handily took the next four contests. Ashault (158) won a superior decision over Ed Williad 13-1 and Doetyer defeated Murdoch 10-7. Then, Faulkner pinned Smith in 1:17 and Ludden pinned Swope in 3:15. Finishing up, Brown (HWT) and Williams drew 5-5.

Men Indians Win

by Joe Scialabba

The Juniata men's basketball season heads into its final week with the Tribe needing to win all three remaining games to salvage a ten-win record. The Indians fell to 7-15 for the season by losing two of three contests last week, but the lone win was certainly a thrilling one.

Trailing 60-59 with only six seconds remaining, the Indians used senior Paul Kardish to dribble the length of the Memorial Gym floor and then watched him swish home a running 15-footer at the buzzer to nip Alvernia 61-60. The win was a win, but coach Dan Helm had some wonders.

"We almost gave another one away," sighed Helm. "We really didn't play that well all night long. Dick Moses, however, shot very well and kept us in the game."

Moses canned 10 of 14 from long range and hit his lone free throw for 21 points. Mark Rucinski added 15. Mike Bossler led the losing Crusaders with 24 points.

The Indians had led by a 32-27 count at halftime, but tossed the lead away in the final twenty minutes. Alvernia turnovers let the Tribe stay close, and Kardish's game-winner followed a 20-footer by Jeff Hancock that gave the Crusaders an apparent victory with only six seconds left.

The Thursday night win was preceded by a home loss to York, 52-47. The Indians had led 27-24 at halftime and seemed in control until things slipped away in the final twelve minutes.

York made 12 of 19 free throws to Juniata's 5 of 9, making the difference.

Moses again led the Tribe with 15 markers while Rucinski and Dan Feruck canned 10 apiece. Greg Kelty led York with 15 points.

The week ended with a tough 71-68 loss to Messiah in front of a packed house in Grantham.

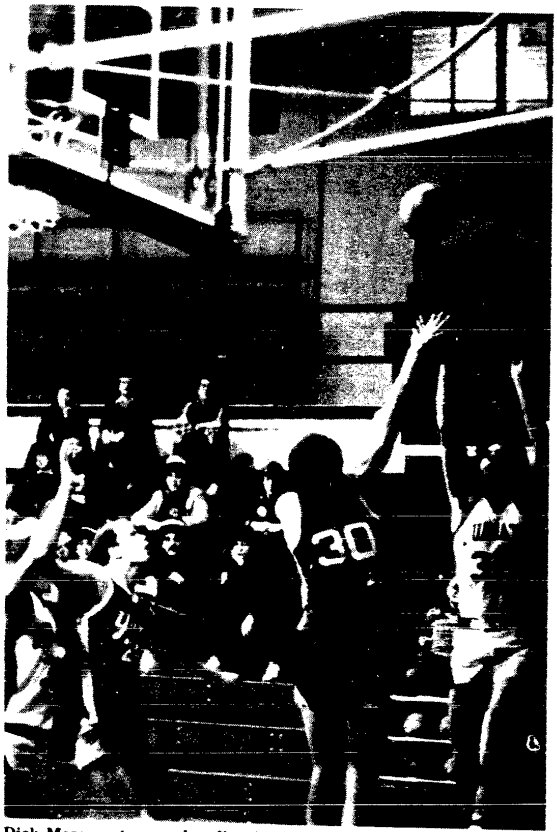
The Falcon fans were stunned as the Indians spurted to an early 21-10 edge, but tore the house down when Messiah quickly recovered and stormed to the locker room on top 38-35.

The Indians lost the game at the foul line, hitting only 9 of 17 second half charity tosses, including missing front-ends of three one-and-one's in the last four minutes. Messiah, on the other hand, hit 7 of 11 in the last half to win. Messiah was 11 of 16 at the line; Juniata 14 of 23.

Feruck had 23 JC points, while Jeff Ostrowski and Rucinski had 12 apiece. Dick Moses added 10. Mike Morris scored 24 points to lead the victors.

Coach Helm was pleased with the effort despite the loss. "We played hard," said Helm, "it was an exciting game." "We lost because we didn't make our foul shots, but they played a very good game. They played like the 15-4 team that they are.

"We have three tough games left, but we are playing well enough to win them all and get a ten-win season. This team has the people and pride to do it."



Dick Moses puts up a baseline jumper during a losing effort against York 52-47. Moses led Tribe with 15 points.

Nation's leading rebounder, Mark Rucinski, skies for an inside jumper during a game against York. Rucinski had 10 points for the game.

Ladies Lose Two

by App

The Lady Indians dropped two close games last week as their record slipped to 6-11 on the season. Last Tuesday, the women lost a one point game at home to York, 54-53, and on Saturday they dropped a 74-66 decision at Messiah.

The York game was tight throughout with each team briefly enjoying leads near double digits. Juniata jumped out to an early 13-6 lead thanks to some hot shooting by Patty Ryan. York quickly closed the gap as they knotted the score at 14 with 11 minutes left in the half. Holly Crable, "Ms. Outside," then took control of the game for the Indians as she tallied 10 points to stake the team to a 30-20 lead late in the half. However, a couple of steals and subsequent quick baskets allowed York to narrow the gap to 4 points, 32-28, at halftime.

In the second half, no more than 4 points separated the two teams for the first 10 minutes. York finally gained its first lead of the game at 37-36 with 13½ minutes left. Juniata regained the lead, 41-40, on a nice move by Ryan with just under 10 minutes to go. However, York reeled off 7 straight points to take a 6 point lead. Ryan led a furious Indians rally with 10 points as the Indians cut the lead to one point, 54-53. York missed a one-on-one foul shot with 14 seconds left and Juniata called time out to set up a last shot. However, the last second shot with 3 seconds left went astray along with the Indians' hope for a victory.

Ryan led the Indian effort with 20 points and Holly Crable added 15. Peggy Evans led the board effort with 7 rebounds and Karen "Cheese" Fonner had a nice game at the point guard position as she handed out 12 assists.

Against Messiah, the Lady Indians played one of their best games of the year, but they fell a bit short to a strong team. The key problem area for the Indians was rebounding. Despite outshooting Messiah from the field in percentage, 44 to 37, the Indians made 3 less baskets. This was because the taller Messiah team outrebounded Juniata 47-34, which allowed them to take 19 more shots from the field than Juniata. The Indians stayed in the game despite this handicap because of their shooting percentage and of their smart play which led to a season low in team turnovers of 11.

The game was close throughout, but Messiah had a 5 point lead, 34-29, at halftime. In the second half, Juniata played well but couldn't make up the difference as they were outscored by 3 points in the second half. Ryan led the Indians' attack again with 22 points and 11 rebounds. Crable added 19 points and 6 rebounds and Evans chipped in with 11 points and 11 rebounds. Fonner had another outstanding game at point guard as she ran the Indian attack with a minimal number of turnovers while dishing off 11 assists.

The Lady Indians close out their season this week with 3 games. Good luck in your season's final week!!

Vincent Price Visits Juniata

by Paul Bomberger

Well-known actor Vincent Price will be in residence at Juniata College March 19-20 giving a public presentation and lecturing in classes.

"The Villains Still Pursue Me" will be the topic of the public lecture to be delivered by Price Monday March 19, at 8: 15 p.m. in Oller Hall.

Price is truly a "Renaissance Man." His career has included the Broadway and London theaters, Hollywood films, American and British radio and television, the world of art, lecturing, literature and haute cuisine.

Price first set foot on the stage in London's Gate Theater. His success in England caught the eye of producer Gilbert Miller, who chose the young actor to open on Broadway opposite Helen Hayes in "Victoria Regina" in 1935. This launched his successful Broadway career, where he was later seen in "The Lady Has a Heart," Orson Welles' Mercury Theater productions of "The Shoemaker's Holiday" and "Heartbreak House," "Outward Bound," the hit mystery "Angel Street," Shakespeare's "Richard III," "Black-Eyed Susan," and "Darling of the Day," the latter a musical done just 10 years ago.

"Service de Luxe" launched Price's Hollywood film career in 1938. Among his more than 100 films are such classics as "The House of The Seven Gables," "Laura," "The Three Muskateers," "The Ten Commandments," "The Raven" and "Theater of Blood."

Another aspect of Price's career is his lecture appearances. For 15 years, he has regularly crisscrossed America to appear in over 350 cities, towns and villages, speaking on such subjects as Modern and Primitive Art, the Letters of Van Gogh, Three American Voices, The Enjoyment of Great Art and The Villains Still Pursue Me.

As an author, Price has written the popular "A Treasury of Great Recipes," "I Like What I Know," "Book of Joe," "The Treasury of American Art," and his most recent book, "Man and the Monster Image."

Price has also been active in the propagation of the arts, serving as past chairman of the Indian Arts and Crafts Board for the U.S. Department of the Interior, a member of the Royal Society of Arts and a member of the Arts Council of UCLA. He has also been a member of the Fine Arts Committee for the White House, on the Board of Trustees of both Scripps College and the Los Angeles County Museum of Art.

A native of St. Louis, he received his B.A. degree from Yale University and then attended the University of London and the Courtauld Institute, majoring in the history of art.

Price is married to actress Coral Browne who appeared with him in the film "Theater of Blood" and on the London stage in Jean Anouilh's "Ardele."

Tickets for the March 19 lecture, priced at $2 for Juniata students and staff, may be purchased in advance at the Ellis Hall Information Desk.

Vincent Price will be lecturing to an art history class Tuesday, March 20 at 11 a.m. in Shoemaker Galleries and to a drama class at 3 p.m. in Oller Hall. Both of these lectures are open to all Juniata students and staff.

Michala Petri Trio to Play in Oller Hall

One of the finest recorder players in the world will perform at Juniata College March 18 at 8:15 p.m. in Oller Hall as part of the college's 1983-84 Artist Series.

Danish artist Michala Petri and the Michala Petri Trio have presented hundreds of concerts in Europe and Israel and been the recipients of numerous awards and honors.

Born in Copenhagen, Miss Petri first performed at the age of six on Danish Radio. She made her debut as a soloist in 1969 at the Tivoli Concert Hall. With her mother Hanne, and brother David, she formed the Michala Petri Trio that same year.

Miss Petri studied at the Staatliche Hochschule fur Musik und Theater, and has won the Danish Critics Prize of Honour, Nordring Radio Prize, Tagea Brandt Bursary given annually to a Danish woman of outstanding achievement in her field, Niels Matthiasen Prize and the Jacob Gade Prize.

In addition to her concert tours, Miss Petri is regularly heard on European radio and has appeared on Eurovision and other television programs. She records on Philips Records.

Miss Petri's concerts have been well received. The London Daily Telegraph said "A 'natural' virtuoso of recorder technique, the young Michala Petri staggered the packed audience with the faultless perfection of her playing," while the London Times said " . . . one could hardly believe at times that only one instrument was playing."

Formerly an internationally-known recitalist, harpsichordist Hanne Petri studied at the Royal Danish Academy of Music, and in Vienna. David Petri has won Denmark's Young Musician of the Year Award and the Royal Danish Orchestra Cello Competition.

The Michala Petri Trio has an extensive repertoire, including works by such 17th and 18th century masters as Telemann, Handel, Vivaldi, Corelli and Sammartini.

The public is cordially invited to attend the March 18 Artist Series concert. Tickets may be purchased at the door.

Caught by the "unknown clause"

In the rough economic times Pennsylvania has experienced in the past years, work has been scarce for many. But the Pennsylvania State Liquor Control Board and Supreme Court have been kept mighty busy these past months. The actions and recent rulings of the Pennsylvania State Supreme Court are hard to miss in the pages of newspapers throughout the state.

Despite the increasing attention that the LCB and Supreme Court are receiving, ignorance on alcohol legislation is still widespread. Much of the commonwealth, Juniata Campus included, is in the dark about state rules on alcohol use.

For example, the Philadelphia Inquirer recently published an article concerning the serving of beer in a local church hall in Southampton, Pa. While the service organization thought they were providing a social service by holding a beef & beer as a local fundraiser, what they were really doing was breaking the law.

The unknown law they were breaking was a 1972 provision that allows only certain groups to obtain a "special occasion permit" to sell or dispense alcoholic beverages.

These "certain groups" are churches, synagogues, volunteer fire companies, hospitals and "bona fide" sports clubs. Unless the events are held in a hall which has a liquor license, no groups can hold affairs where alcoholic beverages are sold.

In past editorials, The Juniatian has touched on the efforts of our administration to make these provisions known to students. Wayne Justham, Director of Programming, requires that sponsors of social gatherings at Juniata be aware of the legislation.

The Juniatian neither condemns nor supports the State's little known provisions. Rather it is our intention and responsibility to make the little known provisions ones that are well known to the entire Juniata community.

The choice to abide or break a law is one's own. However, ignorance of a law does not hold up as a defense in the Pennsylvania state court system.

ALONG MUDDY RUN

by Alyson Pfister

My roommate is the type of person who's always losing her I.D. card. She used to wash it all the time or find it in some very out of the way places. By the time she reached her senior year her second I.D. was in pieces. Unlike my roommate I never had to replace my I.D.

Until one day very late in Winter term when I was getting ready for breakfast and much to my dismay I realized that my I.D. card was no where to be found. (My roommate loved it!)

After waiting a few days (for as long as I could get away with it in the cafeteria anyway) I gave in and got a temporary one assuming, of course, that I would find my real one before the week was out. I was wrong.

My roommate kept reminding me that I lost my I.D. card and she told all of our friends. It was a pretty big joke for a while. But not for me — I was in shock! After awhile I finally resigned myself to get a new one. That afternoon I walked over to Student Services. The four one-dollar bills, 2 quarters, 2 nickels, one dime and five pennies that I had collected were weighing down my favorite jeans.

Along the way I began to reminisce about my old I.D. card. It was so clean and white when I started here, way back at the turn of the decade. The face in the picture didn't look like me anymore anyway, I tried to console myself. That face saw, as a result of various pranks, the inside of a slice of cheesecake and numerous glasses of milk and soda in the cafeteria. It had seen the inside of every pocket I have.

By sophomore year the card was a little gray around the edges. The edges had started to split and the meal stickers were accumulating into a respectable mass in the corner. It looked "lived-in." Junior year the card got dirtier,

Letters to the Editor

"The Juniatian" welcomes letters from our readers. Letters should not exceed 350 words and must be received the Monday before the date of publication. All letters are subject to consideration by "The Juniatian" for space reasons. Anonymous letters will not be considered for publication.

Letter to the Editor,

As I read the last issue of The Juniatian before term break, I thought "Oh no, another attack on Student Government!" If The Juniatian is so concerned about our involvement in voter registration, why didn't they present the problem to us directly? After all, one of their staff members attends all our meetings.

Having been in Student Government for three years, I can honestly say that the Senate has never been this active. The students involved this year are concerned and hardworking. We have provided you with a student used bookstore and an ice machine. We have upheld the tradition of Spirit Week. We made a valiant attempt to give you more meal plan options. Because of our ability to voice the student opinion, the trustees based their decision to raise tuition on cost rather than speculation. We helped solve the lighting problem by having more lights installed on campus. There are a larger number as well as a greater diversity of students serving on faculty and standing committees. The lectures have been better attended. The solicitation policy is now stricter to protect you from outsiders. This list is only the beginning of our projects.

Rather than involving ourselves in national issues such as voter registration, Student Government has chosen to build a strong central base here on campus. Later we can branch out. We are striving to serve the campus and its needs first. I think our accomplishments prove this.

I am not trying to say that Student Government is perfect. We aren't now and never will be. However, we do not point an accusing finger at the problems of other clubs. We try to take positive action in helping these organizations. Actions speak louder than words, don't you think? In my opinion pointing out faults adds to student apathy. Apathy is something we do not need any more of here at Juniata College.

In summary, Student Government appreciates the newspaper's concern about voting. It is truly a worthwhile project; students should be more involved in selecting our nation's leaders. If you feel so strongly about voter registration, we encourage you to attend our meetings, and possibly you could initiate the forming of a committee to work on this problem.

Sincerely,
Linda Fultz

Letter to the Editor,

I am writing in response to the February 16th editorial entitled "Student Government fails to get the vote." In particular, I agree that we have not done much regarding voter registration, and maybe we should have; but the point I would like to bring to your attention is that Student Government cannot do everything!

This year specifically, the 20 senators and officers have worked hard to introduce new projects (ice machine, leadership committee, dorm plaques, satellite, . . .) and become more visible to the campus community. We have provided over 30 clubs and organizations with over $3,000 worth of funding, not to mention the large number of interest-free loans to individual students. In addition, Student Government has started a used-bookstore, which sold over $700 worth of books for students at no profit to us.

In a previous editorial you attacked student apathy, and in this

by Bettina Tweardy

Something is new in the Totem Inn and it's not just the chili dog special! Plans by the "Tote" Renovation Committee went into action over break to begin the transformation of "Tote" from a quiet study hall to a student center buzzing with activity.

Gone now are the burnt gold walls, the dark brown ceiling and the center booth unit. Even that black and gold checkered wall design is no more!

The replacement for all of these? Soft blue walls, a bright white ceiling, pinball machines, video games and even a jukebox have all been combined with some major furniture rearranging to give "Tote" its bright new look. The central booth unit was transferred to the Green Room, which will now be Ellis's quiet study site.

The "Tote" Renovation Committee was chaired this year by Ron Renzini. Detailed blueprints and suggestions were drawn up by senior Mark Murdoch and revised by committee members. Dean of Student Services Arnold J. Tilden, President Frederick M. Binder and Centerboard reviewed and endorsed these plans and funds were allocated for the project.

According to Dean Tilden, further plans for "Tote" include the construction of a corner stage. This could be used for coffeehouses in addition to other programs being developed to draw more students into the facility.

"We're not finished. The decoration part of it is yet to be done," noted Dean Tilden. One possibility is to have a local artist do student caricatures which will grace Totem Inn walls until that person's graduation. Dean Tilden suggested that this would give both "Tote" and the college a collective personality. He added that wall murals are also a possibility.

The idea to change the image of the Totem Inn was suggested at a long range committee meeting two years ago, according to Dean Tilden. Centerboard agreed with the committee that "Tote" was not fulfilling the need for a student "hub," and as a result formed the renovation committee.

Hot Wax

by Tom Hildebrandt

The Scorpions continue their barrage of the album charts with their latest, Love At First Sting, which rests at a comfortable 13 in its third week on the Heavy Metal Market. The song is "Rock You Like A Hurricane", and it's becoming more popular every day with rock followers who appreciate good-clean-hard-rock and roll and lyrics which dare the misconceptions of the moral majority and their sterile world.

The Scorpions have survived for about a decade with groups like Judas Priest and Saxon as one of Europe's Heavy Metal Supergroups. Originally from West Germany, their music has reached many countries, driving home the crushing sound of metal. America has been receptive to the Scorpions' frantic and devastating live show for many years. Love At First Sting includes the old group members: Klaus Meine (vocals), Rudolf Schenker (guitars, vocals) (brother of Michael Schenker of UFO and The Michael Schenker Group), Francis Buchholz (bass), Herman Rarebell (drums), and Matthias Jabs (guitars) in their latest leather laden conglomeration.

Producer, Dieter Dierks, has compiled an album which moves well, emphasizing drums and vocals, and cutting back somewhat from their last album, Blackout, on guitar solos which seem to be less separated from Buchholz's bass lines. The songs are anything but stagnant, and change with pace and expression throughout the album.

Other good cuts, along with "Rock You Like A Hurricane", include "Bad Boys Running Wild", "Coming Home", and "Big City Nights". One unusual song on Love At First Sting is "Crossfire," which seems to be aimed at condemnation of war and the arms race, an issue which is very alive in West Germany.

The album will please the hard heavy metal earthdogs, yet with its good beat and interesting lyrics, Love At First Sting will also attract the more contemporary rock critics. Out of 5, Love At First Sting gets a 4. • • • •

Professor Charges Students

After budget cuts forced him to fire his student grading assistant, a University of Georgia math professor decided to dramatize the campus-wide cutbacks by charging students $10 a piece to have their papers graded.

"Last fall the University of Georgia's state funding was cut by $2.6 million as part of a statewide budget cutback," explains UGA spokesman Larry Dendy.

"In order to meet that $2.6 million funding decrease the university made various cutbacks, including eliminating some teaching assistant and grading assistant positions," Dendy says.

But Math Professor Ted Shirfrin didn't take the loss of his grading assistant as gamely as administrators had hoped.

Shifrin kept his grading assistant, and started charging students a $10 grading fee to pay the assistant's salary.

But university administrators quickly squelched the new practice and made Shifrin refund the voluntary fee to students.

Shifrin prefers not to discuss the incident with reporters, adding that "I was hoping the whole thing had blown over."

Winning Room Announced

by Amy Smith

The $50 prize-winning room in this year's room decorating contest is located in East Houses, 407 Miller. The winner was chosen on Friday, January 27th by President Binder and Marge Love, Alumni Affairs. Two second-place prizes of $25 were awarded to rooms 131 Tussey and 121 Sherwood.

Selection of the rooms to represent each Residence Hall was done on January 16th by the Residence Hall Associates. The decisions were based on three criteria: originality, execution, and impact on the evaluators. A fifteen dollar prize and eligibility to participate in the campus competition were given to each of the seven rooms chosen: 131 Tussey, 103 Lesher, 121 Sherwood, 230 Northwest, 3 South, 12 Cloister, and 407 East.

Language Week Celebrated

by Fran Wippel

This week Juniata College celebrates Foreign Language Week. To lend a hand in this celebration, the college has scheduled a trio of foreign cultural movies. The main attraction is a French-Spanish comedy love story, "That Obscure Object of Desire," to be shown March 20th at 7:30 in Oller Hall. Two other short foreign films will be shown March 21 and 30 in G222 at 9 p.m.

The Baker Refectory is also contributing this week with "International Week." Also scheduled is a display of International flags, and rounding out the events is a display of Romanesque Mural Paintings in Shoemaker Gallery.

While these events are at the students disposal, Foreign Language Week should not be passed off as just another week. "We hope that Foreign Language Week will create an awareness of the importance that foreign language can have in one's career," says Klaus Jaeger, assistant Professor of German. Juniata's foreign language program is not prominent, despite the fact that there are many foreign exchange students on campus, and that Juniata has students studying abroad. Having competencies in a foreign language can be a great advantage, and the best way to gain this advantage is via the Study Abroad Program. Jaeger mentioned that foreign language should be looked upon as a skill that can be marketed because it looks good on a resume, especially in the area of communications and business.

So during the next couple of weeks, let's remember that the events celebrating Foreign Language Week are not just for our leisure time, but for our academic benefit as well.

Shakespeare Celebration

A "Shakespeare Celebration" will take place at Juniata College during March and April with a variety of films, readings and presentations planned.

The celebration began Tuesday, March 7 as the college's English department presented the film "Hamlet" starring Laurence Olivier and Jean Simmons.

On Monday, March 27, "Revels: An Evening of Music, Scenes and Sonnets" from Shakespeare will be performed by the English department faculty and the Moore Street Players early music ensemble. Set for 8 p.m. in Carnegie Hall's Shoemaker Galleries, the evening will include free refreshments.

Theatre Juniata, the college's theatrical company, will present Shakespeare's "The Winter's Tale" on April 5-8. The play is about two kings whose life-long friendship is violently torn apart by fierce jealousy. The tragic events which follow are resolved harmoniously in a rustic shepherd village by a beautiful shepherdess, the hostess of a happy, music and dance-filled summer festival.

The cast of "The Winter's Tale" consists of Juniata students and staff as well as local residents. Luise Van Keuren, assistant professor of English is directing the play which will be staged in Oller Hall at 8 p.m. April 5-7 and at 3 p.m. on April 8.

Another classic Shakespearian film, "Henry V" also starring Laurence Olivier, will be presented Wednesday, April 25 at 8 p.m. in Oller Hall. This film is being sponsored by the college's history department.

Throughout the spring term at Juniata, a Shakespearian exhibit will be on display in the L.A. Beeghly Library. All of the "Shakespeare Celebration" activities are open to the public at no charge.

Student Government Update

by Joy Hadley

Investigation into the feasibility of a television satellite for Juniata College continues to make progress, said Rory McAvoy, Student Government President, at the March 6 Student Government meeting.

McAvoy, along with Arnie Tilden, Vice President and Dean of Student Services, Jack Linetty, Director of Housing, Bill Alexander, Vice President of Business Affairs and Ken Opipery, recently met with a consultant to find out more about the possibilities for a satellite. The Juniata representatives were told that it would be necessary to rewire the entire campus, but maintenance costs would be relatively free.

Dean Tilden stated, "The mechanics can be worked out without too much difficulty." However, he added that the Juniata administration "must seek legal advice and will soon talk to the school's attornies." Though careful not to raise expectations, Tilden noted, "This meeting was very encouraging."

It was also mentioned at the meeting with the satellite consultant that if rewiring would be necessary for the satellite, telephone wires might as well be installed; this would allow students to have telephones in the rooms.

In the Budget and Management Committee Report, Treasurer Greg Kimble reminded the Senators that the linen service contract will soon expire. Kimble urges students to give feedback to their Dorm Senators on whether or not the linen service is worthwhile. Kimble also reported that funding for clubs will be done this spring, instead of in the fall.

The calendar for the 1985-86 academic year has been completed. Classes will begin on Labor Day, since the administration has observed that 80% of the upperclassmen are on campus that day. In turn, students will get out one day earlier in the Spring.

In other Student Government business, it was suggested that the Student Concerns Committee ask the faculty to please be considerate of the high cost of books. Also Long/Miller Senator, Larry Wieger, resigned his position due to lack of interest. The Long/Miller RHA will appoint a new representative.

The next Student Government meeting will be held on Thursday, March 22, at 8:30 in the Mini-lounge of Ellis.

His 309 rebounds set a new Juniata single season record. Next season, Rucinski will most likely become the first 1,000 point-1,000 rebound player in Juniata history.

Social Service Members Honored

by Beth Gallagher

Several members of Juniata's Social Service Club were honored by the Optimists of Huntingdon on Monday, March 5. Vice-President Marie Olver and Treasurer Kay Rockafellow joined the Optimists at Mama G's Pizza Shop for the organization's weekly dinner meeting.

Last week's meeting focused on the efforts of the Social Service Club in the Big Brother/Big Sister program. Ms. Olver was first asked to explain the program, which matches students from the Huntingdon Area Middle School with Juniata College students who are willing to share a little time with the children. Olver is pleased with the current participation of about 25 college students.

The Social Service Club, which has conducted the Big Brother/Big Sister program for years, works hard to raise money for the program. Proceeds from caramel apple sales, parties, and carnation sales help make the program better for the little brothers and sisters.

Olver explained that the Club tries to sponsor group activities for the children at least once a month. This year's activities have included rollerskating, video movies, Christmas parties, and Halloween parties.

Ms. Rockafellow was also asked to comment on the benefits she has received from participating in the program. An open question/answer discussion period followed the girls' comments. The Optimists then presented the girls with plaques displaying the Optimist Creed.

The Optimists of Huntingdon are a service organization whose activities parallel those of the Social Service Club here on campus. The thirty member organization serves the Huntingdon community with the motto "Friends of Youth." Their projects include raising money for Easter Seals by chaperoning dances at the Huntingdon Area High School, and fingerprinting children for state requirements.

Three staff members at Juniata are also members of the Optimists. Professors Crouch and Gooch and Athletic Director Bill Berrier are active participants in the organization.

Says Olver, "Optimists may have a small membership, but it is an active membership." The Social Service Club is very similar to the Optimists in the same way.

Scholarship Established

A scholarship memorializing the late Rev. Charles L. Cox has been established at Juniata College by his wife, Edith L. Cox of the Morrison's Cove Home, Martinsburg.

To be known as the Charles L. Cox Brethren Scholarship, the award will be presented annually at the Spring Convocation to a junior Brethren student who has participated in religious activities on campus and achieved academic excellence. The recipient will be selected by the campus minister, director of church relations and the college administration.

A 1905 Juniata graduate, Rev. Cox was called to the ministry in 1913, and was the first minister at the Claysburg Church of the Brethren, serving from 1926-51. He was active in the Middle District, Church of the Brethren as well as serving as a supply pastor. In addition to his work as a minister, Rev. Cox served as a postmaster, teacher and businessman in the Claysburg area.

"Juniata is very grateful to Mrs. Cox for establishing this scholarship," said President Frederick M. Binder. "It will serve as a fitting memorial to her husband, a dedicated Brethren and Juniatian."

and even the status of a bigger pile of stickers wasn't enough to give the old card any new excitement.

The card saw new meaning as senior year began. It was almost nostalgic. It was also a lot of fun to abuse my roommate about, since her second card was already hiding itself away someplace too. Those days were over now though. That's probably why she had so much fun making fun of me.

Just then the cold reality of Founder's steps hit me like February winds usually do. I entered the building and headed for Student Services right through the registrar's office doors. The brown-framed door was on my left.

The secretary was very nice about it, actually. She may have read the anguish in my face and tried to console me as I pulled the last pennies out of my pockets. My jeans felt much lighter now without all the money in them!

I gave the camera the best smile I could manage and went back home, kicking the snow out of my way as I went.

Later that week my mail box had the blue envelope with my new I.D. card in it. At first it didn't feel right, you know? I came back for Spring term with a brand new I.D. Not even Freshmen have new I.D. cards anymore! I was embarrassed to show it. But I've kind of grown to like it. It's still really stiff and I can't flick the edges on this one yet. But I can put up with anything for eight more weeks.

past editorial you attacked an organization which is trying to attack the very apathy to which you alluded. As I said before, Student Government cannot do everything, but we are trying. It would be nice if for once The Juniatian editorials would focus on some positive aspects of Student Government. Support, not continual criticism, is what is needed. If you feel we are not doing our job, I suggest that you attend one of our meetings and voice your opinions. Meeting times are posted on our bulletin board, announced on the radio station, announced from the information desk in Ellis, and published in your paper! Meetings are clearly open to the whole campus. We encourage constructive criticism, but we also like to hear positive feedback once in awhile. I only hope the NEW Juniatian staff will take these needs into account in the future. In my eyes, Student Government may have failed to get the vote for voter registration, but this year's Senate has got my vote for doing one heck of a good job in all other areas!!!

Art on Display

State College artists Gordon Law and Cysse Shumskas will be exhibiting their work at Juniata College's Shoemaker Galleries March 11 through April 6. A reception opening the exhibit was held at the galleries March 11 from 4 to 6 p.m.

A native of England, Law's exhibit will consist of acrylic paintings on paper. He suggests that they are to be seen as pictures for the mind's eye, meant to be read like a story, but where the fragmentary images and objects combine to replace the words. The artist takes as his starting points, landscape, archaeology, myth, legend and magic and the imagery of the child.

For the last 25 years, Law has taught in art schools and colleges of higher education in southeast England, painting and exhibiting regularly in that part of the country. He has been a visiting lecturer in art and art education at Ohio University and returned to live permanently in the United States in 1982. Since then, he has devoted his time to painting and composing electronically synsethized music.

A native of Shenandoah, Ms. Shumskas received her B.A. degree in art from the Pennsylvania State University in 1971 and is a graphic artist for the department of student programs at Penn State. She has exhibited in New York, Philadelphia and at Penn State, and her work is in collections in Spain, England and Belgium as well as in this country.

Ms. Shumskas works primarily in chalk. "I like chalk better than paint or ink because it can be changed immediately and continuously. With chalk I can change the mark with every stroke if I want. It's almost like sculpting."

Her primary subject matter is fantasy images of figures in landscapes. "I see most of my ideas in the sky — sort of like the old game of finding animals in the clouds. I get the idea from the sky, then I put that on paper and then allow the idea to be developed into a complete picture."

The exhibit in Shoemaker Galleries is open to the public at no charge. Shoemaker Galleries are located in Carnegie Hall, corner of Moore and 17th streets. Exhibition hours are 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. weekdays.

As part of the 1983-84 Artist Series, the Michala Petri Trio comes to Juniata College on March 18 at 8:15 p.m. in Oller Hall.

CASE Praised

Congratulations are in order for the Committee on Alcohol Studies in Education, CASE. The committee received a letter announcing their selection as a "model program" for last year's "3-D Week — Don't Drive Drunk" by a task force representing various professional associations.

The Intrassociation Task Force on Alcohol Issues selected the model program to receive a $300 reward. In addition, the program will be published in a publication to be disseminated to college and university groups nationwide.

During the "3-D Week — Don't Drive Drunk", CASE members held lectures, showed movies and distributed pamphlets campus wide to make our students more aware of the tragic consequences, which result from drunk driving.

CASE Committee Members will apply the $300 to upcoming alcohol education efforts.

Smarts Do Remain

Contrary to recent studies which claim American education is in a state of national decline, the quality of college students in science, engineering, and the humanities is at least as good as it was five years ago, according to two new reports.

Based on two just-released American Council on Education (ACE) surveys of senior academic officials at 486 colleges and universities nationwide, the majority of officials have seen "no significant change" in the quality of their science, engineering, and humanities students.

"Some people will probably feel the reports are contradictory (to other studies) showing that American education is going to hell in a handbasket," notes Charles Anderson, one of the ACE researchers who compiled the reports.

"But our study results indicate that education is not in as much trouble as all the reports have indicated," he says.

Among humanities officials, 62 percent reported that today's students are at least of the same quality as students five years ago, according to the studies.

Of the remainder, 22 percent of the humanities officials reported significant declines in student quality over the last five years, while 16 percent noted significant improvements in quality.

Pay Avoids Teacher Shortage

The much-anticipated teacher shortage of the future may not come to pass, a just-released study suggests.

About one of every ten of the nation's college-bound high school juniors and seniors is considering entering the teaching profession, the survey of some 4300 students found.

Given enrollment projections and estimates of how many teachers will be leaving the field, "we're going to have to have 12-to-14 percent of the high school population enter teaching," says John Mangieri, dean of Texas Christian's education school and a co-author of the study.

Mangieri contends the most important factor in attracting more students to the profession is offering higher starting salaries. He is currently designing a study now to find out just how much schools would have to offer to attract more teachers.

scorer was sophomore Dick Moses of Philadelphia (Lower Moreland). The 6-4 forward average 11.3 points a game.

Sophomore John Hunter of Philadelphia (Holy Ghost) scored 2.6 per game while freshman Chris Frew of Waynesboro hit for 1.7 a contest. Junior Bob Musser (Mifflinburg) scored 1.7 ppg. Sophomores Scott Cole of Bloomsburg (Central Columbia) and Andy Zimmerman of State College made valuable contributions off the bench as did freshmen Allan Reyes of West Newton (Yough) and Dave Mastovich of Johnstown (Conemaugh Valley).

"Although we finished with another losing record, we did improve late in the season and played very well against some good teams like Scranton, Cabrini, and Elizabethtown. We need to recruit some key people for next year," Helm concluded, "especially a guard, and hope to mesh everyone together for a solid team from top to bottom."

Band Students Selected

Two members of the Juniata College band were selected to participate in the 37th annual Pennsylvania Intercollegiate Band Festival held March 8-10 at Westminster College, New Wilmington.

Freshman Danielle M. Rupp of Red Lion and senior Daniel S. Weyandt of Duncansville are among the 136 student musicians from 31 Pennsylvania colleges and universities who will be participating in the festival. A total of 250 students were nominated by college and university band directors for consideration.

A chemistry major, Miss Rupp plays the clarinet and also is drum major for the college's marching band. She is a graduate of Red Lion Senior High School and the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harold E. Rupp of R.D. 2, Red Lion.

Weyandt, a nuclear physics major, plays the string bass. He is a graduate of Hollidaysburg Area High School and the son of Mr. and Mrs. Blair S. Weyandt of 1216 Country View Dr., Duncansville.

The climax of the three-day band festival was a free concert March 10 in Westminster's Orr Auditorium. Guest conductor for the festival was Col. Arnald D. Gabriel, conductor of the United States Air Force Band.

The Pennsylvania Intercollegiate Band Festival was sponsored by the Pennsylvania Collegiate Band Masters Association.

Students Refusing Low Management Job Offers

"Top caliber" college grads apparently have turned down enough low-level and middle-level management job offers recently to cause some employers to worry about a "mid-management vacuum" during the next few years, an employment consulting firm says.

In "an informal phone study of 50 of our corporate clients," Goodrich and Sherwood, Co., a New York consulting firm, found the corporations are having trouble convincing some graduating seniors to accept jobs that may take them to factories in non-metropolitan areas, may leave them with "too many bosses" over them, or that threaten to conflict with "favored lifestyles," explains Jack Gow, Goodrich and Sherwood's public relations consultant.

"Most of these guys," Gow says, "want to start at the top, and then work up a little higher."

Gow says his firm's clients — which he describes as "all Fortune 500 companies" — are finding even higher salaries aren't luring top grads to jobs "at plants in geographic areas where they can't go sailboating or golfing or skiing."

The only companies not "finding it difficult to take these mid-management jobs that are now opening again," Gow points out, are some high-tech industries.

"High tech is the glamour industry now," he explains, "like plastics was 20 years ago."

Despite companies' complaints, other officials who help place students in jobs after graduation haven't noticed students turning down many job offers.

"I'm not aware of that happening," says Linda Pengilly of the College Placement Council, a Bethlehem, Pa., association of campus placement officers from around the country.

"It could be that it's not happening, or it could be that it is happening and people just haven't started grumbling about it," she says.

In its most recent survey, released in October, the CPC "found just the opposite," she points out. "Students were accepting recruiting offers earlier in the year" to allay the insecurities of the recessionary job market.

Pengilly says CPC's hard data about this year's job market won't be available until late March.

Students haven't been turning down jobs in at least one rural area. "Our recruiting year has been magnificent, considering our governor is trying to make our campus into a prison," reports Jim Kellar, placement counselor at the University of South Dakota-Springfield.

To reduce the state's budget deficit and take care of prison overcrowding problems at the same time, Gov. William Janklow has put USD-Springfield's campus up for sale. If not sold by May 1, the state will convert it into a prison, Kellar says.

Japanese Student Likes JC

by Ginny Krall

A "dream" of becoming an English teacher brought Japanese exchange student Sachiko Asakawa to America. The 19-year-old sophomore, who majors in English and Education, has been in America since August.

Asakawa resides in the small fishing town of Muroto City, an island off Japan's mainland. The university she attends is located hours away in Hirakata City, an industrial section of Japan, and it enrolls about 20,000 students.

There is little resemblance between Asakawa's university and Juniata. She has a 19 class course load or four classes six days a week. There are no terms or semesters; classes run a full year.

"My classes are boring. Most people just sign in and then go to sleep," she states. Asakawa attributes this to the fact that classes run 80 minutes and the student/professor ratio is high. "Juniata has an intimate classroom setting. It is easier to learn that way," comments Asakawa.

American college life is not the only things Asakawa finds different. The role of the woman drastically contrasts from Asian culture. "Women are stereotyped in my country. They cook, clean and mother or it reflects their self-worth," said Asakawa.

According to this exchange student American women enjoy many freedoms which are not yet found in Japan. Job opportunities and roles in church and government head this list. Asakawa enjoys the woman's part in our society and finds it an attractive part of our culture.

Along with the liberal female movement, she has other American loves. "Sloppy Joes," says Asakawa. "really are great!" She also likes our Halloween and Christmas seasons. Television was another attraction for Asakawa. "Japanese game shows are styled from American ones. Detective shows are just as common too. And yes we even have soap operas," she states. One thing she did not like about our T.V. watching was the football that consumes most of our winter viewing. "What a strange way to celebrate New Year's Day," commented this small framed Asian woman.

Asakawa certainly likes her new surroundings, but she misses the fresh fish and sticky rice found in her native country. The chopstick, a utensil borrowed from the Chinese, is another lost item here.

Finally, are the American T.V. commercials of the Japanese running around in kimonos carrying cameras realistic? "Sure," laughs Asakawa, "but my kimono is very uncomfortable and Americans take many more pictures than any Japanese person I know!"

Life in the United States really has agreed with this Japanese lady. Asakawa will return to her land this summer and hopes to keep pursuing her studies and ambitions in English. Hopefully she can soon return to once again taste American living.

It's hard to say who is going to be the 1984 NCAA national champion. But, it is easy to say that, whoever it is, will certainly deserve it when it's all finally over.

Spring I.M.'s

by Andy Hiscock

The 1984 Spring Intramural Sports season is quickly approaching. In the past, Juniata I.M. programs have been popular and this spring looks to be no different. This Spring, the Intramural Sports Dept. contains an expanded selection of nine different competitive I.M. sports to compete in. The various sports appeal to both men and women by having all men, all women, and co-recreational teams for a number of the sports. (Refer to the I.M. informational ditto received for specific hours of play in each sport.)

The nine sports offered this Spring are:

1) Softball — Men, Women, Co-Rec

2) Gym Hockey — Men, Women

3) Tennis — Men, Women, Mixed Doubles

4) Shallow Water Polo — Men, Women, Co-Rec * * * * NEW

5) Volleyball — Co-Rec

6) Post Season Basketball — Men, Women

7) Water Volleyball — Men, Women

8) Racquetball — Men's Doubles, Women's Doubles

9) Track — Men, Women, Co-Rec

For all of the Intramural sports offered, entry for new teams will begin on March 12th except I.M. Post Season B-Ball which began on March 12th and I.M. Track whose team entry and season opening dates will be announced. All of the sports except the two previously mentioned will open their season the week of March 18th. The 1984 Spring Intramural Sports Program looks to be action packed, and I urge anyone with a little free time to get involved.

The "Sports Corner"

By Andy Hiscock

Well here it is. My first week as the Sports Editor for The Juniatian. I can't say that I was dreading the moment when I took over the reins; I can't even say that I was nervous. I guess I always had this thought in the back of my mind — "Well if Mark Shaw could do it then anyone can!" Well as I sit here at my Editor's desk with only one page of sports finally scraped together out of an expected two pages I can see that there is more to the job than meets the eye. Seriously, though, Mark has really helped me and I think that he has done a great job for the Juniatian in the last couple of years so let's hear a round of applause for Mark ..... (silence) ..... Yeah!, that's the same way I feel, but I had to give him a plug anyway because he's still my R.D. Well anyway, enough with my problems.

Let me try to outline what Joe Scialabba, the new Assistant Sports Editor, and myself have planned for the Juniatian Sports Dept. over the next few years. As it stands now, Joe will be in charge of Varsity sports coverage and I will take care of the I.M. sports program. Of course without our sportswriters nothing would get done, and I am grateful for all that they do and I am looking forward to working with them. Joe and I will alternately write the "Sports Corner" depending on which of us has the time and ideas. Along with the continued coverage of Intramural and Varsity Sports action, I am hoping to introduce a few new sports columns. I have a writer interested in writing a semi-weekly column on the doings of the Fly Fishing Club, and I am also thinking of starting an "Inside" column, highlighting a reporter's interview with a coach. Look for these and other articles in issues to come. If you are interested in writing, come down to the meeting at 7:30 on Tuesday nights.

NCAA B-Ball Tourney

by Joe Scialabba

It's NCAA basketball tourney time again. The next couple of weeks will be some of the most exciting times of the year for the U.S. sports fan. I'm certainly anxious, as many of you are, for it to begin.

The 1984 edition of "March Madness" features 53 teams. It's hard to believe that when it finally ends in early April there will be but one "national champion."

One thing is for certain, North Carolina State will not repeat their feat of a year ago since the Wolfpack failed to make this year's tourney field. Five ACC teams did receive berths including No. 1 ranked North Carolina, the top seed in the east region. Georgetown is the top seed in the west, DePaul took top spot in the midwest, while Kentucky is No. 1 seed in the mideast region. If all goes as the selection committee picked it, all four of the above top seeds will make up the "Final Four" in Seattle.

It's easy for someone to go with the odds and predict these four teams to find their way to the national semi-finals; so I'll try and take a more challenging approach. Many of you will be looking for a little extra edge when you write your predictions down with some green on top, let me give you my feelings on the real darkhorse in each region. I can't guarantee I'll be right with any of them, but you never know.

East Region: The seeded teams are North Carolina, Arkansas, Indiana, and Syracuse, all very talented teams. My sleeper in this region is the Redmen of St. Johns. Lou Carnasecca is a super coach, and has one of the premier players in the game today in Chris Mullin. If the Redmen get by the Tar Heels this weekend, you'll probably see them in Seattle.

Mideast Region: The seeded teams are Kentucky, Illinois, Tulsa, and Maryland. I'd put my money on a Louisville-Kentucky regional final with the Cards buying the plane tickets for the northwest. Denny Crum has some super talent and certainly has the experience to get to Seattle. If a Cardinal-Wildcat rematch occurs, and the odds are it will, Louisville will taste sweet revenge.

Midwest Region: The seeded teams are DePaul, Houston, Wake Forest and Purdue. Billy Packer says that the real surprise in this NCAA tourney is going to be Fresno State, a team in this region. Well Billy, you got the second part right, it will be a "state" team from this region that opens some eyes, but not Fresno. I go with Keith Lee and his Memphis State Tiger teammates. The Tigers have all five starters back from last year, and although they didn't have a top-ten season, they have the potential to be the real surprise of the tournament.

West Region: The seeded teams are Georgetown, Oklahoma, UTEP, and Duke. This is believed to be the weakest region in this year's tourney, and I have to agree. The fact that the seeded teams, with the exception of the Hoyas, aren't real consistent may be the basis for my reasoning. With this region lies a great chance of a Georgetown cakewalk to the final four, I don't think so. The team to watch in the west is LSU. The Tigers played in a very tough SEC and gave Kentucky and North Carolina all they wanted in regular season match-ups. If I see

B-Ball Wrap-Up

by Joe Scialabba

After winning only one of eight pre-Christmas contests, the Juniata men's basketball team recovered from their disappointing start to finish the season with an 8-17 record, including wins in four of their last eight games. Juniata finished 6-16 a year ago.

For Head Coach Dan Helm, in his third year, 1983-84 will be remembered as two totally different seasons rolled into one. "We were a very inconsistent basketball team in December," recalls Helm, "but we got better after our trip to Belgium at Christmas and seemed to become a little more consistent. We hit another down streak late in January, but then played solid in February, going 4-4 and beating Elizabethtown in their gym. It was another season where we started off slow and by the time we were playing well we ran out of games to play."

The Indians will lose three senior starters to graduation. The three were major contributors all season. Guard Dan Feruck of Pennsville, NJ (Pennsville) a 1,000+ scorer, finished off his final year at Juniata with 362 points and a 14.4 average. Feruck's backcourt mate Paul Kardish of Churchville (Holy Ghost) averaged 6.8 a game and led the team with 111 assists. Forward Jeff Ostrowski of Lancaster (Catholic) scored 6.6 per game and was the Tribe's second leading rebounder with a 4.8 average. Senior reserve John Weiner of Elkland (1.0 ppg.) will also be lost to graduation.

The Indian stat leader for the 83-84 season was junior Mark Rucin-

"BEAR" in Clinic

Juniata College baseball coach Bill Berrier will participate in a clinic for high school coaches to be held at Lewistown High School on March 7 at 6:30 p.m.

The clinic, sponsored by the Sports Medicine Department of Lewistown Hospital is the third in a series of four clinics designed for high school coaches and youth league organizers. The March 7 clinic will deal with baseball, softball and track-and-field.

Coach Berrier, entering his 16th season at the Juniata helm, will speak about and demonstrate in his first session the fundamentals of hitting and bunting, and, in his second session, proper base running.

Also on hand for the March 7 program will be former Cleveland Indian Tom Buskey, who will address the topic of pitching; Bucknell softball coach Terri Grieb, who will discuss practice organization; Lock Haven softball coach Wayne Allison, who will discuss the development of hitters and an offensive game; Susquehanna track-and-field coach Jim Taylor, who will discuss hurdling and sprinting; and Bucknell's cross country and track-and-field coach Art Gulden, who will address the topic of middle and long distance running.

Berrier, a 1960 graduate of Juniata College, was a four year letter winner in baseball and football. Following graduation, he signed with the L.A. Dodgers and played for four years, reaching AAA baseball with a .301 career batting average. He remained with the Dodgers as a minor league manager and took his last team, the Bellingham (Wash.) Dodgers to the 1974 Division Championship.

Berrier is also Juniata's Athletic Director and head wrestling coach.

For more information about the March 7 clinic or the final, March 28 clinic on Sports Medicine, contact John Johnson at Lewistown Hospital's Sports Medicine Department (717-248-5411, ext. 2620).

Attention! Sportswriters Needed! If interested, please contact Andrew Hiscock, P.O. Box 336 or come to the assignment meeting Tuesday night at 7:30.

Seniors Triumph Once Again

by Dee Zimnock

Competition once again proved to be exciting at the 15th Annual All Class Night held Friday night in Oller Auditorium.

At 6:45 there was a line to enter, despite the 7:30 curtain time. All available tickets had been distributed well before Friday. According to Cloister Senator Patty Renwick, the only security problem was students who beat the rush and were inside before the monitors arrived. Both Student Government and Weight Lifting Club members served as monitors.

Before the competition began, Roxann Binner and Lori Mengel enthusiastically stated "SENIORS" when asked who they thought would win this year. Both also said that the senior class put a fine effort into the play and they all had a good time. Junior Kathy Crowley stated that she was "unsure" of how her class would fare in the competition. Freshman Sally DeLuca commented that she was surprised at how enthusiastic All Class Night was, by stating "I feel some really good vibrations here. This is going to be fun!" When asked for her prediction she stated "Of course I'd like to see my class win, but that's not really possible . . . I'd like to see the seniors take it this year."

At the start of the show the order of presentation was announced. It was to be descending class order, seniors up first.

The Senior class really outdid themselves this year. While working on an S.V.S. paper, the new computer system breaks down launching four seniors (Mark Hudson, Karyn Cable, Leeanne Ardan and Hank Coyne) and one freshman 30 years into the future. Richard ("Dick"), the freshman played by Corky Collins, proceeded to learn about Juniata and how much we like it here as seniors. The group visits a new Max's where they learn the Max's shuffle, a dance routine performed by the entire cast. Arriving back at Juniata just in time for graduation, the play ended with their rendition of the J.C. Shuffle, which bid a farewell to Juniata. The audience was also warned not to leave Juniata without their Arnie Express card — good advice from Apartment 402.

The junior class play was titled, "The more things change, the more they stay the same" which was set up like an episode of Twilight Zone. Doug and Wendy Whiner (Chris Coller and Deb Maue) return to their 15th class reunion. They find that sidewalks adorned with student-held birdfeeders have replaced the gym, and Cherry-Vision is the latest addition to the business department. At a dinner held in the now maximum security Baker Refectory (with guard Tom Hildebrandt shouting "make my day" to a suspected flasher played by Lynn Mancino) President Bread Finder (Darin McClean) requests for funds from the returning alumni. When Doug asks, "Where's the beef?", Rich Mrosky and Pam Keeney respond with the current hit "Eat It".

The sophomores were "In search of . . . a nose". Maurice McMoron portrayed by Mike "Langer" Lang was frozen until the year 2184. In effort to prevent the resurrection of Juniata, several doctors try to rebuild Binder beginning with his nose. Maurice in quest of the nose lead a high speed chase scene through the aisles of Oller as the dreaded security patrol of 408 Miller tried to snag him. The musical hit "Beat It" appeared once again, this time as "Unfreeze Him."

Last to go was the freshman class with their play entitled "Major Tom Comes Home". Major Tom Fisher (Scott Stephenson) returned to Juniata in the year 2005. He is stunned by the Juniata he returned to, yet wants to share his experiences with the still sheltered Huntingdon college. The action centered around Cloister

by Paul Bomberger

Applause welcomed Vincent Price as he walked onto the stage in Oller Theater to present a lecture to a capacity crowd last Monday.

Price began by amusing the audience with a couple jokes and stories. He also read a poem about villains, which was written and dedicated to him by a young fan.

After the small talk, Price addressed villainy from his point of view. "It doesn't bother me at all to be typecast as a villain; it's what makes me famous." Price said that he's loved villains since his childhood days, when he went to watch his favorite villains, Nigel Dibrulea and Gustav von Scifertitts, perform in silent movies. He believes that villains serve two main functions in drama. They keep suspense and keep a conflict going between good and evil.

However, Price's stage career began in London playing "good guy" roles. He got very tired of being known as the good guy, so he went to Hollywood seeking a role as a villain.

He landed his first role as a villain in the production of "Angel Street". Since then he has portrayed villains in over 100 plays and/or films. "My major motivation as a villain is revenge."

Price has also played nice villains in Batman as the Egghead and Fagan in Oliver.

He feels the public is attracted to villains rather than heroes, since villains last and heroes fade with age. He added, "Villains are very attractive to women as well."

He made the point that villains are not always men. "Lady Macbeth and Lizzy Borden are two famous lady villainesses."

After Price concluded his presentation, he received a standing ovation from the crowd.

Following the presentation, Price answered questions that the audience posed to him.

When asked what scared him the most, Price responded, "I had a nightmare last night that I was being interviewed by Joan Rivers." He said that darkness scares him also.

Another person wanted to know the most stupid question that he was ever asked. He said, "Someone asked me why I decided to work with Michael Jackson in Thriller. I told them I really loved that experience and subtlety mentioned that Thriller surpassed the Beatles to become the biggest selling album in the history of music."

JC Plans Summer Program

Area residents and groups who have a talent they would like to share are invited to participate in the "Summer of '84" performing arts series sponsored by Juniata College and the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers.

According to Howard H. Crouch, professor of education at Juniata and director of the "Summer of '84," anyone who sings, plays an instrument, dances or posesses some other talent is invited to apply for the summer series held at the Seven Points Ampitheater, Raystown Lake.

"One of the original objectives of the summer series is to offer an opportunity for promising new talent to perform. We are always looking for new faces and performers," Crouch said.

Juniata's summer arts series, which will begin its eighth season this year, offers a variety of programming including the annual Raystown Country Banjo Pickin' Contest.

Anyone interested in participating in the "Summer of '84" should contact Crouch at Juniata College, Huntingdon, 16652

Media Uncovers Too Much . . . Too Soon

Popular contentions hold that continual improvements in technology can do nothing but benefit society. Unfortunately, recent advances in the speed and accuracy of network polling have had adverse effects on some sectors of the public.

These harmful effects are demonstrated when considering mass media coverage of political elections. Congress is now investigating whether or not the outcome of an election is in fact altered by the reporting of projected results before the polls close. The argument rests on the belief that voters are discouraged from participating in an election after watching continually updated televised projections on election days.

The congressional investigation was called for after a controversy in last month's Iowa caucus. Apparently, NBC used exit-polling to predict caucus results as early as 8:15 p.m. — before many working class Americans had the opportunity to vote.

Congress also pointed the finger at the networks for prematurely reporting Reagan's landslide victory over Carter in 1980. Networks reported the victory at 8:15 eastern standard time, more than two hours before the polls closed on the west coast. Studies of this election indicate that voter turnout was in essence reduced by the televised results.

As a media source, The Juniatian recognizes the importance of informing the public on relevant issues at the proper time. We are therefore inclined to believe that the stiff competition between the networks has prompted them to lose sight of their media responsibilities.

Americans have long protected what is rightfully theirs — freedom of the press. Yet, with this freedom the American public also deserves tasteful reporting at the appropriate time.

Congress indeed has stumbled onto an important issue. Election results are not national emergencies and need not be broadcasted so quickly that they influence the thought processes of the voter.

The role of the media is to report the news, to record history — not make it.

ALONG MUDDY RUN

by Kathleen Achor

I noticed it again. It was Sunday morning and, grocery-laden, I stopped to rest by the Physical Plant. I was standing in a parking space marked RESERVED FOR COLLEGE FLEET. Slightly apprehensive, I kept careful watch to be sure that no one was watching me. I mean, I was guilty. As a Juniata student, the chances were good that I could read (well, at least 50-50), and I was obviously not COLLEGE FLEET.

Now, I have often pondered the significance of the COLLEGE FLEET. What is it, really? I mean, I understand the places marked PRESIDENT and SECURITY (although if anyone had ever told me that security was something to be found in a parking space, I would have had trouble believing them). And I know that what gets parked in the places for COLLEGE FLEET are the school's Sunderland Chevrolets. I even know that technically, a fleet can be any group of vehicles owned and operated as a unit. But that doesn't excuse the fact that "fleet" has certain connotations that are rather naval, and almost war-like.

Being the naturally curious person I am, one who cannot rest 'til I get to the bottom of things, I decided that instead of spending the afternoon reading politics or writing a newspaper column or any of the things I was supposed to be doing, I would instead try to find out how the COLLEGE FLEET really got its name so I could inform you all of it. I thought this would be really difficult, because my column is due on Monday, and there it was, Sunday, when all the normal channels of information were taking a day of rest. So I went home to eat lunch and ponder over my plan of attack.

I was chewing on a ham and cheese sandwich and beginning to contemplate how good a peppermint pattie would taste with my post-lunch coffee when I was struck with an idea. It was true that Samuel J. Tompkins, originator of the 8:15 tradition, had long since passed on. But I had heard rumor that he had a much younger brother (poor planning, no doubt) who was still alive and well in Huntingdon (not necessarily a contradiction in terms). I went to the phone book and looked him up. Yep, there he was — Marcus T. I called him up and arranged an interview.

I was greeted by a tired old dog, doing his best to jump on me, but not quite mustering the energy. "Down, Bruce!" I heard someone shout hoarsely. And I was greeted by a very old man, Marcus T. Tompkins, donning the reddest suspenders I'd ever seen, and smoking a corn cob pipe.

"Bruce just ain't as calm as he used to be, since Sam passed away." Marcus explained. I could hardly believe that this was the dog of the legendary Sam, still around after all these years. But, judging by his appearance, I figured he could have seen two or three of the last major wars.

But Bruce was not the point, and I had a deadline to meet. I immediately asked Marcus what he knew about the COLLEGE FLEET.

Old Marcus smiled, a glimmer of memory in his eyes. "Ah, yes," he said. "I ain't heard nobody talk about the COLLEGE FLEET for quite some time. Didn't even know nobody cared. But I'll tell ya what I can remember. Mind you, I never saw any of this myself — it was before my time. Even before old Sam's time. But this is what I heard:

"A long time ago this area known as Huntingdon was covered by a lot more water than it is now. The Juniata river was a lot more vast, ya know, and there were a lot less people living around these parts. But there was so much water that the Huntingdon-there-was had to do a lot of its commerce and stuff by way of the river, in boats, tradin' and the like.

"And what eventually happened was an all-out conflict with the people in Harrisburg. I don't know, something about cuttin' in on their economic interests, and things began lookin' kinda dangerous. You know, there's a lot more of them down there, and people here were afraid that they could be overpowered if'n an all-out war were to suddenly occur."

So there was this concerned group of citizens — mostly men, you know how things was back then — they belonged to a special brotherhood called the Ko, and would meet every week in their Ko Lodge. This was located up near where the college is now. But most of what was around it was surrounded by water. So these Kos decided that Huntingdon needed to be protected, and proceeded to build a fleet of warships, which they called the Ko Lodge Fleet. They were docked right about where the Physical Plant at the college is now."

I was beginning to make the connection. "So was there ever a war between Huntingdon and Harrisburg?" I asked. I certainly hadn't ever heard of any.

"Nope, no war," Marcus said. " 'Twasn't soon after that the river dried up to about the size it is now. The warships was too big to travel on the water. They had to scrap 'em." He chuckled. "Got faced, the warmongers."

"And eventually the college received that land, and put up those signs in recognition of the Ko Lodge Fleet," I concluded.

"I reckon that's the way it was," Marcus said. "Although they got real cute about it when they called it COLLEGE FLEET in-

RAs for '84-'85 To Be Chosen

Among all the activities and employment positions that Juniata College has to offer, perhaps the one that requires the most leadership ability is that of Resident Assistant. There is no other position like it on campus, and not every student is capable of fulfilling the required duties.

A Resident Assistant has five main roles: peer counselor, resource, programmer, disciplinarian, and administrator. While academics are considered in the selection process, good communication skills are vital characteristics of those chosen to be RAs.

There are currently 55 students applying for 18 RA positions for next year. All applicants must undergo a selection process, which takes place from March 12th to April 12th. The process begins with the candidates attending group sessions. During these sessions, they are evaluated on their ability to work in and make decisions as a group. Individually, the candidates are judged upon their contributions to the group and their ability to communicate with each other.

Following group sessions, applicants are interviewed individually by one RD and two RAs. Also used in the evaluation are reference forms that are filled out by ten hall members of each candidate's hall. These forms are a good indicator of each candidate's personality and communication skill.

There may be cuts made after this part of the selection process to lower the field of selection and speed up the process.

The remaining candidates undergo one-on-one interviews with either Julie Keehner or Jack Linetty. On April 12th, the Residential Assistant staff for '84 and '85 will be announced.

Good luck to all candidates!

Petri Trio Performs

The magical sounds of the Michala Petri Trio filled Oller Auditorium Sunday night in the fourth of six Juniata College Artist Series performances.

This trio featured the astonishing virtuosity of the young Danish recorder artist, Michala Petri. Petri presented two solo pieces along with the selections played by the whole group.

A theme with variations in C Major for descant recorder by Lorenz, captivated the audience in the first half of the performance. After intermission, Petri played a five study solo repertoire by Bruggen. Her talent and style displayed the musical excellence that has won Petri many outstanding and distinguished awards in her long career.

Petri was joined in several selections by the other two-thirds of

Shakespeare Celebration Continues

Juniata College's "Shakespeare Celebration continues Tuesday, March 27 with "Revels: An Evening of Music, Scenes and Sonnets" set for 8 p.m. in Shoemaker Galleries.

Sponsored by the college's English department, the program will consist of three events. The Moore Street Players early music ensemble will perform music from Shakespearean plays as well as other period selections.

This will be followed by a scene from "Othello," featuring Dr. Mark R. Hochberg and Dr. Richard E. Hunter, both professors of English.

The third portion of the program will be the reading of three groups of Shakespearean sonnets dealing with mutability, the poet and his art, and love. The sonnets will be read by Ralph B. Church, associate professor of English, Dr. Louise Van Keuren, assistant professor of English, and Kenneth M. Kornick, director of college advancement.

The March 27 program is open to the public at no charge. Refreshments will be served. Shoemaker Galleries are located in Carnegie Hall, corner of 17th and Moore streets.

Junior Meetings Scheduled

by Kathy Manzella

Small group meetings began this week for members of the Junior Class in the Career Planning & Placement Center.

The small group meetings are being held to explain the senior Profiles book and to make students aware of the services available to them. William B. Martin, the Director of the Center will lead the meetings. The Placement Center intends to publish the Profiles '85 book this summer so that perspective employers will have an opportunity to review the resumes prior to the beginning of the '84-'85 recruiting season.

Junior Class members are encouraged to register for the meetings if they have not already done so. The amount of participation by the class will determine whether or not the Profiles book will be sent out as scheduled.

Last Call For Senior Pictures

Last October through December many seniors posed for the Davor Photography Company for their formal senior pictures. Not only will those pictures represent such a momentous occasion as graduation from Juniata, but they will also be retained forever in the 1984 Alfarata Yearbook.

All seniors that had their formal senior pictures taken by Davor Photo Inc. will automatically be placed in the yearbook for 1984.

The possibilities, however, are open for those seniors that wish to submit their own formal picture, taken by someone other than the school photographer, or prefer to place an informal senior picture in the yearbook. These pictures must be no larger than 5x7 and can be in color, although the photo will be transferred to black and white for the Alfarata. Deadline for submittal is April 30 to the Alfarata office (downstairs in Ellis, across from the radio station) or Box 918 in care of Dee Zimnock.

For those seniors that were delinquent in any of the above categories and still wish to have their senior picture in the 1984 Yearbook, the Alfarata staff will be having sign-ups for informal pictures to be taken by the end of March and beginning of April — weather permitting.

Dee Zimnock, senior section editor of the Alfarata, also reminds all seniors to make sure that they have completed the senior directory form which was issued at the time of Davor's photography session in October through December. Seniors that have not completed a biography for the Alfarata should head to the information desk in Ellis and complete the form. Any questions or problems about the yearbook for seniors should be directed to Zimnock at the Alfarata office of at 643-9987.

Last week, subscriptions for the Alfarata yearbook ended, and according to Becky Woomer, business manager of the Alfarata, "by the end of the week, sales were as expected." Three-hundred and ten yearbooks were sold directly to the students and 550 books will be ordered.

Anyone that forgot to order a yearbook and still wishes to obtain one will have a second opportunity to subscribe on Wednesday, March 28. This is especially important for seniors because this is your last chance to capture the moments of your senior year. An additional bonus for seniors is that the $13 yearbook price includes the mailing charge for delivery to your home address after graduation.

Wright Speaks On Policy

by Jackie Oldani

"The Policy Making Process in Pennsylvania" will be the lecture given by Dr. Francis M. Wright, tonight at 8:15 in the Faculty Lounge.

Topics to be discussed by Wright, Secretary of Policy and Planning, include how policies are formulated by the State administration and how negotiations on these policies are carried through with the Pennsylvania House and Senate.

This lecture is part of the G. Graybill Diehm Lectureship in Political Science. It was established to honor the late G. Graybill Diehm of Lancaster, who was involved in 35 years of public service with the governmental bodies of Pennsylvania, and brings to Juniata speakers on a variety of local and state political interests.

Freshman Scott Stephenson portrays Major Tom Fisher as he tries to educate the still sheltered Cloister Residents.

Richard "Dick" Freshman is awestruck as he is zapped into the future. Chris "Corky" Collins and the senior class went on to capture the All Class Night Cup for the third straight year.

Doug and Wendy Whiner return for their 15th reunion at Juniata only to be hit with a $25 late registration fee. Fran Frye and Janet McChesney stand by Juniata policy as Chris Coller and Deb Maue continue to moan about the fees.

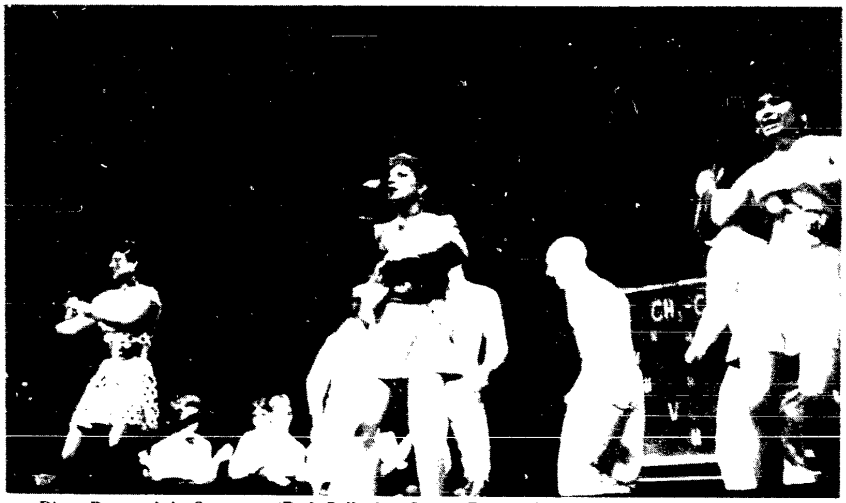
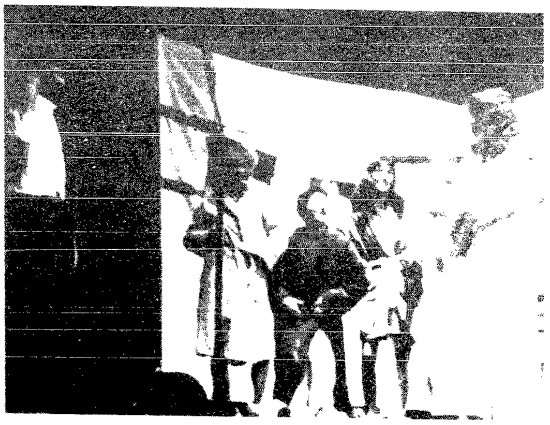
Seniors Walk Away With The Trophy

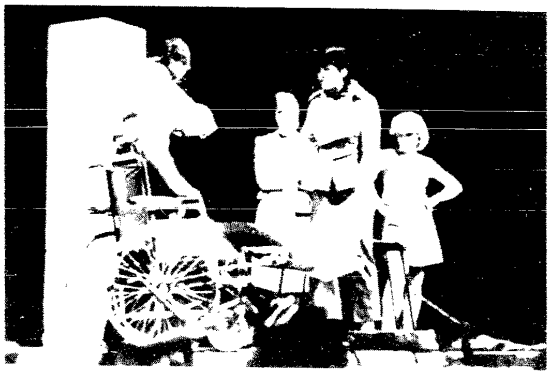
The Freshmen Class performs their rendition of "Tradition" in front of the Cloister Arch. Cloisterites were bound and determined to uphold the traditions of Juniata.



Diana Ross and the Supremes (Beth Gallagher, Laurie Rasco, Marie Olver) sing "Baby Love" as an explanation in Tom Fisher's Biology class, while human sperm dance behind them.



Transformed Lesher Nuns invite the pizza deliverer to "Come On In". According to the Freshman, Lesher girls of the future no longer have their "innocent" reputation.



A lame Kay Rockafellow acts as "Sue, the banker" and collects 10 cents to cash the Whiner's check.

where Father Hildebrandt (Todd Arnette) watched over the Cloister family. Lesher girls certainly changed their image by lowering their standards while the Archwomen were engaging in hopscotch championships. Quite a twist! Nevertheless, a fine effort by our newest class.

In between plays, Master of Ceremonies Ron Renzini entertained the audience with jokes and a tape of "interviews" with various members of the administration. After the final performance, the audience anxiously awaited the results. Most felt confident that the senior class had taken first place.

After what seemed like an eternity to some people, the class officers were asked to come forward. The senior class anxiously waited in the aisles. Third place went to the sophomore class. A surprise second place went to the freshman class. And for the third year in a row the senior class captured first place. Because this is the class of 84's third victory, they will keep the trophy. After the winners were announced the seniors gave one final rendition of the J.C. Shuffle.

Movie Preview

by Andy Hiscock

After much deliberation, the Juniatian staff decided that instead of continuing our column "Movie Review" which gave a recap of the movie shown the past week, we would create a new "Movie Preview" column.

This column will be written by a staff member that has already seen the upcoming movie and will give you the reader the basic storyline and quality of the movie. This will enable you to have some first hand information with which to make that fateful decision on whether or not to attend the Friday night show.

Hopefully, this column will lessen the "potluck" attendance attitude that many people have had in the past or help prevent people from reading about how good the movie was that they had already missed as we have been printing in the past.

This week the movie "Dead Men Don't Wear Plaid" starring Steve Martin will be previewed. The movie is currently scheduled to be shown on Friday, March 23rd at 7:00 p.m. in Oller Hall. This comedy was written and directed by actor/comedian Steve Martin.

The comedy is not as slapstick as Martin's other movies or stage shows, but it does have its moments of "off the wall" action. The movie is all in black and white which is used to depict an old time atmosphere. Steve Martin is a private investigator that gets killed on a case and is given a second chance to come back to earth as a dog to finish the case. This would be funny enough, but Steve meets up with a girl who is also on a second chance deal as a female dog and the movie is all about their adventures to solve the case.

I think that you will get a few laughs out of the show and I urge all to attend.

In the last article before break we examined stress by using the ABC theory or model. By way of quick review, Point A represents the potential Stressor, Point B is one's appraisal of the potential stressor, and Point C is the response or reaction. The model helps us to understand that it is not always the stressor itself that brings about the response but, more importantly, one's view of the stressor. The Roman stoic, Epictetus, put it quite congently when he stated, "Men are disturbed not by things, but by the view which they take of them." Let's discuss some ways to change our view of things by examining a process referred to as mental reprogramming.

Kenneth Matheny, professor of counseling and psychological services at Georgia State University, as well as many other psychologists and experts, suggests that a key to stress management is thought control. Many of us talk ourselves into stressful reactions by use of negative self-statements. Psychologist Albert Ellis, father of rational — emotive therapy (RET) contends that illogical and irrational thoughts are the underlying causes for the majority of our problems. We must learn to change these self-defeating thought processes if we are going to deal effectively with the stressful dimensions of our lives.

In a recent article on stress management, Matheny outlines five patterns of illogical thinking that contribute to stress. As you read them do a self-assessment to see how many of the patterns you have engaged in at one time or or another.

The first pattern is called "blow up." It has to do with magnifying or exaggerating the importance of a particular situation or event. Some of us have a tendency to make gross generalizations based upon minimal information.

Secondly, there is "all-or-nothing thinking." Sometimes known as dichotomous reasoning, it is a tendency to see things as one extreme or the other (good/bad; black/white; right/wrong).

A third pattern is projective thinking. In this pattern of illogical thinking one places the responsibility of his/her behavior on someone else. Unfortunately, the person tends to blame others for his failures, shortcomings, and undesirable traits.

A fourth pattern is that of "perfectionist thinking." In most cases this kind of thinking interferes with rather than enhances productivity. According to Matheny, a perfectionist might say, "Since anything less than perfection is unacceptable, and since I am not likely to perform at that level, there's no use in my trying."

Finally, there is "self-punishing thinking." Rather than striving to correct an error, many people engage in negative internal dialogue which lowers self-confidence and takes away from task performance.

In the next article we will continue our discussion of additional stress reducton techniques.

this European trio. Mother, Hanne Petri on harpsichord, and younger brother, David Petri on cello, aided this young woman in her concert. Both of these performers also have been given various musical awards for their excellence.

Together this talented family treated the Juniata audience with selections from Handel, Corelli, Holmbee and Teleman. David Petri also performed the Suite No. 1 in G Major for violoncello in solo.

The culture that was shared with the people of Juniata in this chamber music presentation was one to be long remembered.

The 1983-84 Juniata College Artist Series will finish its season on April 10, with pianist Robert Swan.

Computer Society Tours Washington

Juniata's Computer Society began a four day weekend tour of Washington D.C. today.

The group will start their activities tomorrow with a visit to the National Bureau of Standards in Gaithersburg, Maryland. The afternoon will be spent in the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration offices.

An evening dinner Friday will include several computer science graduates of Juniata. The people are currently employed in the Washington area and will be giving insights to the students of their field. Saturday and Sunday the group plans to take in the Capitol's sights.

In addition to talking to the recruiters and prospective employers, the trip will provide members with an inside look of how computer systems are used outside the academic world.

NCAA Down To Final 16

And then there were sixteen. The first weekend of the 1984 NCAA Basketball Tournament offered its share of surprises, but the end result was the same as any other year — only sixteen teams survived and moved to their respective regional semi-finals. The term "survived" may be the most appropriate to describe this past weekend of upsets.

Arkansas, Auburn, and Oklahoma, just to mention a few, will be at home this weekend as the tournament winds down. Upsets and last-second heroics were commonplace in first and second round games as several teams surprised a lot of people on their way to the Final 16.

The biggest story of the tourney may be the Virginia Cavaliers. Stuck in the middle of the tough Atlantic Coast Conference, UVA was 17-11 after all was said and done but earned a bid thanks to a very challenging schedule and the fact that eight of eleven losses came against top twenty teams. Terry Holland's squad slipped by Iona in the east second round and earned a semi-final berth with a 53-51 upset win over heavily-favored Arkansas in overtime. Virginia now meets Syracuse, 78-63 winners over Virginia Commonwealth this past weekend.

The other east regional semi-final pits No. 1 seeded North Carolina against scrappy Indiana. The Tar Heels had to battle some on Saturday but pulled away in the end to stop Temple 77-66. Temple was fresh off a two-point win over St. Johns in round one, but the Owls couldn't get UNC. After a slow first half, North Carolina returned to form in the second twenty minutes as Michael Jordan led the powerful Heels to the win.

Indiana had a battle with Richmond, but also pulled away in the end to win 75-67. Bobby Knight has a very young team and will need an outstanding effort to knock-off the Tar Heels, who look ready for the Kingdome. If anyone can beat Dean Smith, however, it's Bobby.

The midwest regional has gone almost to committee layout as DePaul and Wake Forest, and Houston and Memphis State made their way to the semi-final matchups. The only surprise of the crew is Memphis State. The Tigers crushed favored Purdue 66-48 in the second round to earn a shot at Akeem and the Cougars. DePaul looked solid in a 75-61 win over Illinois State on Sunday, so they figure to be in the regional final this weekend. The other semi, in my opinion, could go either way.

Kentucky vs. Louisville highlights the mideast regional semi-finals. The Wildcats pounded BYU 93-68 while the Cardinals struggled by Tulsa 69-67. But, with this type of rivalry, it's anybody's ballgame. Maryland and Illinois make-up the other semi. Lefty's crew ran away from West Virginia 102-77, while the Ilini stopped Villanova. Maryland is extremely hot, coming off its ACC tourney title, and may be hard to stop.

Finally, there is the west regional. Georgetown and UNLV, and Dayton and Washington are the semi-final matchups. The Hoyas put America to sleep in a 37-36 bore over SMU. John Thompson put on the freeze in the second half since he felt his team wasn't hitting the outside shots that the Mustangs were offering. It almost backfired. A Pat Ewing tip-in saved the day, but it may be just a prolonging of the agony since the Runnin' Rebels have all the talent to send the Hoyas home.

Dayton could be a team with similar characteristics to that of Virginia. Not expected to be a big winner, the flyers ousted Oklahoma 89-85 to cruise into the semi's against Washington, a team that they can beat. Washington rode the foul line to a two-point win over Duke on Sunday. The Huskies took advantage of some shabby officiating in the last minute as twice the time-keeper left the clock run after time had been called. On both occasions the clock was reset to two seconds less than it should have been, according to TV replays. In the last eight seconds, the Blue Devils lost four ticks they should have had, leaving them without a shot to tie it. Every second counts, as the last-second shots of this past weekend prove. Anyway, Washington beat Duke, but they won't beat Dayton.

It should be a great extended weekend of basketball as it all gets started tonight. Next week at this time there will be only four remaining. Who will they be? I've given up on predicting.

Varsity Baseball

by Andy Hiscock

Early this week, I was able to sit down with Coach Bill Berrier and discuss the 1984 Varsity Indians Baseball Team with him. Coach Berrier has been at the helm of Indians baseball since the spring of 1969. Last year, the men Indians had a successful outing which consisted of twenty wins and seven losses (20-7), but they failed to come away with a title. Coach Berrier explained to me that the team's main objective this year of winning the Conference title and getting a bid to the National Championships is definitely not out of reach.

Coach Berrier has a number of reasons to be looking forward to another successful season for the "sluggers." The first and foremost advantage that the Indians have would have to be experience. This season the team has returning Lettermen in every position. This should help the team to get a jump on their competition early in the season. Another asset will be a group of enthusiastic and talented freshmen who have come out for the team. The Coach has seen these freshmen work hard in practice and in their preseason games and he feels they will most likely give the upperclassmen on the team a good battle for the starting positions. Coach Berrier was also glad to see the freshmen come out for the team because besides being the players of the future, they help to provide the added depth that any good ball club needs. He was especially happy to find twelve men on his current pitching staff compared to the six or eight that he had last year, which may prove crucial as the long season wears on.

The Indians Baseball Team went on their Southern Tour between February 25th and March 3rd this year. Although the team had what I would consider a discouraging showing, with no wins, Coach Berrier quickly changed my mind. Coach Berrier explained to me that he used the Southern Tour to look at the abilities of the freshmen and used different combinations of people trying to find the 1984 starting line-up. He said that since the games did not count as far as the standings were concerned, he was able to use the games to his advantage on how to better themselves before the regular season begins. Coach Berrier did say that one of the bright spots he saw during the preseason was that the ball was jumping off the bats of Grady Paul, Jeff Meeker, Dave Murphy, and Glenn Hineman.

Coach Berrier said that the team is preparing themselves for their home season opener scheduled for Saturday, March 24th against Elizabethtown at 1:00 p.m., and will be practicing on the game field all this week if the weather permits. (Season opener at Western Maryland on the 17th was rained out.) Coach Berrier is sure that he has a good team and he is confident that with work, they will be able to better their 20-7 record of a year ago. The Indians home opener will begin at 1:00 p.m. on Saturday, March 24th, on Langdon Field and Coach Berrier invites everyone to attend. I wish the guys Good Luck in their 1984 season and I am looking forward to an exciting year.

Indians Honored

Two outstanding Juniata Indian basketball players were honored recently by the Middle Atlantic Conference coaches for their top-notch seasons.

Juniata junior Patti Ryan was chosen as a member of the MAC northern division all star team. Patti, from Little Flower High School in Philadelphia, finished ninth in the MAC in scoring and fifth in rebounding. The Indian MVP the past two seasons, Patti has over 700 career points and is looking to pass the 1,000 career point plateau next winter.

Another junior, 6-7 center Mark Rucinski was placed on the MAC northwest division second team. Mark set a school record this season by pulling-down 309 rebounds, leading the nation in rebounds per game at one point this season. He should finish in the top five nationally for the season. The big man from Olean, NY, "Rufus" should become the first JC player to score 1,000 points and gather 1,000 rebounds in a career with a good season next winter.

Fly Fishing Club

by Scott Stephenson

Starting in 1984, Juniata College has a new Club offering its services to the campus. The new Club will be known as The Fly Fishing Club, and is open to anyone interested in this fast actioned and skilled sport. The Fly Fishing Club was formed early this year by Scott Stephenson, Mike Danko, and Chuck Kreutzberger and is sponsored by Jack Linetty and currently has about fifteen members all tolled.

The new officers of the Club are President Scott Stephenson, and Vice-Presidents Chuck Kreutzberger and Mike Danko. The officers were able to contact local members of Trout Unlimited and have attended a few instructional classes with them where they learned some new techniques on how to tie flies and where the best fishing spots in and around Huntingdon are which they can pass on to the Club's members (Trout Unlimited is a National Conservation Organization which regularly holds seminars on Fly Tying and Fishing across the country).

Besides swapping "Fish" stories, the club is in the process of planning out the years activities. Among the things that the Club will be doing will be (1) Classes on the fine art of Fly-Tying; (2) Analyzing fishing techniques; (3) Discussing where and when to fish; and (4) Organizing and going on field trips to use everything that they have learned (one field trip being organized will be overnight). One-day trips will be to local streams such as The Little Juniata and Spruce Creek and the overnight trip being planned will most likely be to historic Penns Creek on May 12th, 1984. Contact Scott Stephenson (Box 439) if interested.

Indian Softball

by Joe Scialabba

The Juniata College softball team will blend old with new in 1984 as it tries to improve upon last year's 6-3 mark.

The Indians start their spring campaign by hosting a doubleheader with E-town on Saturday, March 24.

Coach Bill Latimore, now in his fourth season, has a solid nucleus to build on, and hopes the addition of eight freshmen will lead the Indians to a Middle Atlantic Conference playoff position. The Tribe is a member of the northwest section of the MAC.

"We are all very anxious to begin," says Latimore. "Many of the people we have back are experienced starters; it is important that they continue to improve and help our younger players adjust. A number of freshmen will step into contributing roles, so the quicker we can blend together as a team, the more successful we can be."

Pitching will be the Indians strong suit this spring with senior ace Michele Wengryn (Alden, John S. Fine) returning to lead the staff. Freshmen Holly Snyder (Hummelstown, Hershey), Laura Bullaro (Old Forge, Old Forge), Missy Betres (Chester Springs, Bishop Shanahan), and Kathy Bednarczyk (Westminster, MD, Delore Catholic) will make up the rest of the mound corps.

The infield will be solid as sophomore Karrie Bercik (North Huntingdon, Norwin) and junior Patti Ryan (Philadelphia, Little Flower) anchor the right side at the first and second base spots respectively. Heather Halm (Ridgewood, NJ, Ridgewood) will be a probable at third, with freshmen Allison Kellock (Ambler, Upper Dublin) and Cindy Corle (Claysburg, Chestnut Ridge) battling for the nod at short.

The catcher's spot is up for grabs with Bednarczyk and sophomore Mary Ellen Sullivan (S. Orange, NJ, Villa Walsh) the two top candidates.

The outfield is pretty well determined with junior standout Debbie Beran (Warrington, Central Bucks East) returning in left field and classmate Renee Krause (Bernville, Tulpehocken) returning in center. Latimore says right field is wide-open, but he does think Vickie Corle (Claysburg, Chestnut Ridge) could be the leading candidate to fill-in the outfield set. He sees competition for all positions as being very impressive and is happy with the desire and determination of the team.

"We've been working hard," boasts Latimore, "but not getting to practice outdoors could be a real problem. We can't afford a slow start since we have a very important conference doubleheader to open the schedule. The attitude is good and the girls are very excited about our chances in the upcoming season. If we get off to a good start we could have a very successful season. But, we must come together as a team to do that."

The complete Indian schedule:

Mar. 24, Elizabethtown (DH).

Apr. 4, at York (DH); 7, at Wilkes (DH); 10, Lebanon Valley (DH); 12, at Franklin & Marshall (DH); 14, Dickinson (DH); 24, Susquehanna (DH); 28, Messiah (DH).

Track Preview '84

If you happen to pass through the gym each day at approximately 4 p.m. you've probably noticed a large group of guys and girls gathered together stretching to the tunes of today's rock. This group is the Juniata track team, under the guidance of their new head coach Al Hartman.

Al Hartman, along with Rosalyn Hall, has initiated a unique program this year that creates an enthusiastic attitude among the participants. The team engages in flexabilities and stretching for about 45 minutes before they begin their workouts. Then in order to provide for individual needs, the team breaks into four distinct groups — sprinters, jumpers, throwers and distance runners.

According to Coach Hartman, "This year's team seems strong and motivated." In the sprints the men will rely on the experience of returning lettermen Tom Trent, Pete Hauer, and Dave Heck. Newcomers include Ken Gfroefer and Doug Spayd of Huntingdon, who should also help in the 400IM hurdles.

The distance events look competitive with five returning lettermen: Mark Royer, John Weiner, Andy Marsh, Dave Long, Paul Bomberger and John Burr. Freshmen Baron Keifer and Jim Gandy, plus Stan Wombler have the potential to score in the distance area. The jumpers strength comes from Tom Cable, the leading point scorer for last year's team. Along with him is a supporting cast consisting of Tom Shaw, Dave Heck, Andy Zimmerman, Steve Snyder, and Tom Lipski.

Perhaps the greatest potential lies in the field events with the return of letterwinners Tom Weiner, Steve Moyer, and school record holder Gino Perri.

The women are also preparing for a good season, after coming off last year's second place MAC finish. They have been conditioning throughout the winter, lifting weights and doing aerobic workouts.

The sprinters are led by returning letterwinners Peggy Evans, the 1983 MAC most valuable participant, Sue Occiano and Michele Bartol, who will both add valuable depth in the sprints.

The distance runners look competitive with returnees Chris Schleiden, Kathy Duffy, Carol Tendal, Carolynne Andre, Kris Smith, and Terri Squirel.

Peggy Evans will again lead in the jumps with promising freshman Joanne Jackson adding some depth and scoring punch.

Being a very young track program here at Juniata, Coach Hartman hopes to gain recognition for our small school by creating a very competitive track program. His program is designed to help each individual reach their fullest potential and to have a good time while doing it.

Hartman concludes, "It is a pleasure to coach a team with such motivation, willingness to work, and desire to improve."

Lacrosse

by Patty Renwick

The 1984 Women's Lacrosse Club opens its season on March 29th with a home game against Susquehanna at 4:00 p.m. The Women's Lacrosse Club has plenty of new talent, as well as many returning players. CoCaptains Denise Cutillo and Amy Reed are looking forward to an exciting and competitive season due to the team's talent and the reorganization of the club.

Brad Small, one of Juniata's football coaches, has taken command of the Men's and Women's Lacrosse Clubs and with his enthusiasm and strict discipline, he has created a feeling of unity and team spirit among the club's members. According to Mike Allison, one of Juniata's Men's Lacrosse players, Coach Small has added "much needed discipline and direction" to the two teams, and Allison expects the men's team to be more competitive than in past years.

The Men's Lacrosse season consists of six games, the first one hosting Lycoming on March 31st. The men's team has a mixture of talent, with the team being led by Hank Coyne at defense, Jamie Van Buren at mid-field, and John Surbeck heading the attack.

Men's lacrosse differs from the women's in that the women's game is one of finesse, while the men play a rugged game, where their "stick is a weapon."

The men practice from 3-4:30 p.m. on Tuesday, Thursday and Friday, and the women on Monday, Wednesday and Friday from 4:30-6:00. Both clubs welcome amateur and experienced players.

The "Sports Corner"

by Joe Scialabbo

Well it's finally Spring '84 and time for our Juniata College sports teams to continue their quests for excellence on the athletic fields. We've struggled this past year with some disappointing seasons, but have always shown we've had class. From our very successful volleyball team to our banged-up football squad we never stopped trying and giving 100 percent.

As the Spring sports begin we look for more of the same effort but maybe a little bit more in terms of success, in terms of wins and losses. The leading candidate for Spring greatness is the baseball team.

This year's baseball squad is one of experience. People with playing time last year return at every position and the only question is can the pitching staff hold up through the grind of a long season. If Coach Berrier has his way it will. A group of talented freshmen now leave the Tribe with 12 capable hurlers and plenty of depth all-around.

From Langdon Field to College Field is a trip that shouldn't change expectations too much as the track teams have solid returning people and some good newcomers to add to the nucleus. A new coach, Alan Hartman, may make a superior year a question mark, but if things come together you never know.

The tennis courts have a contrast of hopes as the women look prime to have an "awesome" season while the men try to rebuild. Coach Latimore will go with an experienced Lady Indian net line-up while Coach Ash has to build off a limited number of returnees with hopes the first-year and inexperienced players can come along quickly.

The softball team is like the baseball team in that experience is there but some help is needed. Coach Bill Latimore has a great batch of freshmen to work with and is looking for great things to happen if everything falls into place.

Lacrosse is the new k on the block in terms of attention as the men's and women's club sports now have a coach of their very own in Brad Small. The teams have full schedules and are looking to be very competitive.

And finally there is the golf team. Nobody really knows much about the golf team except we have one. Well, take it from a linkster, this year Juniata could become a conference power. A huge number of letterwinners return to give the team nothing but optimism.

Shakespeare's "The Winter's Tale" will be presented at Juniata College April 5-8 as the spring production of Theater Juniata, the college's theatrical company. The cast will feature Huntingdon area residents as well as Juniata students and staff.

"The Winter's Tale" is the story of two kings whose life-long friendship is violently torn apart by fierce jealousy. The tragic events which follow are resolved harmoniously in a rustic shephard village by a beautiful shepherdess, the hostess of a happy, music and dance-filled summer festival.

The cast of 24 is led by senior David Merwine of Harrisburg as King Leontes, senior Timothy Dibble of York as King Polixenes, sophomore Bridget Berich of Newport as Queen Hermione and freshman Stephen Meyer of Bethesda, Md. as Prince Florizel. Several local residents also will appear in leading roles. They are Dan Weston as Autolycus, Jeanne Nagurny as Paulina and Joanne Hochberg as Perdita.

Other local residents appearing in the production are Nabil Mark, Robert Hileman, Missy Gallagher, Michelle Isenberg, Gail Alberini and Matthew Faust.

Three members of the Juniata staff will appear in supporting roles. Vaudeville magician and Juniata graduate Chuck Kensinger performed for JC students last Monday night in Tote.

Chuck Kensinger Dazzles Audience

by Ron Renzini

Illusion, magic and comedy were all part of 1972 Juniata graduate Chuck Kensingers' vaudvillian show this past Monday in the newly renovated Totem Inn.

Performing before a sparse, but enthusiastic crowd, Kensinger performed three half-hour programs. Using various sites of the world as themes, and getting the audience involved in the act, Kensinger eased from one act into another without any difficulty.

In the first act, juggling and humor highlighted the performance. The main thrill, however, came when Kensinger performed that ancient Russian tradition of keeping warm during those cold winter months — fire eating. It was a very popular rendition of the old favorite.

In the second act, The Twilight Zone, Kensinger performed illusions with cards and the use of a $10 bill. Asking Barry Miller to partake in the act, Kensinger proceeded to burn Miller's bill with three other blank envelopes. Not to fear though, as the magician 'discovered' the bill rolled inside the cigar that was in Miller's pocket during the entire act.

During the third act, Kensinger performed exceptionally well with the classic favorites of silk scarfs and the Chinese Ring Mystery.

For his finale, he performed Houdini's famous metamorphosis illusion. Before a stunned and absolutely delighted crowd, Kensinger proceeded to change places on top of a sealed crate with his wife. The whole process took a matter of seconds.

Asked how they enjoyed the performance, the responses were all positive. According to Freshman Kim Laubscher, "I thought he was very interesting." Junior Beth Gallagher believed "he was very colorful and I thought he used the stage area very well. He knew how to keep the audience involved in the show at all times."

Kensinger is scheduled to reappear on May 5 in conjunction with the college's annual Springfest. He is tentatively scheduled to appear outside for a 45 minute live stage show.

Nuclear Arms To Be Debated

Westmoreland & Wasserman discuss issues

The nuclear arms issue will be the focus of a debate at Juniata College Wednesday, April 4 between Gen. William C. Westmoreland, former commander of U.S. troops in Vietnam, and Harvey Wasserman, journalist and anti-nuclear activist.

The debate, to be held at 8:15 p.m. in the Brumbaugh Science Center's Alumni Hall, will deal with such issues as deployment of the Pershing II missiles in Europe, the need for the MX missile in the United States and the nuclear freeze issue.

A native of South Carolina, Westmoreland is a graduate of the U.S. Military Academy at West Point and attended the Harvard Business School. He has fought in 17 battle campaigns in three wars, received four Distinguished Service Medals and been decorated by 16 foreign countries.

In addition to his role as commander of U.S. troops in Vietnam, Westmoreland served as Army Chief of Staff for four years, was superintendent at West Point, commanded three major Army posts and taught at the Command General Staff College and the Army War College.

Westmoreland was named "Man of the Year" by Time magazine in 1965, and is the author of "A Soldier Reports," a memoir of 40 years of military service. He sits on the board of directors of numerous corporations and organizations.

Wasserman is one of the leading authorities on nuclear energy and the detrimental effects radiation has on modern civilization. As a journalist, he has written for the New York Times, Los Angeles Times, Boston Globe, Mother Jones and Rolling Stone. He is the author of several books on the nuclear war issue.

In addition to his work as a journalist, Wasserman serves as media co-coordinator of the Clamshell Alliance and the Musicians United for Safe Energy (MUSE) Concerts for a Non-Nuclear Future. He has served as editor of several MUSE publications including the MUSE Record Book distributed with the popular "No Nukes" record album.

Active in the civil rights, anti-war and anti-nuclear movements for many years, Wasserman has been a contributing author to several film documentaries on atomic radiation and nuclear war.

Students were made aware of the upcoming debate by receiving The Hundredth Monkey, by Ken Keyes, in their mailboxes on Saturday, March 24. The Hundredth Monkey is a book of facts presented to support the nuclear freeze movement. It is the hope of the lecture committee that it persuades the students and faculty alike to think about this vital issue.

Seating capacity in Alumni Hall is limited for this event. Student tickets will go on sale for $2.00 on Thursday, March 29. Sales outside the college community at $4.00 each will begin on Monday, April 2. Tickets at the door will be $4.00 each. The debate is sponsored by the Student Government — Center Board Joint Lecture Committee.

After 5 years, TMI issue has not cooled off

Yesterday marked the fifth anniversary of the worst commercial nuclear accident in the history of our nation.

On March 23, 1979 the Unit 2 reactor at Three Mile Island, located on the Susquehanna River just outside of Harrisburg, underwent a series of mechanical, human, and design failures causing the unit to dangerously overheat.

The immediate results were terrifying. Radiation leaked into the air; one-hundred forty thousand people were forced to evacuate the area for ten days. We know now that the unit was within 30-60 minutes of a complete meltdown.

Five years later, the long term results are still not in. The Nuclear Regulatory Commission continues to investigate the accident. Investigators claim that General Public Utilities Corp., the owner of TMI, falsified maintenance tests done on the reactor. Had those test results not been falsified officials claim that the Unit 2 reactor would have been shut down on that day and the accident would have never occurred. Primarily, the investigations deal with the honesty and competence of TMI management, as four of the five uncompleted investigations deal with falsification of records or the withholding of pertinent information.

The importance of these investigations comes into play when considering the issue of whether to start-up the sister reactor, Unit 1, which was temporarily shut down at the time of the Unit 2 accident. GPU is lobbying heavily for the start-up by early summer, claiming that it is only fair to GPU management.

In the mean time, investigations have been conducted on Unit 1's past, and have turned up some more questions about the safety of the reactor mostly questioning the management's integrity.

After adding up all of the facts, we are confronted with a snag. The NRC may in fact vote on the start-up of Unit 1 before all of the investigations are completed. To the Juniatian, a premature decision is as senseless as it is dangerous.

In a business as risky as nuclear power, there is no room for mechanical or human error. The Juniatian stands firmly against the NRC making any start-up decisions before all the facts are in to at least prevent the chance of error on the side of the NRC.

There are many lessons to be learned from the first accident at TMI. It is the Nuclear Regulatory Commission's obligation to pick up on these before allowing a second accident to occur.

ALONG MUDDY RUN

by Alyson Pfister

The physical environment in which a living being exists is very much an explanation of what that being is. For example, certain plants thrive in bright sunlight while others would shrivel up to nothing from that same sunlight. In the same way, our environment depicts things about us. (i.e. — human beings)

To take that idea one step further, the environments of different cultures are indicators of the way a particular society thinks. No two societies are alike. The environment in which an individual lives is different from that of any other individual. Every individual has different styles and hobbies.

Thus, the walls of every college student's room are spattered with personality and Juniata's halls are no exception. As a matter of fact, even the dormitory you live in here has a certain identity. Consider the references to Lesher and Cloister in this year's (and every other year's) All Class Night.

You must have noticed that some rooms have Smurf posters and others have Charles Bronson posters. It's really no surprise.

Some things are of more sentimental value, as they call it, than others. Most people are pretty much aware of their favorite possessions. You know the things. They're the ones you only let your roommate touch once in a while and only in dire emergencies. Your prized possessions, if you will. Have you ever thought about the other side of the coin?

The other morning I woke up to a startling reality. I realized which article it is in my room that I hate the most. It's my alarm clock.

When that high-pitched, mechanical, annoying little beep goes off I want to get it out of my environment as quickly as I possibly can but I'm usually too tired and fuzzy to do it at that hour of the morning. I thought my environment was supposed to be pleasant and serene!

I suppose it goes back to the "wants" and "musts" theory I read about in a textbook somewhere. I "want" my plants but I "must" have an alarm clock. I was going to say that it wasn't fair that I must have something as unpleasant as that in my environment until I realized that everyone else has one too. It must be just another indicator.

"The Juniatian" welcomes letters from our readers. Letters should not exceed 350 words and must be received the Monday before the date of publication. All letters are subject to consideration by "The Juniatian" for space reasons. Anonymous letters will not be considered for publication.

Students Speak

by Kathy Manzella

Question: "Do you think there's a cheating problem here at Juniata?"

Holly Schnyder, Freshman: "I haven't come across it. I've heard rumors but I haven't really seen it."

Wolfgang Geisser, Senior: "There's much less cheating here than in my school in Germany."

Chris Schleiden, Junior: "Yeah, I've heard of many cases of people getting away with it."

Esther Compher, Junior: "I've heard people doing it and heard of other cases and I think something should be done."

Small Businesses Open Up Shop

by Linda W. Ramsey

Commercial business ventures are on the rise at Juniata College. Beyond Sheetz's and the book store this spring will come about 20 entrepreneurs investing their time and money in small business management.

The small business management class, under the supervision of Professor Rick Thompson, has created two prospective businesses to be enjoyed by Juniata's campus. The idea behind the class is to actively engage students in the process of establishing and operating a business. The course has been offered for four years, and in the past Juniata has been offered a laundry service, a thrift shop and last year's precedent-setting "Binder's Grinders."

Working out of South dorm's kitchens and handling phone orders from the Juniatian office in Ellis, the first group of entrepreneurs in small business management has created a fast food outfit called "Wanita's Weinies." The operation is still in the planning stage but hopes to be open for dorm delivery and pick-up of soft pretzels, onion rings, french fries and hot dogs with various toppings by April 2.

The "big plus" for the business will be their hours and the delivery service they offer. Orders will be taken from 9:30 through 12:30, Sunday through Thursday nights. This should appeal to all late night studiers and munchers.

The other new business on Juniata's campus will be a sportswear warehouse called "The Best Little Wearhouse in Juniata." The project offers sportswear at low, outlet prices including T-shirts, gym shorts, hooded sweatshirts, jackets and possibly v-neck shirts. The "wearhouse's" distributor is Champion outlet, which should assure quality merchandise. Most of the apparel will be adorned with other college names instead of the monotonous "Juniata" lettering.

Prices will range from $3 to $7 and the target date for operation is also April 2. The group's main location will be on the first floor of Ellis in the wings by the coat racks. The warehouse will be open from 11-5 daily and each evening from 7-10. The store will be on the road as they travel to various dorms throughout the week.

Both businesses will be in operation for five weeks and are hoping to meet the same success as last year's Binder's Grinders service.

Juniata Battles Hunger

The battle against world hunger will be fought by area residents and Juniata College students Tuesday, April 10 as the college sponsors its annual "Meal for CROP."

As part of the program, Juniata students voluntarily give up their evening meals so that they can be sold to members of the community. Since the students have already paid for the meal, the entire price of the ticket goes to CROP, the Church World Service Organization that funds hunger relief and self-help programs worldwide. Students may sign-up by giving their meal sticker numbers to their R.A.'s.

An all-you-can eat dinner will be served in Baker Refectory, Ellis Hall, from 5 to 6:30 p.m. featuring a choice of three entrees, vegetables, salad bar, dessert, soft ice cream and assorted beverages.

Tickets may be purchased at Huntingdon area churches and at the information desk in Ellis Hall

Scouting Service Formed

by Jackie Oldani

There is a new organization on campus. Known as the Scouting Service Club, its objective is to help with the scouting activities in the Huntingdon area — Boy Scouts, Girl Scouts and Explorers.

Previously on campus, there was an Order of the Arrow Lodge (Boy Scout) but there was a lack of interest. It was opened to any Boy Scouts, Girl Scouts or Explorers to obtain more members and became known as the Scouting Service Club.

"The major objective of the club is to aid any of the scouting organizations in the Huntingdon area, in any area they need help with," states Esther Compher, Assistant Explorer Co-ordinator. According to Compher, the main project the club is working on now is a list of professors who would be willing to be Boy Scout Merit Badge Counselors. These counselors would be experts able to help the scouts in getting their badges. They are also trying to arrange something of this sort for the Girl Scouts.

This weekend, the club is bringing about 100 Girl Scouts to campus for a career exposition. The Order of the Arrow Lodge of Huntingdon will also perform an Indian dance display.

They have also been contacted by local scouting groups to give pep talks to the troops, for membership is falling off.

The members of the SSC do get to have some fun of their own. A camping trip is planned for the end of March at the Seven Mountains Campground.

Meetings for the Scouting Service Club are held Tuesday nights at 9 in the Gold Room, and are open to anyone, with or without past scouting experience. Compher states, "We're still looking for anyone who would be interested in helping with scouting."

Binder Delivers Address

Tracing the history and meaning of the U.S. Constitution, Dr. Frederick M. Binder, president of Juniata College told some 150 high school seniors Thursday that they must take an active interest in the affairs of government.

Dr. Binder made his remarks in the keynote speech at the educational seminar "Under the Capitol Dome: A Student's Guide to State Government" sponsored by Sen. Robert C. Jubilier and held in Altoona.

In discussing the original need for the Constitution written in 1787, Dr. Binder cited arguments made by such individuals as Alexander Hamilton, James Madison and John Jay in the "Federalists' Papers." "Because you are young Americans it is the duty of our older generation to pass on to you the torch of representative government with all of its privileges and responsibilities," Dr. Binder said.

"What makes us Americans is a common language and a common history and a representative government based on the United States Constitution and the constitutions of our several states," Dr. Binder said. "These fundamental laws of the land are products of time and people. If we are to keep them, refine them, improve them, which is our duty as Americans, we must be involved in government."

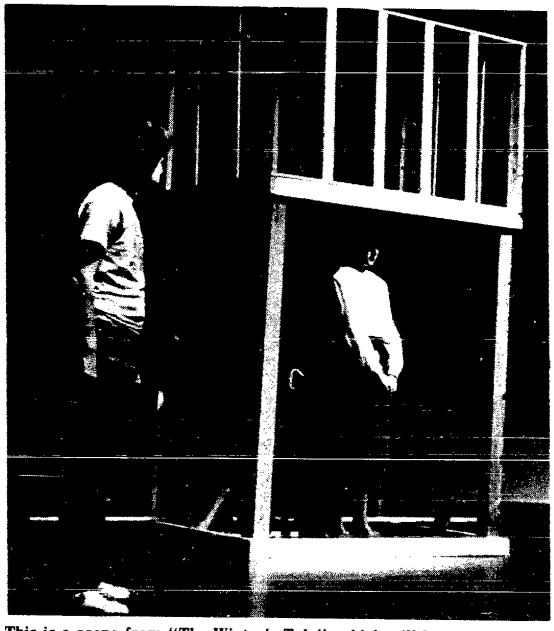
Dr. Binder called on the high school students to register to vote and voice support or opposition to political ideas and candidates. He also urged them to seek careers in government.

"We also must be active participants in town, city, county, state and federal affairs, not only because this is the only way we can preserve our democracy, but because our government affects our everyday lives in almost everything we experience."

Democracy, Dr. Binder told the students, is a voluntary political system of men and women. "We the people . . . control our own destiny as individuals and as a nation through a democratic form of government. That heritage only can be realized by participating in the American political process as concerned and intelligent citizens."

This is the third year Sen. Jubilier has sponsored this day-long seminar which brings state government to area high school students. The program included panel discussions with legislators, media representatives, lobbyists and state government officials, as well as smaller group discussions on issues of the 1980s.

High school students from throughout the 30th Senatorial District participated in the program which was designed to familiarize students with the entire state government process, and encourage them to take an active role in shaping future governmental policy in Pennsylvania.



This is a scene from "The Winter's Tale", which will be performed as the spring production of Theater Juniata in Oller Hall April 5-8.

Student Government Discusses Funds

by Joy Hadley

Debate at the March 22 Student Government meeting centered around providing funds for class projects.

Seniors Rick Burgan and Amy Reed, representing a group from the Small Business Management class approached Greg Kimble's Budget and Management Committee to request that Student Government furnish the group with a $600.00 loan needed to start up their business. Pam Keeney, a junior, asked that the Senate agree to donate $220.00 to aid the Macro Social Work Practice and Process class in implementing some type of program to encourage voter registration among social service recipients.

Dr. Arnie Tilden noted that "Traditionally, Student Government has provided funds for extra curricular activities, not instructional projects." He added that there are other means available for such projects; most notably the President's contingency fund, or the various academic departments.

The Senate eventually decided to "loan, with stipulations" the $600.00 to the Small Business Management group. The Macro Social Work group were denied their request on the basis that the project was not seen as benefitting Juniata students.

"Juniata is getting tough academically," reported Student Government President Rory McAvoy. At the March 14 Faculty meeting, recommendations were made to circumvent cheating by instituting an alphabetized seating order in class, making the students leave their books outside the classroom during tests, and instituting an Honor Code.

McAvoy also reported on the Student Affairs Council meeting, where the topic of discussion was student alcohol education. Student Affairs is being asked to endorse a policy which requires that students, who behave irresponsibly while under the influence of alcohol be required to attend a special alcohol awareness program.

In other committee reports: Residential Life reported that the Bloodmobile did not have a good turnout. Centerboard announced that the Dance Committee lost approximately $700.00 on dances this year, of that amount $600.00 was from the All Class Night dance.

Student Government will hold its next meeting Tuesday, April 3, and at that time the new administration, headed by president-elect Glen Bouder, will take over.

Hot Wax

by Tom Hildebrandt

This week, in addition to my album review, I decided to run down the top ten favorite albums this week on the Album Survey:

1) The Cars (Heartbeat City)
2) Against All Odds (Soundtrack)
3) Van Halen (1984)
4) Yes (90125)
5) Footloose (Soundtrack)
6) Pretenders (Learning to Crawl)
7) Scorpions (Love at First Sting)
8) Dwight Twilley (Jungle)
9) Dan Fogleberg (Windows and Walls)
10) Alan Parsons Project (Ammonia Ave)

The album I reviewed this week is the latest from 38 Special, Tour de Force which holds at number 21 on the charts. The group continues its prevalence in the rock scene with its Southern Rock and Roll style, similar to Lynyrd Skynyrd and a light, but not as harsh, Molly Hatchet.

The vocals on Tour de Force are accentuated by a melodic chorus from the rest of the band on many of the cuts. This makes for a pleasant blend of rock with a backwood country sound. Strong rhythm guitars dominate many of the songs, and guitar solos are somewhat hidden in the bass lines.

The amazing similarity between Tour de Force and past 38 Special releases disappointed me as I was looking for something a little different. This album merely picks up where Wild-Eyed Southern Boys left off.

I would classify Tour de Force as light Southern Rock, and would recommend it for people who like moderate listening music.

Out of 5 Tour de Force gets:

Special Service Planned

In preparation for Easter, there will be a special service held on April 8th.

Following the regularly scheduled mass in the ballroom at 6:30 and communion in the faculty lounge, students and faculty will gather at Detwiler Plaza. The service will include scripture readings and meditations along with special music by Dianne McDaniels of the Huntingdon/Mount Union Choir. The service itself will touch on Palm Sunday, Good Friday and Easter Sunday.

In case of rain, the service will be held in the ballroom.

Bicentennial Observed at Juniata

As part of the national observance of The Treaty of Paris Bicentennial, Juniata College President Frederick M. Binder will be presenting a lecture on this historic document Thursday, March 29 at 8:15 p.m. in the Ellis Hall faculty lounge.

Signed on Sept. 3, 1783, the Treaty of Paris marked the conclusion of the Revolutionary War, and was the first diplomatic victory for the new nation. As a result of the treaty, Great Britain officially recognized the independence of the United States and its claim to all land west and north of Florida.

The negotiation of the treaty was one of the most exciting and controversial stories in 18th century diplomatic history. America was represented in the negotiations by four prominent patriots: Benjamin Franklin, John Adams, John Jay and Henry Laurens.

President of Juniata College since 1975, Dr. Binder is a graduate of Ursinus College, and received both his master's and Ph.D. degrees in American history from the University of Pennsylvania. He began his teaching career at Temple University and continues to teach today as a professor of history at Juniata. In 1983, Gov. Richard Thornburgh appointed Dr. Binder to the Penn-

Student Officers Elected

by Ann Cameron

The polls were busy March 20th as 503 students voted for class officers, Student Government president and vice-president, and Centerboard chairperson and vice-chairperson. Student Government committee chairman Corky Collins noted that the 45% voter turnout was the best turnout in the last four years.

The newly elected officers for the Class of 1985 are Dave Wagner, who will be serving his third term as president; Randy Smith, returning as vice-president; Lisa Greiss, secretary; and Thomas Yokoyama, treasurer. The competition was keen for the Class of 1986. Incumbent president Tom Canselmo edged out Ronald Markey by one vote, and Beth Bentz defeated Robert Yankello (99-96) for the vice-presidency. Dave Challenger will be the new class secretary and write-in candidate John Hunter will be treasurer. The leaders of the Class of 1987 for the coming year will be Scott Stevenson, president; Lorrie Tilton, vice-president; Karen Reap, secretary; and Ken Gfroerer, treasurer.

Rich Mrosky was elected Centerboard chairperson and Deb Maue was elected vice-chairperson. An election for Centerboard secretary will be held after the election for dorm senators.

Glen Bouder defeated Patty Renwick in the race for Student Government president (242-219). Because 25 of the ballots listed only Jack Thomas and not Fran Fry as a candidate for vice president, another election was held March 27th to select the new Student Government vice-president.

Thank you to everyone who voted and good luck to the newly elected officers.

Student Affairs Council Accepts New Program

by Steve Creps

The Student Affairs Council has informally accepted a new program known as the "Irresponsible Behavior While Under the Influence" program (IBWI). The program, which will be formally adopted at the April 5 meeting, will include students involved in the disciplinary process for damage done while "under the influence." Other referrals may come from the residence staff. Referrals of this nature might result from a concern over a particular person's behavior following the use of alcoholic beverages.

Participation in the program will be mandatory for referrals in disciplinary cases. Failure to complete the program by such students will result in social probation for a period of one term. Referral by the Residential staff, however, will not be a mandatory referral. It is hoped that referrals of such nature will be viewed as educational and not punitive.

"The main goal of this program is to provide alcohol education for the student body," stresses Dean of Student Services, Arnie Tilden. "We want the students in the program to be able to study their social patterns and to clarify their values and views as related to alcohol use and abuse. We also want to provide the student with support in making responsible decisions with regard to alcohol use.

"This particular program was recently initiated for disciplinary reasons. We already have five students in the program under the direction of Dr. Jay Buchanan and trained students. The people who have been involved in it (IBWI) have felt that it has been beneficial. I feel that we have an effective intervention."

The IBWI program has been developed by the Committee on Alcohol Study and Education (CASE) in conjunction with the Student Services Staff. The Student Services office is asking that the IBWI program be appended to the current SAC Alcohol Policy. The program consists of five components.

In the first component, students would view the film The Spirit of Responsibility, which would provide participants with accurate information on alcohol and its effects. Students would also participate in follow-up discussion groups.

The second component is a visit to an Alcoholics Anonymous meeting. The purpose of this component is to expose students to the extreme consequences that some suffer from alcohol abuse. This visit would also help screen those students with serious alcohol dependency problems. Following the visit, participants will write a reaction paper.

The third component consists of attending a weekend social function and abstaining from the use of alcoholic beverages. The goal is for the participants to observe the behavior of others when alcohol is available. Another reaction paper will be required for this component.

Fourth, the students will participate in a five step behavior modification program.

The final component will be the help discussions between the participants and the trained students. These discussions will be inter-

'Solid Gold' — A musical gem

Rock music and videos, with their mass demographic appeal, are fast becoming dominate factors on the minds of television programmers.

And while such musical variety shows as "American Bandstand" and "Hee Haw" have been on the air for many years, no show has made a larger impact on the way music lovers today watch television as "Solid Gold."

There are several reasons for "Solid Gold's" success over the past four years. One can be traced to the fact that it was the first series to successfully introduce contemporary music to prime time television. Also, it is one of the few shows that allows top performing artists (Olivia Newton-John, Lionel Richie, Daryl Hall and John Oates and Prince) to appear live and perform their own current hits.

Another uniqueness which accounts to "Solid Gold's" mass appeal is that it is the only show, network, syndicated or cable, to offer music that ranges in style from hard rock to country to adult-oriented pop.

"Solid Gold" also has a loyal following of viewers who wait every week to see the mainstays of the show, both Marilyn McCoo, the series host, and the Solid Gold dancers.

Ms. McCoo, herself a recording star with a multitude of gold records, introduces some of music's hottest talent and performs top chart recordings each week. She has won a total of seven Grammy Awards, six with the group the Fifth Dimension and one with her husband, Billy Davis, Jr.

The Solid Gold dancers are composed of eight dancers with roots from all across the United States. The dancers are choreographed by Anita Mann, whose credits include an Emmy nomination for "The Muppets Go Hollywood," "The Jacksons," "The Cher Show," and such award shows as the "Academy Awards," "1981 Grammy Hall of Fame," and "1981 Golden Globe Awards."

Each of the dancers has had previous professional experience before coming to "Solid Gold." One dancer, Deborah Jenssen, can also be seen dancing on rock videos, like Rod Stewart's "Tonight I'm Yours" and OXO's "Whirly Girls."

With respect to videos cutting into the popularity of live performances, from both the perspective of the artist and the television viewer, series producer Brad Lachman believes not. " 'Solid Gold' has contributed to as well as benefited from the music video revolution. Performers are more sophisticated about the role television plays in reaching their audience. Although many artists are making their own videos, they continue to make time for a live appearance on our series because of the immediacy of the impact."

Today, "Solid Gold" is viewed by over 20 million people weekly. It is shown on over 200 stations nation wide and in 40 countries overseas. Its mass appeal and changing format to today's needs assures itself continued success in the future.

In upcoming issues of The Juniatian, be sure to watch for more articles concerning "Solid Gold" and their special guests. They are articles you won't want to miss.

Social Service Update

The Social Service Club is now operating under the direction of new officers. President Kathy Bell, Vice-President Marie Olver, along with Kay Rockafellow and Jenny Ammerman as Treasurer and Secretary took their new offices at the beginning of spring term.

The Social Service Club has a number of activities scheduled for the spring. Among these activities are a hoagie sale in early April, a Big Brother/Big Sister kickball game, and a picnic at Raystown Lake for members of the club and their friends.

In addition, the club has lined up speaker Peggy Ross of the Hillcrest Clinic in Harrisburg to speak on the changing societal roles of men and women. This talk is tentatively scheduled for May 1.

The Social Service Club welcomes new members throughout the entire year. Interested persons should contact one of the club's officers.

This Week's Movie:

Juniata's campus is struck again with the comical madness of the "Pink Panther Strikes Again" on Friday, March 30th in Alumni Hall at 7:30 p.m.

In the fourth of the Pink Panther movie series, Peter Sellers once again stars as the bungling, incompetent Inspector Clouseau. Clouseau, of the Paris police, has finally managed to drive his supervisor, Chief Dreyfuss, crazy.

Dreyfuss, who is played by Herbert Lom, plots to dispose of Clouseau but is disappointed since Clouseau is too much of a bumbler to be killed in the proper fashion.

Directed by Blake Edwards, the movie promises two hours of fun-filled madness. Tickets are $1.50 and can be purchased at the doors of Alumni.

Attention all Juniata College Juniors! The Juniatian staff is looking for a talented writer to carry on the "Muddy Run" column in the 1984-85 academic year.

Students interested in applying for the position should submit at least two samples of "Muddy Run" columns to either Beth Gallagher or Paul Bomberger. Columns may also be mailed to The Juniatian, Box 667.

Series host, Marilyn McCoo, is one of the most popular and versatile singers performing on television today. She can be seen every week performing new hits on "Solid Gold."

Student Campaign For Gary Hart

The Presidential campaign of Colorado Sen. Gary Hart has arrived on the Juniata campus under the direction of campus coordinator Scott Smith.

Smith, a sophomore, is seeking the assistance of other Juniata students interested in working for a Hart victory in the April 10 Pennsylvania Primary. Several signs have been posted around campus and announcements are being made on the public address system.

"We now have about 11 volunteers and would like to get more," Smith said. He is also working with Huntingdon County Democrats who are supporting Hart and is serving as County Co-Chairman of the Hart campaign.

Between now and the primary, Smith said he will be busy putting up posters around town, contacting individual voters and handing out information at area polling places.

Smith said he is pleased with the support he has received so far. He is currently operating out of his 213 Cloister room, and is in touch with Hart's Pennsylvania headquarters daily.

Anyone interested in working on the Hart campaign or seeking more information on the candidate and his policies should contact Smith (643-9950).

With the Pennsylvania Primary less than two weeks away, Hart appears to be the only candidate with an active organization at Juniata.

Since the results of the Pennsylvania Primary will play a major role in the outcome of the Democratic Presidential race, all students are urged to vote.

Students Protest Injustice

by Mary McDougall

Thousands of people are in prison because of their beliefs. Many are held without trial. Torture and the death penalty are widespread. Through participation in Amnesty International, Juniata students will be trying to help in the termination of such practices.

Founded in 1966, Amnesty International (AI) now has 20,000 members. The aim of AI is to "work impartially for the release of prisoners of conscience, especially those men and women detained anywhere for their conscientiously held beliefs, color, ethnic origin, sex, religion or language, provided they have neither used nor advocated violence." In 1977, AI received the Nobel Prize for Peace.

The newly-formed Juniata chapter will be involved in letter-writing campaigns targeted at governments committing known human rights violations. The members will be writing letters in the "Prisoner of the Month" campaign. In this project, three political prisoners are spotlighted monthly in Amnesty Action, the AI newsletter.

Because of the time demands and fund-raising requirements that accompany a formal charter from Amnesty International, the Juniata chapter will be an informal one.

"Amnesty International is a worthwhile organization and is performing a valuable service to the world," said member Judy Vachon. "Besides writing letters, our core group will be trying to spark awareness on campus of human rights violations around the world and encouraging participation in the letter-writing campaigns."

Anyone interested in finding out more about Amnesty International may contact Judy Vachon at box 1516.

A New Look For JC's Weight Room

by Ron Renzini

The weight room in the Sports & Recreation Center has a brand new look. With the addition of rubber matted floors and mirrors, the sparsely decorated room of years past now resembles the gyms which many of the users are accustomed to.

A look of today, with an eye for the future growth and development is the philosophy which is presently being subscribed to by Henry Coyne, Weight Lifting Club president. "The club is here to help all members of the college community, and with these renovations, it is our hope that the campus will take full advantage of the facility," said Coyne.

Citing the fact that people today are into the "health kick", Coyne said "there are between 200 and 300 users of the weight room each week." This is three to four times more people than there are in the weightlifting club, which presently has a membership of 75 students.

The newly acquired mirrors are just the first improvement scheduled to be implemented this year. This club is also planning to purchase a new straight bar, some weights, a clock, and have a mural depicting a body builder painted on one of the walls.

According to Coyne, "the administration and physical plant have been just super in providing help whenever requested. Without the help of the club's advisor, President Frederick M. Binder, we would not have been able to accomplish as much as we have."

Puzzle Answer

NCAA Down To Four

by Joe Scialabba

The "Big Four" of the 1984 NCAA Final Four could make this weekend's tournament conclusion one to be long remembered. Four of the most successful big men in college basketball history will take the floor in Seattle's Kingdome in what may turn out to be the greatest showing of inside power ever in tournament history.

Kentucky's Mel Turpin and Sam Bowie, Georgetown's Pat Ewing, and Houston's Akeem Alajawan will tower over the Final Four court this weekend as their respective teams battle for the national championship. The other semi-fianlist, Virginia, doesn't have a seven-footer and may not have a prayer. What big man, or men (hint), will go onto the NBA with the memory of a national championship in 1984?

Let me give you my thoughts, which I must say to this point have been rather unusual and unfortunately unsuccessful.

Kentucky struggled more than I expected them to on Saturday when they won the Mideast Regional crown 54-51 over Illinois. Turpin, Bowie, and little man Beal held on though and seem to have some momentum coming into the semi's. Kentucky got past Louisville on the way and has never really been in a "do or die" situation yet. They seem to be the most solid of the Final Four.

West Regional champion Georgetown has finally gotten on track. They ended Dayton's "Cinderella" dream with a 61-49 victory in the final on Sunday. The Hoyas showed some awesome bench power and Ewing played another solid game. I guess the Hoyas have gotten over their slowdown disaster against SMU, which still makes me wonder about just how much confidence John Thompson really has in his squad. If Georgetown tries another trick like that, they will not only lose the game but a lot of fans too. A legitimate end-of-the-game slow-up is fine, but no more second half halts.

Houston found the Midwest to be a nice region as they took the championship by beating Wake Forest 68-63. The Demon Deacons got to the final eight by upsetting top-seed DePaul on Friday night 73-71 in overtime. Ray Meyer ended his coaching career on a very sour note as his club blew an eight-point lead in the final two minutes of regulation thanks to numerous turnovers and untimely miscues. As for Houston, this is the third straight Final Four appearance for the Cougars and Guy Lewis doesn't want to miss another chance at national supremacy. Houston held off a tough Memphis State effort in the regional semi's and showed signs of breaking out of their expected foul shooting blues in the final minutes of the game. The Cougars are very suspect to charity strip problems and have to avoid them this weekend or risk a repeat of last year's championship loss to N.C. State.

Finally, there is Virginia. The Cavaliers are by far the underdog, being that they are the only unseeded team left. Terry Holland has nothing but praise for his team that has fought its way through the East Regional to the glory of the Final Four. The Cavs are a very good team and had to beat a string of good opponents to get where they are. They had to up-end sky-high Indiana last weekend, 50-48, to make the semi's. It was Bobby Knight's team that upset No. 1 ranked North Carolina on Thursday. The Virginia quest for recogniiton without Ralph is complete already everything this weekend just adds a little bit more to an already outstanding year.

Four teams remain but only one can win it. "Who will it be?" you ask. Well, for the final time I attempt to prove I have "some" knowledge by predicting the following results: In the semi-finals on Saturday, Kentucky beats Georgetown 73-65 and Houston slips past Virginia 58-57. In the finals on Monday it will be Joe B. Hall and his Wildcats in the winner's circle, 78-70 over Houston.

Of course these predictions are about as worthless as every other prediction I've made this "March Madness" season, but it's fun to do. Alhtough my picks show Kentucky as national champions, wouldn't it be great if Virginia won it? Underdogs seem to have something about them that makes them sentimental favorites. I doubt this will help the Cavs win it. Never know!

Men's Track Looks Promising

Coach Al Hartman is looking for a successful year in his inaugural season as the Juniata College track and field coach. He will be trying to improve on the Indian thinclads 4-3 record and seventh place finish in the Middle Atlantic Conference Championships in 1983. He will be supported by fourteen returning letter winners along with the aid of a number of veteran tracksters and a strong group of freshmen athletes.

Hartman feels that success can be measured best by performance on the national level. He points out that many of the Indians have the potential to perform on this level.

"Sophomore Gino Perri (McKees Rocks, Montour) should have a very good year in the field events, especially in the shot-put," Hartman said. "He is working very hard and has a lot of motivation along with a great attitude."

Fellow sophomore Pete Hauer (Lebanon, Lebanon High) is a very competitive athlete who excels in the 400 meter run and the high jump. Hartman also notes that senior Tom Show (Clarks Summit, Abington Heights) and sophomore Tom Trent (Somerset, Somerset Area) should have terrific seasons in the long and triple jumps.

He also feels that junior Tom Weiner (Pittsburgh, Elkland High) looks promising in the javelin and sophomore Jeff Johnson (Harrisburg, Harrisburg High) is strong in the discus.

Hartman notes that he will rely on members of a very strong men's cross country team to lead the way in the distance events. This includes three returning letter winners in the likes of senior Dave Long (Wyomissing, Wyomissing Area) and juniors Andy Marsh (Hanover, Hanover Senior) and Mark Royer (Elgin, IL, Larkin).

The track and field schedule:

Mar. 28, Lycoming, Baptist Bible, Messiah, Lebanon Valley.

Apr. 4, at Susquehanna; 7, at Western Maryland Relays; 14, at Messiah Invitational; 24, at Susquehanna, Western Maryland; 26, at Messiah, Lebanon Valley; 30, Dickinson.

Women's Track Outlook

The Juniata College women's track and field team will be trying to improve the Lady Indians inaugural season's 8-2 record and second place finish in the sixteen team Middle Atlantic Conference tournament.

Coach Al Hartman and assistant coach Roslyn Hall are very enthusiastic about this year's team. The team will feature eight returning letter winners, including junior Peggy Evans (Murrysville, Plum Senior) who received the Most Outstanding Performer Award in the MAC's last year.

Hartman and Hall hope that Evans, who improved her MAC record in the triple-jump along with taking first place in the 200 meter run and second place finishes in three other events, will lead the Indians to another fine season.

The biggest improvement from last year's team is depth. Senior Michelle Bartol (Shamokin, Lourdes Regional), sophomore Sue Occiano (New Freedom, Susquehannock) and Evans will be back from the record setting 4x100 meter relay team. Sophomore Carol Tendall (Center Square, Wissahickon) will also be back in hopes of improving her MAC record in the 1500 meter run. She also captured third place finishes in the 300 and 5000.

The coaches hope that senior Carolyn Andre (Montrose, Montrose High) and sophomore Mary Moynihan (Yalesville, Mark T. Sheehan) will be back with stronger performances. They will also need the help of senior Sue Richards (Piscataway, Piscataway High), junior Terri Bollman (West Lawn, Wilson) and sophomore Tammie Seitzinger (Shartlesville, Hamburg Area), along with some very strong freshmen hopefuls to fill the shoes of five of last year's seniors.

According to Hartman, the strongest competition will come from Franklin and Marshall College. Messiah College will also provide tough competition in their MAC inaugural season.

The complete Indian schedule:

Mar. 28, Franklin and Marshall, Lycoming.

Apr. 4, at Susquehanna; 7, at Western Maryland Relays; 14, at Messiah Invitational; 24, at Susquehanna, Western Maryland; 26, at Messiah, Lebanon Valley.

spersed throughout the other components of the program.

The Students Affairs Council (SAC) is responsible for making policies regarding student life. SAC is composed of students, faculty members and administrators. The students on the council are the Student Government President, two Senators and the Center Board Chairperson. The administrators on the council are the Dean of Student Services and the Director of Programming.

The next meeting of the council is scheduled for Thursday, April 5, at 4:30 in the Blue Room and is open to the student body. The IBWI proposal is to be adopted, and guidelines relative to practices for advertising social functions where alcoholic beverages will be available are to be discussed.

Putters Take To The Greens

Co-coaches Dr. Arnie Tilden and Dr. Duane Stroman have seven letterwinners returning for the 1984 season and hope to improve greatly on last year's 4-7 mark.

Senior Mike Appleby of Mount Union and junior Mark Loeper of Reading lead the experienced returnees. Five sophomore monogrammers are back, including Steve Borza of Greensburg, Tom Cancelmo of Radnor, Dave Challenger of Bethlehem, Joe Scialabba of Huntingdon, and Steve West of Carlisle. The Indians lost only two consistent players to graduation in Andy Berdy and Jim Ledane.

Tilden looks for the team to be much stronger overall as compared to last year. "Borza should be our most consistent scorer," notes Tilden, "but Loeper has the greatest potential for very low scores. If Appleby, Cancelmo, Scialabba, and West can have solid years, we will be very competitive. Senior Jack Williams could also help if he plays as well as he did in the fall."

The Indians will face a tough schedule this spring and will compete in the Middle Atlantic Conference Championships in April.

The complete Indian schedule:

Mar. 27, York; 29, Susquehanna.

Apr. 7, at Western Maryland, Ursinus; 9, at Gettysburg; 11, at Lock Haven; 13, Lycoming; 24, at Wilkes, Albright; 27, Dickinson.

The "Sports Corner"

by Andy Hiscock

There may be hope yet!!

This past week while attending the two Varsity Baseball games I had that strange feeling that someone was watching me as I leaned up against the home team dugout. For a while I was afraid to turn around to see if someone was behind me for fear that it might be some high ranking school official who was passing by and stopped to see what the attraction was for this strange game in which the students were indulging. I was almost sure that no one else could be around on such a cold and miserable afternoon. As the game wore on, that strange sensation continued and I could swear that I heard some far off, long forgotten noises that sounded almost like a crowd of people. AND THEN IT HAPPENED!!!! All at once without any warning, right after one of our men sent a deep shot up the gap in left centerfield, it started. Quietly at first but growing in volume, a sort of unrhythmic sound intermixed with some animal-like screams. I wheeled around in surprise and THERE THEY WERE!! There were FANS in the seats!!! They were applauding and cheering!! Is Apathy fading at Juniata or is it just Spring fever that brings the students out of their holes?!!!

Indian Tennis '84

Men's Tennis Outlook

The Juniata College men's tennis team will be short on experience and long on youth for 1984. Fourth year coach Rob Ash hopes to improve on last year's 2-7 record. His squad opened the campaign on March 24 at Wilkes College.

Experience will not be the Indians' strong suit as only two regular singles and two doubles players return. Ash feels his top returning player is sophomore Chris Savage of Philadelphia. Savage sported an 8-3 record last spring at the number five and six singles position and won his first round match at the Middle Atlantic Conference Championships. Senior Tom Lancaster of Lancaster, also returns after a 4-3 singles season in 1983. Sophomore Steve Helm of Hollidaysburg and sophomore Brad Horton of Lewistown will be the returning doubles players.

Ash needs to replace the likes of Keith Fox and three other 1983 graduates in his singles line up. "Hopefully some of the new members of the team will develop for us," says Ash. "We are going to be a pretty young team and we'll have to work hard and steadily improve to be successful."

The complete Indian schedule:

Mar. 24, at Wilkes; 28, at Susquehanna.

Apr. 2, at Dickinson; 4, at York; 7, at Albright; 9, Elizabethtown; 14, Lycoming; 30, Gettysburg.

May 2, Lock Haven.

Women's Outlook

Coach Nancy Latimore begins her seventh season as coach of the women's tennis team at Juniata. A native of Huntingdon, she comes off of a 4-5 1983 mark that saw one team member go to the NCAA Division III championships. The 1984 team opens on March 28 at Dickinson.

"With one senior, one junior, four sophomores and four freshmen on our roster, one would think that we were a rather 'green' team," Latimore said. "However, we are returning a very talented and experienced group, which includes four letterwinners. Last season, three of our six singles positions were filled by frosh Ginny Krall (Ephrata, Ephrata Senior), Kim Detwiler (Altoona, Altoon Area), and Leanne Egolf (Carlisle, Carlisle High)."

In addition, Marie Rose (Glen Mills, West Chester East) and Sue King (Chambersburg, Chambersburg High) looked very good playing in the fall.

"We expect our stiffest competition to come from our Middle Atlantic Conference opponents," Latimore added.

"I am pleased with the progress that we are making in our tennis program," she concluded. "Our program got a real boost last season when Sharon Ammarell qualified for and competed in the NCAA Division III National Championships in California. All in all, we look for another good year."

The complete Indian schedule:

Mar. 28, at Dickinson.

Apr. 7, York; 11, at Elizabethtown; 13, Wilson; 14, at Albright; 24, at PSU, Altoona; 27, at Susquehanna.

May 1, Bucknell.

Men's Opener

by Joe Scialabba

The men's tennis team started the season with a bang last weekend with a convincing 9-0 win over Wilkes College. The contest was held in Wilkes-Barre.

Coach Rob Ash's netmen picked up the shutout victory with wins in straight sets all the way through the lineup.

Stephane Wallaert led the singles sweep with a 6-2, 6-0 win in the No. 1 position. John Dorner won 6-3, 6-3 in the No. 2 spot. Chris Savage won a hard-fought 7-5, 6-0 No. 3 match. Senior Tom Lancaster took the No. 4 battle with a 6-3, 6-1 effort. Doug Yokoyama was an impressive 6-0, 6-1 victor at the No. 5 spot, while Tom Eberhart rounded out the singles situation with a 7-5, 6-2 win.

Juniata dominated the doubles competition as well winning handily. Dan Berger and Brad Horton combined at the No. 3 spot to win 6-3, 6-2. Wallaert and Dorner teamed up to take the No. 1 doubles match-up 6-2, 6-3. Savage and Yokoyama finished the sweep at the No. 2 doubles spot with a 6-0, 6-3 triumph.

The Indians were at Susquehanna yesterday and hope to gain momentum next week when they host Dickinson on Monday and travel to York for a Wednesday match.

Freshman Frank Briner makes contact with the ball during season opening double-header against Elizabethtown which the Indians split.

Indian Baseball Begins

by Andy Hiscock

The 1984 Varsity Indians Baseball Season has begun. Over the past five days, the team has played six games against three different opponents (the doubleheader against Susquehanna on Wednesday, March 28th had not been played at the time of publication). After the first two double-header games between Elizabethtown on March 24th and Dickinson on March 26th, the team had won two and lost two (2-2).

The Indians season began on a blustery cold Saturday afternoon (24th) after their originally scheduled season opener against W. Maryland had been cancelled. The Elizabethtown Jays were the opponents. Game No. 1 of the twinbill was not the classic opening season ballgame that I had expected with numerous errors for both teams and a high score, but instead just the opposite occurred. Rich Howie was the starting pitcher for the Indians, and he had a great day. Rich pitched 6-2/3 (out of 7) scoreless innings, spreading out three singles, two doubles and one triple, along with one walk, and had one strike-out to earn himself the win. John Summers came in to cool the fire in the top of the seventh to get the final out of the game with the tying run on third to record the save. The total offensive scoring for the whole game was packed into the bottom half of the 5th inning. Freshman Frank Briner led off the inning with a single, which was followed by a fielder's choice which resulted with one out and a man on 1st. Sophomore Dave Crane drove a single into the gap to advance runners to 1st and 2nd (Mike Culver came is as courtesy runner for Dave). Sophomore Steve Poska came up with the game winning double to drive in Briner and move Culver to third before getting caught in a run-down. The final score for game No. 1 remained 1-0 Indians Winners.

Game No. 2 against E-Town was also low scoring with Elizabethtown squeaking out a victory with a two out rally in the second half of the 3rd inning. Dave Heydrick was on the mound for the Indians in this game and he pitched 6 good innings, letting up only one unearned run, had one strike-out and let up 8 hits, before Kevin Smith came into the game in the seventh inning with a man on 1st to retire the sides. The Indians lost (0-1).

On Monday, March 26th in much better weather than their opening game, the Indians took on a tough squad from Dickinson on Langdon Field. Junior Dave Musser started the first game of this double-header for the Juniata Indians. Dave was able to pitch 4-1/3 innings letting up two runs before being relieved by Freshman Steve Meeker. Steve came into the game in a difficult situation, with men on 1st and 2nd and one out. Steve let up a single and a double before being relieved by John Summers, but he's still only a freshman and shows great promise. The Dickinson Red Devils were able to tack on another run in the top of the 6th inning to account for their five runs in the game. The bats for Juniata were not quiet for the whole game either. The Indians started the scoring in the bottom of the 2nd inning with a sacrifice fly scoring a run. In the 4th inning, Senior Grady Paul hit a double which was followed by a single by Junior Dave Murphy to score a run. Murphy also stole a base during the inning. In the bottom half of the last inning, the Indians brought it closer with a single by Steve Poska and Scott Cole along with a walk combined to add a run. The final score of the game was Dickinson winning (5-3).

The second game of the doubleheader saw the Indians making fewer mental mistakes which definitely helped them on to the (4-3) victory. Junior Dave Lesser started as pitcher for Juniata and he went on to pitch 5 innings 2 runs on 6 hits, and striking out 2 men. With the help of singles by Jeff Meeker and Grady Paul along with a sacrifice fly by Dave Murphy and another infield single by Steve Poska the Indians led the game (2-1) after the first inning. After Dickinson got another run in the top of the 2nd, the Indians answered with two of their own by a single from Dave Crane, and Scott Coie being hit by a pitch and another single by Terry Yoder along with an error. Dickinson added another run in the top of the 6th inning, but it was not enough to catch the Indians who split their second doubleheader in as many tries (4-3).

Rafters Prepare To Set Sail

by Cinny Cooper

Raft Regatta anticipation filled the crowded mini-lounge of Ellis Hall last week as potential raftsmen gathered to take the first step in sailing down the Juniata River.

The Regatta, an annual event at Juniata, will be held Saturday, April 28, starting around noon. This is the first weekend after Easter break. High or low water conditions will postpone the event until May 12.

Greg Kimble, co-chairperson of this tradition, explained the rules and registration process at last week's meeting. As in past years, all rafts must be registered with the Raft Regatta Committee and all participants are required to sign a liability waiver form after reading and understanding the Regatta rules. A fine will be imposed on anyone breaking these rules.

Building materials provided by the Raft Regatta Committee will be available in South's parking lot immediately after break. Kimble encouraged all participants to provide as many of their own materials as possible since distribution of materials provided by the Committee will be on a first-come first-serve basis. Styrofoam supported rafts will not be allowed on the river.

Transportation to the Smithfield Bridge launch site will be provided for all rafts within the 9' x 12' limit. Buses will be available to take crewmen and spectators to the site.

Life preservers must be present on the raft for each crew member. The Raft Regatta Committee will provide life preservers for all students, faculty, and administrators, but guests must provide their own.

Complete rules, registration and waiver forms are available at the Information Desk in Ellis. These forms, plus a $5.00 registration fee per raft, must be turned into the Info Desk by April 11.

Raystown Beverage will be awarding a trophy to the most creative raft.

Expert Presents Lecture

One of the world's leading experts on the famous Dead Sea Scrolls will discuss their importance in a lecture at Juniata College on Sunday, April 8.

Dr. John C. Trever, director of the Dead Sea Scrolls Project at the School of Theology at Claremont, Claremont, Calif., will present the lecture at 8:15 p.m. in the Ellis Hall faculty lounge. The program is part of Juniata's J. Omar Good Lecture Series.

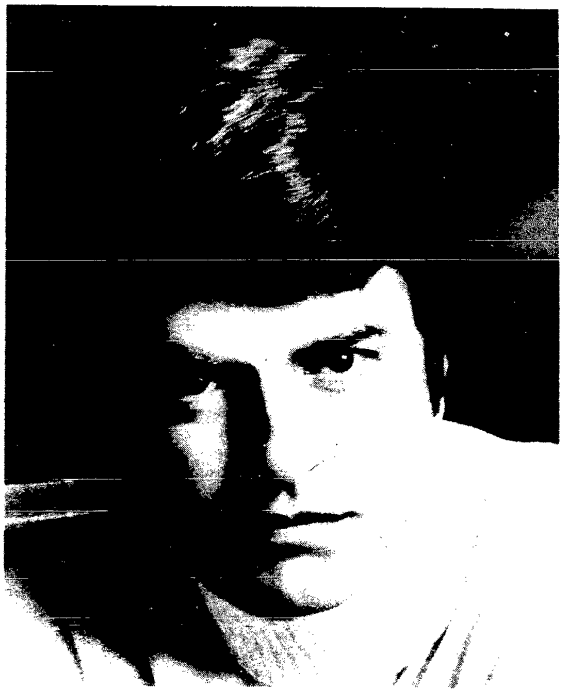
An interest in photography and a fascination with biblical antiquities combined to project Dr. Trever into an international figure for his recognition of the antiquity and dating of the now-famed Dead Sea Scrolls. In 1947-48, as a fellow of the American School of Oriental Reserach in Jerusalem, Dr. Trever played an important role in the discovery of the Dead Sea Scrolls. The story of his relationship to this discovery is recounted in the book "The Untold Story of Qumran" which he published in 1965.

Dr. Trever received his A.B. degree magna cum laude from the University of Southern California. He went on to receive his B.D. degree from Yale Divinity School in 1940 and his Ph.D. from Yale Graduate School in 1943. He became an ordained elder in the Methodist Church that same year.

The author of numerous articles and books, Dr. Trever has traveled throughout the world studying ancient Hebrew manuscripts, the flora of the Bible and lecturing on the Dead Sea Scrolls.

In addition to the School of Theology at Claremont, Dr. Trever has taught at Drake University and Baldwin-Wallace College. Since his retirement from Claremont in 1980, he has continued as director of the Dead Sea Scrolls Project on a volunteer basis and is offering lay education services to many churches through short courses in biblical studies.

Dr. Trever's April 8 lecture on "Learning from the Dead Sea Scrolls" is open to the public at no charge.



Huntingdon native Robert Swan will perform Tuesday at 8:15 p.m. in Oller Hall as part of the continuing Artists Series.

Local Pianist Will Perform

by Paul Bomberger

One of the finest young American pianists will perform at Juniata College Tuesday, April 10 at 8:15 p.m. in Oller Hall, as part of the college's 1983-84 Artist Series.

Huntingdon native Robert Swan has appeared as an orchestral soloist and in recitals in New York, London, Taipei, Taiwan and Seoul, Korea. In Taipei, he was the first American soloist to appear over China Television Service performing Gershwin's Concerto in F.

Swan is one of the very few American pianists who has started and is pursuing a performing career without the aid of winning a major competition.

He received his bachelor of music degree from the Eastman School of Music and a master of music degree from the Juilliard School. His doctorate of musical arts degree, with a major in piano performance, is in progress at the University of Arizona at Tucson where he has been granted a teacher assistantship. In addition to his teaching assistantship, he has taught at well known music schools in Rochester, N.Y. and New York City.

Swan's concerts have been well received. The London Daily Telegraph said, "The Andante of the Brahms F Minor sonata was nobly expressive. Mr. Swan's finest playing was reserved for the Prokofiev. The demonic insistence which threatens to overwhelm the listener in the finale was uninhibitedly projected within controlled textures."

Swan's orchestral performances this season have included Rachmaninoff's Third Concerto, Liszt's Hungarian Fantasy, Gershwin's Rhapsody in Blue, Beethoven's First Concerto and the Grieg Concerto.

The Juniata College Artist Series is intended to provide cultural and aesthetic opportunities to both the campus community and its larger, regional constituency. The public is cordially invited to attend the April 10 Artist Series concert. Tickets may be purchased at the door.

Career Fair Planned

by Linda Ramsay

A hydrogeologist, computer sales representative, foreign service officer and podiatrist are just a few of the professionals that will take over Ellis Hall on April 11.

This Wednesday from 11 a.m. - 2 p.m. in Baker Refectory, 45 to 48 alumni and friends of Juniata College will be taking time off from their jobs in return for a free meal and the opportunity and satisfaction of helping Juniata students understand their career choices.

The Career Fair, co-sponsored by the Alumni Office and the Career Planning and Placement Center, has been held bi-annually for the last six years. According to Bill Martin, Director of the Career Planning and Placement Center, "the fair is an ideal opportunity for the student body to take advantage of discovering different career opportunities within one's field of interest."

Accounting, advertising, production management, journalism, forestry, broadcasting, the Peace Corps, biomedical sales, dentistry, technical writing, teaching, oceanography and medical technology will all have representatives on Wednesday discussing the various careers.

The informal luncheon is based on the idea of "table-hopping" from job to job. Each table in the cafeteria will be stationed with a professional. The ideal system requires students to "table-hop" from career to career during the lunch hours, gaining information from as many representatives as possible. "Whitey" Martin advises students to take the initiative in this process by asking specific, personal questions about interests, working conditions, educational requirements, and obstacles about the specific jobs.

Some suggested questions include: Do you like your job? What is a bad day like? Did you not attend graduate school and wish you had? What does the job market in your field look like for the future? What are working conditions like?

Martin noted that day students are welcome to participate in the Career Fair but should register first with the Career Planning and Placement Center in order to gain admittance by food service.

Getting Tougher in the classroom

Cheating. Students witness it, participate in it, and complain about it; yet the problem remains. Now Student Government is taking action.

At the March 14th, faculty meeting, Student Government raised concerns about the large cheating problem on campus and made recommendations to alleviate the problem.

As at many tough academic institutions, cheating is not uncommon on the Juniata campus. Both the high pressure to excel academically, especially among pre-professional students, and the low priority that some students give to studying may contribute to the prevalence of cheating at Juniata.

Perhaps the greatest cause of this all too common practice is the lack of enforcement of strict penalties for cheaters. Recommendations by Student Government to curb this problem include the institution of alphabetical seating order in class, requiring students to leave their books outside of the classroom during tests, and the institution of an Honor Code. Under such an honor code, students would be guilty of cheating if they cheat or if they witness other students doing so and fail to report them.

While The Juniatian commends Student Government for taking action, we do not feel that these measures will be the perfect solution. Leaving books outside the classroom may help to curb cheating, as may an alphabetical seating order; however, The Juniatian does not support the implementation of an Honor Code.

This type of Honor Code raises the question of which person is actually the one at fault — the one who is copying or the one who did not report him? Surely, students should be held responsible for their own actions, but they should not be held accountable for the lack of integrity of fellow students. Ideally, a student should want to report a cheater and should have the opportunity to do so; yet he should never be obligated to report a cheater.

What is needed instead is more effective control of test situations, a closer scrutiny of take-home assignments and a strictly enforced cheating policy. Tests should be closely monitored by professors, possibly with the help of an assistant. Books and other materials can be banned from the test room; seating can be varied; calculators can be checked for prior programming. Additionally, blue books should be handed out by the professors, not brought in to class by students.

These measures, coupled with tougher punishments for those caught cheating, would act as a much better deterrant for cheating than would an Honor Code.

ALONG MUDDY RUN

by Kathleen Achor

Tired of reading the predictable Achor column: invariably sarcastic, full of bad puns, and displaying distinctly leftist undertones?

Well, I've finally decided to be really innovative and try something that perhaps has never before been attempted in the history of the Juniatian.

Yes folks, here it is: the first scratch and sniff column. You loved it as a kid — admit it. So regress with me for a few moments as I share with you a fairy tale set here in our own burrough.

Once upon a time, not too long ago (as will be obvious as the story unfolds) there lived a gnome called Al. Al the Gnome lived high up in gnome country — Tussey Mountain. There aren't too many gnomes there (most have migrated to California, where supposedly all the action is), but there are still a few, and the ones that are around are excessively into mating; and rightly so, as they don't want to die out as a species in these parts.

One morning, beneath his favorite hemlock tree, Al awoke to a familiar scent: the smell of a female gnome in heat! (To experience this scent, please scratch and sniff the h that appears in this paper's title.) Smell familiar? Well, what Al didn't know was that the smell of fiberglass is very similar to that of a gnome ready for love. And down the mountain he came, in search of one with whom to procreate.

It wasn't long before Al found himself in Huntingdon, amidst the downtown hustle and bustle. Although he knew he was much closer to the scent that had drawn him, the smell of exhaust fumes (scratch and sniff the A of the column title) mixed with those of the pizza place he was happening by (scratch and sniff the identifying number of page 4) temporarily confused him, and threw him off track. He must have looked the part, or at least like enough of a foreigner that a guy walking out of the pizza place asked him if he was lost or needed any help.

"Actually," Al said, "I'm looking for a mate. I smell her around here somewhere."

The guy looked confused. "Well buddy, I don't know what you're talking about, but I'm a student from Juniata College, and I'm going to a party tonight. Maybe you can find a mate there."

"You got gnomes there?" Al asked incredulously, not looking to getting involved with any human types.

"Well," said the student, whose name was Joe, predictably, "we got some short women. Don't worry. You'll fit in." And Al got into the car with Joe (scratch and sniff the v in the college emblem on the front page for the smell of vinyl).

Yes kiddies, that is how Al got to Juniata College. It was all very strange to him, although Cloister looked like something out of his distant past. In no time at all, it was time to go to the party. Al was sure he'd find his woman there. After all, he'd been aware of that scent all afternoon. (Go back to the h for a refresher on that one.)

Joe faithfully took him around, introducing him to people. Most of them were drunk, so they got a real kick out of meeting him, figuring they were just hallucinating or something. But Al, who was rather light weight, soon found he had a problem sticking to the beer-sodden floor. (Scratch and sniff the top left corner of the photo on page one for the delightful odor of stale beer.) He didn't see another gnome anywhere, and when a short woman tried to pick him up, he decided to cut out.

In the cool night, the smell of a desirable female was made manifest once more. This time Al was able to make out the direction

by Tom Hildebrandt

This week when I sat down with the latest album from Van Halen, the past hard heavy metal rock group, I expected, judging by my exposure to "Jump", that Van Halen had gone the way of many other heavy metal groups — to green! Van Halen, almost overnight, has leapt into a multimillion dollar business with their last albums, Diver Down and Women and Children First, which featured an almost new wave or pop beat. Now 1984 and its star "Jump" has topped the charts and slacks off to a comfortable number 3 this week.

A brief history on Van Halen shows their beginning in California in the mid 1970's. Performing in bars and nightclubs locally the band released its first album, Van Halen 1 in 1977. The music on this album was raw heavy metal with coarse lyrics and tight guitar work. Featured on this album were the favorites; "Jamie's Cryin'" and "Runnin' With The Devil". Van Halen 2 produced much of the same, with slightly more emphasis on rhythm and lyrical content, Women and Children First in 1980 showed a more drastic movement toward lighter rock through the hit "Everybody Wants Some". Fair Warning was an attempt by the group at an album with lighter lyrics and heavy cymbals, producing a lighter sound far removed from their first album. Their last album, Diver Down, was even further on the side of popular based rock. The group had moved from the old mainline of guitars and vocals to a sporadic rhythm resembling new wave. Now, with 1984, Van Halen is starting to move back to their original heavy metal line-up. Although not as raw as early attempts, the music is similar to much of today's heavy metal music. "Jump" is really the blacksheep of the album, which has appealed to the populus for its top 40 sound.

Original group members, David Lee Roth (lead vocals), Alex Van Halen (drums, percussion, vocals), Edward Van Halen (guitar, keyboards, vocals), and Michael Anthony (bass, vocals) have developed an album which will, at least in the history books, go down as one of their best so far.

One of the songs on 1984 which I would rate as excellent, and very 'Van Halen-like', is "Panama". This song combines the skillful guitar work of Edward Van Halen with the changing vocal patterns of Roth. "Girls Gone Bad" is a great song which includes slower guitar work with fast drumming and harsh vocals. Another good cut is "House of Pain" which tends to be a little hard and fast, but slows down in parts to allow the listener to regain his breath. Background keyboards appear in many songs and add a new twist to the music. Still present is the superb rock guitar work which has helped Van Halen compete with the top heavy metal groups.

Overall, I would rate the album as very good-moderate heavy metal track with enough mellow music to make it appealing to most rock and roll fans. The sound quality of the album is good, and the producer, Ted Templeman has minimized the use of echo in the mixing process.

It seems as though Van Halen, with 1984, has finally regained the power to make heavy metal with class. Even Roth's screams seem sincere!

clearly, and began his trek across town.

When Al realized the smell was coming from the Fiberglas plant, he almost went into shock. All those lights, all those strange noises . . . it could only be a gnome house of ill repute! He heard human voices as well and shuddered at the thought. Gnomes and humans . . . it was too much. He had to get out of this town.

On the way out, of course, he stopped at Mr. Donut (scratch and sniff that mucky looking stuff around this column's logo) for a bit of nourishment. Sitting at the counter, he overheard some men talk about work over at Fiberglas. Fiberglas . . . where had he heard that before? Of course! That's what is said over the gnome house of ill repute. Disgusting! Talking about it out in the open! But why was it called Fiberglas? Was that some sort of Huntingdon lingo or simply a misgnomer?

The more the men talked, the more disgusted Al got. Why, they talked about it as if it were a factory or something! About to become ill from his double chocolate donut (scratch and sniff this week's editorial for a more specific donut smell), Al could contain himself no longer.

"Have you no respect for gnomes?" he shouted. "Treating them as if they were objects!"

"Hey buddy, we were just talking about Fiberglas . . . "

"I know that! Poor female gnomes, probably half of them teenagers off the street . . . "

"What female gnomes?"

"At Fiberglas! Don't tell me they aren't there, I can smell them!"

"Man, all you're smelling is the fiberglass."

"Hunh!"

"There ain't no female gnomes over there, just the fiberglass. We make the stuff."

Yes friends, Al felt pretty foolish about that one, and was especially distraught that man had been able to recreate the female scent without even meaning to, or caring. He left Huntingdon, vowing never to return. He was depressed and, well, frankly, frustrated after a day of anticipation. He considered moving to California.

Al fell asleep under his favorite hemlock back on Tussey Mountain that night (scratch and sniff the bottom of this page for lovely pine odors), only to awake to a firebreathing dragon the next morning. But that, readers, is another story.

P.S. The scratch and sniff story you've just read was, of course, experimental. Any technical difficulties lie with the printer. The writer hereby denounces all responsibility for the failure of special effects.

Phase 9 Rocks Campus

by Kathy Manzella

Phase 9 rocked the coffee house crowd at Catharsis last Tuesday night. Lead Vocalist Jim Younkin opened the show with an energetic version of "That's What I Like About You," by the Romantics.

The band performed songs from many different groups including Van Halen, Def Leppard, Night Ranger, and Pink Floyd, among others. Lee Canfield played the lead guitar for Phase 9, accompanied by Grant Angeny on bass. Joe D'Amico rounded off the guitarist and John Ashman was on drums. The instrumentals were especially good during "White Wedding" and "Here She Comes Again."

Debbie Richael sang back up vocals during the second set of songs. She accompanied Younkin during "You're My Girl" and Def Leppard's "Foolin."

The audience grew more lively as the evening wore on. To conclude their show, the members of Phase 9 asked for volunteers from the audience to sing while they performed rhythm and blues music. Several students wandered to the stage to meet their challenge. One student sang the SVS blues. Members of the audience literally rose to the occasion by chair dancing.

Expert Discusses Chinese Policy

Relations between the United States and China will be the topic of the next Baker Lecture at Juniata College Wednesday, April 11.

Dr. Chong-Sik Lee, professor of political science at the University of Pennsylvania, will speak on "China and the United States: An Uneasy Friendship" at 8:15 p.m. in the Ellis Hall faculty lounge. The public is invited to attend this free program.

Raised in Korea and China, Dr. Lee came to the United States in 1954. He received his A.B. and M.A. degrees from the University of California at Los Angeles and his Ph.D. from the University of California at Berkeley.

Dr. Lee joined the University of Pennsylvania faculty in 1963 after teaching at Dartmouth College, the University of Colorado and the University of California at Berkeley.

In addition to his teaching duties, Dr. Lee is chairman of the graduate program in International Relations and director of the Anspach Institute on Diplomacy and Foreign Affairs, both at the University of Pennsylvania. He also is a member of the Task Force on Equal Educational Opportunity and Quality Education of the Pennsylvania Higher Education Planning Commission and the Northeast Asia Council of the Association for Asian Studies.

In 1974, Dr. Lee won the Woodrow Wilson Foundation Award of the American Political Science Association for his book "Communism in Korea." The award recognizes the best government, politics or international affairs book published in the United States.

Dr. Lee has been the recipient of several scholarships and research grants and is the author of 10 books. His numerous articles have been published in such publications as "Asian Survey," "China Quarterly," "Journal of International Affairs" and "Journal of Asian Studies."

Varsity Indoor Soccer Tourney

by Chuck Kreutzberger
and
Tom Visosky

On March 25, 6 members of the Juniata soccer team and their coach, Klaus Jaeger, traveled to Shippensburg State University to play in a 30-team indoor tournament. Representing Juniata were: freshman Chuck Kreutzberger, sophomores Tom "Rat" Visosky, juniors Russ Leberman, Sean Ruth, and Eric Cremer, and senior Gary Steckley.

The team was drawn in a five team group and played four intense 15 minute games. JC's first game was against defending champions Ken Wilson's Sports Circle. The fiasco ended in a 5-0 loss for JC. Juniata was clueless in this game, having never played indoor soccer of this type. The goals were one-third the JC indoor goals, and the games were faster paced than the team was used to. These factors, plus the amazing teamwork of the Ken Wilson team, contributed to Juniata's woes.

After a twenty minute break, Juniata faced a Harrisburg club called The Lancers. Juniata's play improved but their efforts fell short in a tough 4-2 defeat. Both Juniata goals came from the feet of Tom "Rat" Visosky, and were assisted by Eric Cremer. But the team's play still had room for improvement.

Game three, forty minutes later, was against Susquehanna University, a team Juniata had never beaten in soccer. Play was fairly even and of good quality. Juniata opened the scoring with Visosky netting his third goal of the afternoon, as the SU goalie erroneously threw the ball to Visosky, who promptly deposited the ball in the back of the net. The half ended with JC in front 1-0. The second half was much the same, with spectacular play by goalie Russ Leberman, and the defensive duo of Kreutzberger and Steckley. The game clinching goal occurred when player-coach Klaus Jaeger made a pretty pass to Visosky, who was cherry-picking in front of the net. "The Rat" directed the pass around the on-rushing goalie into the net. The team, although tired, held on valiantly for a 2-0 win.

Juniata's group was finally shaping up as they prepared to enter their fourth and most important game, against Bloomsburg ST., a Division II school who defeated Juniata 3-1 in outdoor play. With a 1-2 record, Juniata needed to win by at least 4 goals to advance in tournament play. Early in the first half, things started looking up for JC. Strong play by captain Sean Ruth helped JC on their quest. And it seemed that luck had finally shone on Juniata, as Visosky got his 5th goal of the afternoon. It was a lucky one, as Visosky knocked the ball in with his elbow, while the referee was watching a girl bend over for a drink at a nearby water fountain. The goal stood and JC was up 1-0. But Juniata tired, and Bloomsburg equalized on a breakaway goal of the end of the first half. The second half materialized into a dogfight, as Juniata struggled to get the needed amount of goals. In spite of numerous opportunities, JC's efforts fell short when with 30 seconds left in the game, a Bloomsburg free kick caromed off Ruth's foot, and through the legs of an outstretched Leberman, who was reacting to the original shot and not the carom. Thus ended the afternoon for JC.

All in all, the day was rewarding. The tough competition gave Juniata much needed experience. The team was the first JC team to participate in an indoor tournament, and their efforts can only be an indication of better Juniata soccer teams.

I.M. Hockey

by Andy Hiscock

The 1984 Spring I.M. Indoor Hockey season is into its third full week of competition, and already I can see that the race for the top four play-off berths will go down to the wire. As it stands now, there are no teams with undefeated records remaining out of the seven teams making up the league. With the games played before Sunday, April 1st recorded, the "Black Knights" and the "K-Town Tilts" are tied for first place with identical 3 wins, 1 loss records.

In Hockey action on Sunday, March 25th, the "Black Knights" defeated "The Blunder Dogs" (5-2), with Greg Lomax getting two goals. "K-Town Tilts" beat "Point Breeze" with Glenn Hineman netting two of his own. Also on Sunday, "Gumless Yaks" beat "Walstib" (2-1). On Monday the 26th, the "King and His Court" defeated "K-Town Tilts" (3-0); and "Walstib" beat "The Blunder Dogs" (2-0).

In continuing action on Wed., March 28th "The Blunder Dogs" beat "Gumless Yaks" (4-3), with Bill Crouse getting two goals for the Dogs; and "The Black Knights" handily defeated "The King and His Court" (6-0) with Paul Peditto netting 3 and Greg Lomax picking up two goals for the Knights. To round out the week's action, "The K-Town Tilts" cooled off "The Black Knights" by defeating them (7-0)

by Scott Stephenson

At last the heralded spring has issued forth from the frigid blasts of icy weather that resulted in numerous snowmen and a snowball-obstructed Arch last week. Once more the dorm-bound Juniatians are free to traipse the great outdoors. Your faithful reporter-at-large (that's me) embarked on a great canoe expedition last weekend to find out if there really is life upstream from Huntingdon.

Accompanied by two faithful co-explorers, Todd (Bucky) Arnette and Brian (Ache) Achey, and a state of the art Laughing Bush canoe (more on that later), we embarked on our monumental journey. After securing motor transportation to a spot on the river near Petersburg (no, you probably won't find a branch store of Loydds of London or any GQ models there) we pushed off into the swirling, flood stage waters of our beloved Juniata River.

The first mile or so of our trip was uneventful, save a few shots at passing ducks with our trusty paddles/pseudo-shotguns. We rounded the corner, or should I say bend, near a herd of inquisitive looking bovines (cows to the uneducated) and there for us to behold was the Zanadu of local Romeos (an abandoned shack with three rooms, three beds, and numerous "accessories" which make Goodyear stockholders grin from ear to ear). Needless to say, we exited this paradise before the proprietors perforated us with the same stuff they shoot at waterfowl in the fall.

Our speedy exit downstream brought us to the second wonder of the Huntingdon world, The Warrior Ridge Carp Club. This fraternity of fishermen have established a lovely riverside vacation paradise to cater to the gentleman carp fisherman. Anyhow, it is immediately below The Warrior Ridge Carp Club that near disaster struck.

Spying a concrete abutment projecting out into the water, we immediately engaged into a lengthy discussion about its meaning. While I am all in favor of long discussions, that particular time was not entirely appropriate, for our heated debating drowned out the sound of roaring waters pouring over a large obstacle (that is, in a word, a dam). After determining that we were indeed faced with a rapid drop of water ahead, the topic of discussion rapidly turned to the potential height of the dam in question. One faction was all in favor of paddling over the dam, assuming all the time that it couldn't be over a few feet high since it wasn't on the map. Well, fortunately we spotted the power station in time to deduce that we faced a BIG dam as opposed to a little dam. To make a story of medium length short, the map maker must have something else on his mind when he was drawing that area, because that "little dam" was taller than the dorm I live in. We managed to portage around the dam dam and shoot the rapids below, all the time ignoring the water that was creeping into the bottom of the raft, unnoticed in the exhilaration of the moment.

Well, about those state of the art canoes; ours evidently had been used as a sidelines bench at a Lesher semi-formal because its width had been reduced to about half its original size, affecting its stability significantly. What this all boils down to is that the Juniata River is definitely not warm enough for the raft regatta quite yet.

Anyway, I hope you all take advantage of the great weather and stay on dry land for another month or so. Next week we'll examine the physical properties of studying for mid-terms with Frisbee, Hackee-Sac, and lacrosse stick, until then, Keep on Kanoeing.

Soccer Preview

by John D'Alessandro

While trying to write this week's column on I.M. Indoor Soccer, I thought to myself what am I going to write about. Since play hasn't started yet, this presented quite a problem, but then it hit me. What better way to start off then by doing a preview. So here goes nothing.

Indoor Soccer will be even more exciting than last term. This is the result of a major rule change. Last term each team was allowed to have 6 players on the field at a time, this term only 5 will be allowed. This rule was changed for two reasons. First, it is supposed to open up the scoring some. Nice for everyone, but the goalie. Also, it is supposed to cut down on the physical contact. Apparently a few games were plagued by a lot of rough play.

Four teams make up the field for this term's Indoor Soccer schedule. Competition will be a double round-robin. All the regular season games will be played at either 9:00 or 10:00. All but three will be played on Tuesdays. The top three teams will qualify for the playoffs, with the No. 1 team reaching the finals through a bye. The other two qualifiers will play for the right to play in the championship game.

One team appears to have a slight edge in the running for this term's title. My pre-season favorite is a team called Cerebrums. My reasoning is thus, because the team is made up of last term's championship players, and should fare quite well this term. They will not have it easy as all four teams are evenly matched. Finally, for those into fast-paced action, this team's competition will provide it. It's worth a visit to check out a game. You never know what will happen.

General Westmoreland debated Harvey Wasserman on the issue of nuclear arms freeze last Wednesday night in front of a packed auditorium in Alumni Hall.

Nuclear Debate Fills Alumni Hall

by Paul Bomberger

Approximately 300 people filled Alumni Hall last Wednesday night for a hot debate between General William C. Westmoreland, former commander of U.S. troops in Vietnam and Harvey Wasserman, journalist and anti-nuclear activist. Both men addressed the nuclear freeze issue and expounded on nuclear arms.

Westmoreland favors building up the U.S. nuclear weapons. He contends that if Reagan is re-elected and allowed to follow his military spending plans for nuclear weapons, there won't be a need for a nuclear freeze program.

Wasserman, on the other hand, supports a nuclear freeze. During the debate his primary thesis was that both the U.S. and the U.S.S.R. have sufficient nuclear arms at the present time. He argued that an increase in our nuclear arsenal is unfeasible when both super-powers are at such a standoff.

After each speaker presented his viewpoint on nuclear arms, time was allotted for each to rebute the other's position. Following the rebuttals, which exceeded the time limitations, a question and answer period finished off the debate. Professors, students and townspeople made up the audience which responded exceptionally well with questions for the men.

A native of South Carolina, Westmoreland is a graduate of the U.S. Military Academy at West Point and attended the Harvard Business School. He has fought in 17 battle campaigns in three wars, received four Distinguished Service Medals, and has been decorated by 16 foreign countries.

Wasserman is one of the leading authorities on nuclear energy and the detrimental effects of radiation on modern civilization. As a journalist, he has written for The New York Times, Los Angeles Times, Boston Globe, Mother Jones, and Rolling Stone. He has also authored several books on the nuclear war issue.

Linda Fultz and Kip Benko co-chaired the lecture series committee and were pleased with the outcome of the lecture. Says Fultz, "I was happy to see the large turn-out and hope that everyone who went got a lot out of the debate."

Shakespearean Production Receives Splendid Praise

by Mark E. Hudson

Luise Van Keuren embarked on the production of Shakespeare's "The Winter's Tale" this past week utilizing the talents of students, college faculty and staff, and community participants. This "Town and Gown Production" was presented as part of the ongoing Shakespeare Celebration at Juniata. The play not only provided an evening of high drama and laughter for the many who viewed it, but also proved the potential which exists in town and college cooperation. The play was well cast, and the props, costumes, music and set added to this evening of Shakespearian entertainment.

"The Winter's Tale" is a story of contrasts, of destruction and rebirth in the vivid tragic pattern. The first half of the play is intensely tragic, beginning abruptly with the vivid development of King Leontes' (David Merwine) unreasonable, yet fierce jealousy over Queen Hermione's (Bridget Berich) relationship with King Polixenes (Tim Dibble). David Merwine's interpretation and development of King Leontes drew the audience directly into his struggle with intense unjust anger. We felt the fury which Leontes felt in his jealousy through brilliant development and interpretation of Shakespeare's writing. Nabil Mark as Mamillius added contrast as his honest innocence pervaded his character. Nabil showed surprising poise and presence in the development of Mamillius, previewing the potential of this young actor. Jeanne Nagurny, another community participant, brought a rich interpretation of Paulina to the stage as her presence permeated the scenes with her fiesty, spirited character.

Out of the tragic destruction brought on by Leontes' jealousy, new life is born in the countryside. The abandoned daughter of Leontes is rescued from the clutches of nature by the good and honest shepherd, portrayed by Howard Crouch, and his son, portrayed by Jay Jones. These characters provide a much needed relief from the intense tragedy of the first half of the play, and their characters are well portrayed. (I wouldn't be surprised to see Dr. Crouch herding sheep across campus after his convincing and consistent portrayal of the shepherd.) To unravel the many knots tied into this story, Shakespeare employs Autolycus (Dan Weston), a rogue whose wit and talent charmed the audience. The humor and wit of this rogue peddler is displayed well in Dan Weston's characterization and carries the audience into the bright and colorful world of the country.

The country setting stands as a symbol of new life, in contrast with the horrors of the court of Leontes. The King's daughter, Perdita (Joanne Hochberg), who has been adopted out of compassion by the shepherd, wins Prince Florizel's heart by the beauty, innocence, and virtue of her youth. Joanne Hochberg as Perdita and Stephen Meyer as Florizel were well cast and worked with extreme ease together. Perdita's blossom-

Juniata Women Honored

by Linda Ramsay

May flowers, early sunrises and the traditional May Day breakfast will be waiting for us as we return from spring break.

The second Tuesday morning back from break, May 1, Baker Refectory and the May Day committee will entertain and honor the women of Juniata College. Besides being served breakfast by volunteer male waiters, the women of Juniata will be represented by nine women, two from each class, as the May Day Court.

The student-elected man and woman of the year will also be honored at the breakfast. The nominations for man of the year are: Ron Renzini, Chris "Corky" Collins, Dave Sloan, Jeff Rush, Greg Kimble, Mark Shaw, Bob Adamek, Joe Whitacre, and Jim Adams. Each woman on the court will be escorted by one of these men.

Elections for the May Day Court will be held the 25th and 26th at lunch and dinner. The nominees will submit an entry to be hung in Ellis representing themselves in a unique way. The submissions can be a combination of pictures and words, or activities that the nominee has been involved in and will be displayed throughout the week.

Nominated seniors include Roxanne Binner, Karyn Cable, Carola Gaertner, Alyson Pfister, and Terrie Squires. Woman of the year and two attendents for the court will be elected from these five.

Juniors nominated for the court include Beth Gallagher, Deb Maue, Fran Fry, and Lisa Greiss. Shelly Weader, Cinny Cooper, Missie Iezzi and Cheryl Kimbough are

I.M.'s: Where has the Fun Gone?

Bruised and battered. From the looks of some of the players, you might think they have just returned from a gang fight. Guess again. They've just finished a typical intramural hockey game.

Hockey action this term has indeed added to previous notions that the intramural sports program here at Juniata has taken a turn for the worse. One can barely watch any game in any intramural sport that the unsportsmanlike conduct doesn't overshadow the game.

This past Monday night's hockey game is a perfect example. The violence of this game culminated in a fist fight between the referee and one of the players. In the end, the members of both teams agreed that the referee was at fault and was not competent enough to ref the game.

Events such as these are not unique to hockey. Last term's team handball and basketball saw unnecessary violence and fighting due to discrepancies with the score-keeping and regulating of the game. More and more, we are forced to take a closer look at what the intramural program has become.

Intramurals have turned into animalistic competition where both teams are out for one thing — "the thrill of victory" — even if it means getting violent. While intramurals are designed to provide the college community with non-varsity sports for healthy competition, exercise, and fun, the sports have drifted on an unhealthy course. The real purpose has been lost in the drive to win.

The Juniatian attributes this change of course to the poor regulation of intramural activity. Spelled out, the referees are incompetent; rules are inconsistent; events such as those in Monday night's game are ignored by the intramural department.

Undoubtedly, it is the intramural department's job to see that intramural activity runs smoothly. The time has come for them to take tighter hold of the reigns and steer the intramural program back on the course it was intended. Recruiting referees who at least know the rules of the game, who are at least competent enough to handle out of control situations, who will be consistent with their calls, should be step one in remedying the problem.

With tighter control there will be less opportunity for violence and more opportunity for what intramurals were intended — to have fun.

ALONG MUDDY RUN

by Alyson Pfister

With another break right around the corner, one can't help but begin to think about all the things that go along with going home for the first time in six weeks.

First of all, unless you've already established a consistent ride, you're going to have to find a way home. About a week before break, the signs go up in Ellis. For some reason there's always a disproportionately lower number of rides offered than rides needed, but I haven't heard any real bad stories about people getting stuck here (although I have had that feeling myself sometimes). We should all thank Amtrak, at least the due East- and Westerners among us.

As we all know, only too well, all professors like to make clean breaks (excuse the pun), so that ten-page paper is due the morning right after your second test. All this cramming inevitably leads to a dirty room, which ought to be cleaned because who likes to come back to a dirty room? Now time for cleaning the room has to be squeezed into an already tight schedule. It usually gets partially done, at least; that's why most cars leave later than they had originally hoped. Everybody is busy tidying up as they pack.

The ride home is usually pretty much the same, except maybe for some minor details like who you ride with, but you always end up home.

As you approach the house, the whole neighborhood starts to reshape in your head. At least mine does. I seem to forget just exactly what the neighborhood looks like, and sometimes things do change. I can understand forgetting just what everything looked like but I cannot understand why, for the first three hours of every break, I always feel like a guest in the house in which I grew up. The dog jumps on me just like always and things are usually pretty much the same, but for some reason . . . I don't know why, but for some reason I feel like I never lived there. I don't know if anyone can sense it but myself, but sometimes I think they can. Especially when you slip and call Juniata "home" by mistake in front of your mother.

Remember the first time you did that? Probably during your freshman year, and I bet your mother bummed. I bet as soon as she was sure that's what you said her face drew a hurt blank, right? Shock almost. She was probably feeling pretty bad because maybe she really was losing her baby after all. You know how mothers are. After the first time, though, it probably didn't hit her as hard, and hopefully the guilt trip was smaller the second time around. My mother is used to it now, so the guilt trips have been shrinking, but I'm sure it still throws her for a loop, just like all mothers.

So break is over and your laundry is done and you've had a few real good home-cooked meals (oh, how I hate to leave those meals behind!) that's when the fun begins — packing the car for the return trip. I suppose it must be the nature of college students but everyone I've ever driven back with has taken more back to college than they drove home with, especially at Christmas time. The problem here is obvious. How to fit five people, three pets, one guitar and complete accessories for all of the above into a medium-sized Malibu for a four hour ride is not an easy problem to solve, but college students everywhere manage it all the time. I wonder if Guiness is aware of the potential here?

To stick with that beloved Juniata element, the expected, I sup-

Dana Smith, Junior: "It's affected the way I'm paying, I'll have to borrow more money next year."

Dr. Jay Buchanan

As we conclude our series of articles on stress management, let's focus in on what Dr. Karl Albrecht, an organizational development consultant and pioneer in stress-reduction training for business managers, refers to as the wellness triad. The wellness triad is consistent with the current emphasis on the total well-being of individuals, that is, a holistic approach to managing one's life.

According to Albrecht, the key to the concept of holistic health is assumption of responsibility. "By taking complete responsibility for your health, you become obligated to yourself to act and live in ways that will guarantee your own total wellness," says Albrecht.

The wellness triad, then, consists of the factors of relaxation, exercise and diet (RED). These three factors are mutually supportive of each other and form what Albrecht calls a "synergistic whole." Each of the three factors reinforces and enhances the other. By way of example, being able to relax may help to reduce the anxiety that leads to over-eating. Exercising on a regular basis may lead to greater relaxation and better eating habits. A balanced diet may make exercising easier as we begin to feel better physically and emotionally.

Let's briefly examine the three factors in Albrecht's wellness triad.

1. Relaxation — includes any activity that helps to relieve the stress associated with one's daily activities. Examples might be engaging in a hobby, taking a leisurely walk, listening to music (preferably soft and relaxing), and something as simple as putting your feet up on your desk and thinking pleasant thoughts.

2. Exercise — engaging in an activity that arouses your whole body, requires that you breathe heavily, and generally requires a high expenditure of energy. Activities such as handball, racquetball, jogging and IM's are a few examples.

3. Diet — all that we put into our bodies, including medications, caffeine, alcohol, and junk food. As we all know, balance and moderation are keys to a good diet.

The holistic approach will help all of us to be more stress-resistant and indeed better able to handle the stress that is part of all our lives.

Binder Raises Money

by Beth Gallagher

The Binder Natatorium promises excitement this spring when Juniata holds its first ever Save-a-Life Swim for the American Cancer Society.

The fund raiser is scheduled for Monday May 7 at 1:00 p.m. when the swimming attraction will be none the less President Binder himself. Dr. Binder will be swimming laps for amounts of money pledged by students, faculty, and staff. President Binder plans to swim at least one mile which is sixty-four laps.

Dr. David Eyman, Director of Libraries, is in charge of the event. Eyman has high hopes that the event will have a good turn out and that the American Cancer Society will reap large benefits, too. Circle-K is also involved with the event, as they are campaigning to generate the pledges.

Presently, Dr. Binder is the only one scheduled to swim in the Save-a-Life Swim; however, Dr Eyman encourages students who might be willing to swim to contact him. Anyone interested in pledging money for the Save-a-Life Swim may also contact Dr. Eyman.

J.C. Students Receive Internships

Nine Juniata College seniors, including three foreign exchange students, are participating in spring term internships with area businesses.

According to James R. Donaldson, assistant professor of economics and business administration, the internship program provides "real world" training for the students to bridge the gap between academic work and their future business careers.

"The program is a meaningful experience for both the firms and the students," Donaldson said. "The firms benefit by having studies conducted and projects completed which otherwise might not be accomplished. Often interns bring to the firm fresh ideas and the latest in problem-solving techniques providing management with a valuable, productive resource." The internships run for 10 weeks.

LeeAnne R. Ardan, a production and computer science major from Shamokin, is spending her internship at the Mid-State Bank Operations Center in Bellwood. She is heading an evaluation project that will analyze the current use and handling of a database called the Customer Information File and make recommendations for its future use.

Penn Central National Bank in Huntingdon is receiving assistance from Estelle Decherf of Lille, France. A business administration, finance and marketing major, Miss Decherf is evaluating the effectiveness of the two new "Penny" automated teller machines and conducting a cost-profit analysis of processing a new loan application.

Linda A. Fultz of Lewistown is working with the Valley Rural Electric Cooperative in Huntingdon. A business and computer programming major, Miss Fultz is using cost accounting to develop an efficiency report comparing the ing, spontaneous, yet modest ways were well presented by Hochberg and the courage of her true princess nature were well demonstrated when she encountered the difficulties of love. The intimacy of her habits and her poetic expression contrasted well with the rash ravings of her father Leontes.

As in many of Shakespeare's plays of this time, "The Winter's Tale" has a happy ending of reconciliation and rebirth. Other fine performances were presented by Tim Dibble as King Polixenes, Bridget Berich as Queen Hermione, and Robert Hileman as Camillo. The entire staff, cast, and crew desire high applause for this splendid, professional production of this complex story.

Out & About

by Bettina Tweardy

Tired of dripping wet trays, all-purpose patties and granola concoctions? Have you had your fill of OIP pizzas and "Mickey D" burgers? Are you searching for a Huntingdon restaurant with a little ambiance? Well, the Colonial Hotel Restaurant may be for you.

Once you adjust your eyes to the dim lights and squint through the smokey haze, you'll see that the restaurant has a definitely relaxing atmosphere. The walls and floor are done in earthy tones of orange and brown. Wall-mounted candles provide a soft amber glow; the dim lighting enhancing the decor.

For the steak lover, Friday or Saturday is the night to go. The highly rated Prime Rib is on special for just $10.95. This entree includes appetizer, salad, steak and choice of baked potato, fries or rice pilaf. A few words of advice: unless you like greasy, rubbery, brown fries, order the rice or potato.

The Colonial has a limited but good selection of appetizers, including the reputedly delicious Clams Casino, the popular shrimp cocktail and a fantastic French Onion soup. (It's great — lots of creamy cheese and not too many onions!)

Although the salads are good, they're nothing to rave about — just your typical tossed salads, lettuce, tomatoes, etc. Perhaps one of the restaurant's best features is its piping hot bread and whipped butter, served just after the salads.

In addition to numerous steak entrees, the menu includes a couple of chicken dishes and the usual broiled seafood fare. King Crab Legs, Lobster Pot, Shrimp Scampi, several fresh fish fillets, a broiled seafood platter and of course, Surf 'n' Turf are all available.

The complete dinners range in price from $7.95 to $14.95. With a tip, the bill could be as low as $25, but with drinks, appetizers and desserts, it may go as high as $40. (Bleu cheese dressing is 35 cents extra — high class joint!)

Service at the Colonial could be rated from O.K. to poor. Although the relaxed pace is not quite slow, the waitress wasn't quite friendly either! (Although the other ones seemed quite nice!)

Unfortunately the poor ventilation, small size of the restaurant itself and a high percentage of smoking patrons contributed to the smoke-filled air. This can ruin an otherwise enjoyable meal for a non-smoker who is annoyed by the "noxious fumes" of others' cigarettes.

Overall, the Colonial Hotel Restaurant isn't bad; for Huntingdon, that is. The atmosphere is probably the best in town; the food is pretty good; the prices are reasonable. But if you want a really nice dinner, have the time and a car, try the Tavern at State, or maybe . . . .

Student Affairs Council Discusses Opposition

by Cinny Cooper

Opposition to a spring "Mountain Day" was discussed by faculty, students, and administrators at last week's meeting of the Student Affairs Council.

The idea for this event stemmed from a class project in Small Group Decision Making, taught by Prof. Briggs Cinny Cooper, Tracey DeBlase, Janine Kolonich, Becky Parker, and Keith Smith came up with this event as an answer to a problem they perceived in lack of campus unity. Since the project has been carried out of class, Smith has become the chairperson.

Prof. Rhodes from the computer science department conveyed the faculty's opposition to the idea. He and other professors expressed discontent with the event be given a mid-week scheduling, citing it as an academic distraction.

Smith's response to this complaint and to a suggestion that the event be held on a weekend was firm. The whole idea of a spring "Mountain Day," he explained, is to "drop the books" for a day and take some academic pressure off. His belief is that a weekend date would defeat the event's purpose.

Rory McAvoy, outgoing Student Government president, described any outright refusal of the plan as a "slap on the wrist" to students who are trying to do something new for the campus. Before going to a closed session, she urged the Council members to remember that a denial of this event would be a form of discouragement for other student-enacted projects.

This proposal is still being discussed. No final decision or plan has been decided upon.

Health Fair Comes

by Beth Gallagher

The Juniata College Student Health Center, with the help of Scalpel and Probe, will conduct a Health Fair on Wednesday, April 25 on the Memorial Gym Mezzanine from 11 a.m. to 5 p.m.

The Health Fair is an attempt by the J.C. Health Center to combat the rising costs of health care by presenting information on preventive health measures. It is a means of providing the college community with medical tests, services, and information for better health. In the last four years, Juniata has sponsored three Health Fairs, although Jane Brown, head nurse and coordinator of the program, hopes to see the Health Fair become a bi-annual event.

Approximately 14 different agencies and associations will set up booths on the Mezzanine to offer a variety of information and testing to students, faculty and staff — all at no charge.

Some of the features of this year's Health Fair are blood pressure testing conducted by the PA Department of Health, hearing screening by the Easter Seals Society, oral and soft-tissue screening by the Huntingdon County Dental Association, and TB Tine testing by the Central Pennsylvania Lung and Health Service.

The American Cancer Society will also be on hand to provide cancer risk assessment and information, along with the American Heart Association which will conduct heart evaluations. J.C. Blair Hospital's Dietician will be prepared to give nutritional advice in addition to checking height and weight. Furthermore, Juniata's Committee for Alcohol Studies in Education (CASE) plans to present a program on drugs and alcohol.

One of the highlights of this year's fair is a display that will be set up by the Health Farm, a health foods store in Huntingdon. The Health Farm intends to display information on health foods with the possibility of sampling some of its products. They also will be holding make-up demonstrations using some of the natural make-up which they sell.

The Health Center was able to recruit some other new agencies to come to the Health Fair. The Tri-Center Mid-Wifery Service is preparing a booth on alternative methods of delivery, and Human Life Education plans to distribute information, too.

The list of agencies that will be represented goes on to include the Family Planning Center and the March of Dimes. The center is

by Amy Smith

Tradition continues at Juniata with the annual Mud Volleyball/Raft Regatta weekend on April 27th and 28th.

The mud volleyball competition, sponsored by the Juniata Executive Club, will start off the weekend early Friday afternoon. Dinnertime on Thursday is the last chance to sign up a team to participate in this event. The game schedule will be made up over break and will be distributed to team captains upon returning to Juniata. In addition, a captains' meeting will be scheduled to discuss the possibility of arranging for team members to help clear the rocks from the playing area. V103 will be providing music for the event and t-shirts (logo designed by John Ploumis) will be awarded to the winning team.

Noon on Saturday marks the scheduled start of the raft excursion down the Juniata River. About 75 rafts are expected to be entered this year. Numerous businesses have donated materials for students to use for building their rafts. These will be available in South's parking lot after break on a first come/first serve basis. Students are therefore urged to bring back building supplies from home if possible.

Regulations have been established and a list has been given to the team captains. Breaking these rules will result in a $50 fine. No glass bottles or styrofoam rafts will be permitted in the water. Parking vehicles at the beginning or end sites of the trip will be prohibited. Transportation will be provided. Student vehicles can be used to haul materials to the starting point, but they must be removed immediately after unloading. Life preservers will be required — every passenger must have one. Preservers will be provided for students, but guests must supply their own.

The raindate for this year's regatta is set for May 12.

Student Gov't. Discusses "Spring Fling" Proposal

by Joy Hadley

Senior Keith Smith's proposal for a "Spring Fling" dominated the discussions at the April 3 Student Government meeting.

The idea for the Spring Fling originated from the Small Group Decision Making class. "We felt that Juniata had a negative attitude and we were looking for ways to overcome this apathy," said Smith, "so a suggestion was made for a type of Spring Mountain Day, something to bring the entire campus together, the students, the administration and the faculty."

Tentatively scheduled for Wednesday, April 25, the Spring Fling would be held on campus and most of the activities would take place on North's lawn. The main events would include a chicken barbecue, a bonfire in South's parking lot, and live music to be provided by Juniata's Phase 9, with the possibility that V103 might broadcast outside. Also traditional Juniata beverages would be restricted to the lounges of North, Sherwood, and Tussey-Terrace.

Funding was the major problem in the planning of the event. The project received a $400.00 contribution from Centerboard, and after much debate by the Student Government Senate, a motion passed to give the Spring Fling Committee $400.00. However, the Committee must supply a detailed budget to Student Government and also use Student Government's name in any advertisements.

In other Student Government news: After a meeting with Financial Aid Director, Larry Bock, Tim McCarthy, representing the College Governance Committee, reported that "Name scholarships are exchanged with other funds from a student's financial aid package, however all money which is allocated to the Financial Aid Office is spent." McCarthy explained that such an exchange is beneficial because more students are able to receive finacial aid.

Greg Kimble voiced his concern about the theft occurring in the Science Center, and he also brought up the fact that the coffeehouses in Sherwood seem to be getting out of hand. He asked that Student Government check into possible solutions for these problems.

Student Government scheduled its next meeting for Thursday, April 26, at 8:30 p.m., which will mark the first official meeting of the new Student Government administration.

Room Selection for 1984-85 Scheduled

by Steve Creps

Once again it's that time of year when Juniatians must decide where and with whom they want to spend their next year of college. Some of us have already chosen to live off-campus. Others have their eyes set on East Houses apartments. And the rest of us are looking to get into our favorite dorm (be it Cloister, South, or Tussey-Terrace). Whatever your choice may be, here is an outline of the policies, deadlines, and important information regarding this year's room selection process.

Before any room or apartment can be secured there are a few requirements which must be fulfilled. First, one's registration deposit of $200 must be paid. Second, one's Fall term registration must be completed. Finally, all outstanding college debts must be paid in full. This includes bookstore bills, tuition, room, board, lab fees, fines, and damage charges. Once these requirements are met, then one can proceed to secure a room.

If a student and his roommate want to keep the same room next year, the process is simple. Simply notify the Housing Office prior to May 4, 1984. Both registration deposit receipts and both signed housing agreements must be presented at this time.

Students who are interested in living in a suite or multiple occupancy room must submit a list of names and class status (as of the beginning of spring term) to the Housing Office by May 4. All registration deposit receipts and signed housing agreements must be submitted at this time. A representative from each group will participate in a room drawing on Monday, May 7, at 6:30 p.m. in Alumni Hall.

Priority will be based on the class composition of the group. Current Juniors will be assigned a value of 3; current sophomores, 2; current Freshmen, 1. The selecting representative of each group should consult with his/her prospective roommates, in order to have alternative choices should the group's first choice apartment or suite not be available. Students who do not secure a place in the drawing may regroup and select a room during the regular room drawing.

The regular room drawings will be held on May 8-10, 1984, at 6:30 p.m. in Alumni Hall. The class of 1985 will choose on Tues. evening; the class of 1986 on Wed. evening; and the class of 1987 on Thurs. evening. All students will be assigned a lottery number which will be obtained by a computer generated random sample. The lowest priority number of the two roommate's number will take precedence. In order to select a room, the computer card indicating your lottery number, your registration deposit receipt, and your signed housing agreement must be presented at the sign-up desk.

All students should plan to select a roommate prior to or during room draw. (There are 4 designated singles for men.) Those students in need of a roommate should complete a form in the Housing Office. A list of people in need of roommates will be kept on file and should be checked period-

Nieto Co-authors Spanish Edition

A new Spanish translation of a book on the Reformation has brought together a Juniata College professor and a noted Harvard University scholar.

Dr. Jose C. Nieto, Mary S. Geiger, Professor of Religion and professor of history at Juniata College and Dr. George H. Williams, Hollis Professor of Divinity at Harvard, have co-authored the Spanish edition of "The Radical Reformation," a book written by Williams in 1962.

At the request of Williams, Nieto rewrote two chapters for the Spanish edition, completely revising the contents and adding new material. He also served as an adviser and co-author, actively contributing to the publication of the Spanish edition.

The two chapters Nieto wrote deal with the political, cultural and religious background of Spain before and up to the Reformation, and the impact Spanish religious thinkers, particularly Juan de Valdes and Michael Servetus, had on Italy.

A native of Spain, Nieto is a graduate of the University of Santiago de Compostela and the United Evangelical Seminary, both in Spain. He received his Th. M. and Ph.D. degrees from Princeton Theological Seminary, and has studied at Presbyterian College in Northern Ireland and Pontifical University in Spain. In 1981, he served as resident scholar at the University of Marburg, West Germany.

Wall Street Visited

by Ann Cameron

The Juniata Executives Club and Professor Kaminsky, advisor to the club, traveled to New York City to tour the New York Stock Exchange this past Friday. JEC had been planning the trip all year and the members who had earned the most points were given the first chance to go. Members earned points by attending club meetings and participating in club activities.

The group left Juniata for the Big Apple at 5:00 Friday morning. Six hours later they arrived at the World Trade Centers and were free to have lunch and to tour the area. Later in the afternoon they headed for Wall Street and the Stock Exchange. At the visitors center the club heard an explanation of the Stock Exchange and got to see the floor where trading takes place. The organized chaos of buying and selling stocks occurs weekdays from 10:00 to 4:00. Trading is done on an international basis so that brokers can make transactions for their customers on stocks anywhere in the nation. After the tour, the group boarded the bus for the very long ride back to Juniata College.

JEC also recently elected new officers. Members of the 1984-85 JEC Executive Board include: Rob Yelnosky, president; Trish Hocker, treasurer; and Norine Nightingale, secretary. Committee heads are Donna Nardy and Ann Cameron, Marketing; Darin McLean, Accounting; Jim Armstrong, Community Relations; Dave Wagner, Internal Relations; Tim Barnett and Steve Moyer, Activities; and Tracey Stough, Foreign Correspondent in Spain.

Internship Director Appointed

by Paul Bomberger

A director of conferences and internships has joined the college administration. Janice Swigant-Smith, former Air Force captain, has filled the new position.

Ms. Swigant-Smith's job requirements are twofold. She will try to provide more internship opportunities for students by serving as a liaison between various companies and the faculty. "Presently the business department is initiating more internships and I hope the other departments will do the same in the near future," she said.

Conferences are planned for the summer months to generate additional revenue for the college. "Eventually, we will have seminars and workshops given by prospective employers."

Ms. Swigant-Smith expressed her goals as . . . "developing a rapport with the community and businesses throughout Pennsylvania, Maryland, New York and the District of Columbia."

She received her Bachelor of Science degree in Biology from Northern Arizona University at Flagstaff in 1978. After graduation, she served 4½ years in the Air Force working as a supply and logistic plans officer.

Presently, Ms. Swigant-Smith resides in McConnellstown.

Certified Lifeguards In Demand

Anyone who plans to work as a lifeguard at a swimming pool in Pittsburgh or suburban Allegheny County this summer must be a "certified" lifeguard under a new County health law.

The Allegheny County Health Department reports that the law requires pools to employ certified lifeguards, who have advanced training in swimming, rescue techniques, cardiopulmonary resuscitation and first aid. Persons with "lifesaver" certificates, who have less training and previously were allowed to work as lifeguards, can no longer be employed in that capacity.

Students who want to work as lifeguards in Allegheny County but do not have the required skills are urged by health officials to enroll in an approved training program as soon as possible to obtain certification for this summer.

Accredited lifeguard training programs are offered by the Red Cross and the YMCA. Information about the programs and course schedules can be obtained by contacting either organization in Pittsburgh.

An estimated 1,200 to 1,500 lifeguards will be needed this summer in Allegheny County. So far, about 600 persons have the required training and certification.

Janice Swigart-Smith recently joined the Juniata Administration as the Director of Conferences and Internships. She will work to provide the students of J.C. with more internship opportunities.

swering surveys or questionnaires. Later these tickets can be used to bid on prizes at a special auction to be held at the end of the fair.

In 1980 prizes such as a dinner for two with President Binder at a fancy restaurant, a home cooked meal with the Cherry's and glider rides were awarded to those with the highest bids.

Also the State Police will be present to demonstrate the methods used in a breathalizer test along with a Tri-County Drug and Alcohol Agency sponsored booth.

This fair is being funded through a grant that was received by CASE because of their excellent efforts during last year's "3 D's . . . Don't Drive Drunk" week. BACCHUS (Boost Alcohol Conscience Concerning the Health of University Students) found that CASE's 1983 efforts were deserving of a grant amounting to $300. The student and faculty run group then deveioped the idea to once again hold this fair.

Hopefully everyone can participate in this experience and have fun learning about the responsibilities that go along with the "traditional" Juniata beverages.

College Tax Break Is Aimed At Rich Group

WASHINGTON, D.C. (CPS) — Most programs that give parents tax breaks for paying for college tend to help families that would send their children to college anyway, and virtually exclude families who need the most help in financing college educations, the College Board has found in a study of tax exemptions.

Moreover, President Reagan's proposals to broaden some tax exemptions for college payments could cut into funding for the direct student aid programs that help the neediest students the most, says Lawrence Gladieux, director of the College Board's Washington office.

The board estimates that about 65 percent of the families that benefit from the federal tax laws aimed at helping them pay for college have incomes above the national median.

"Although middle and upper-middle income families benefit most from current and proposed tax shelters, most of them probably would have participated or invested in a college education without these incentives," Gladieux says.

The incentives now include exempting scholarship and grant money from taxes, letting parents take deductions for their college-attending children, and subtracting the amounts of college loans from taxable income, as well as other accounting measures.

President Reagan has proposed enacting new tax incentives, too.

In February, he again proposed allowing parents to deduct part of what they pay in tuition from what they owe in taxes, and letting people set up special education savings accounts that would generate tax-free interest.

"We wanted to raise a caution about adopting policies that sound good — such as reinforcing family saving for a college fund — but which are very expensive," Gladieux explains. "I fear that if (they are) put in place, it would indirectly cut into the support for direct student aid programs."

He adds that "if the nation wants to give priority to encouraging youngsters from less-advantaged families to attend college, current and proposed tax breaks do not appear to meet that goal as well as conventional student aid based on need."

The study also found the tax breaks reduced the amount of money the government took in in 1982 by $1.85 billion.

Heartbeat City, the fifth album from The Cars, is this week's topic. The album sits at number one on the album charts with the song "You Might Think". To me, The Cars come across as a new wave-sounding group, with much of the album based on keyboards and very predictable drumming.

The group; Ric Ocasek (vocals, guitar), Ben Orr (vocals, bass), Elliot Easton (guitar, vocals), Greg Hawkes (keyboards, vocals), and David Robinson (drums), have produced a quite different album than their past performances. Heartbeat City will probably be liked best by the "die-hard" Cars fans, while the populus will probably stick to the hit in their liking.

The best songs on the album I thought were "You Might Think" and "It's not the Night". These had distinct lyrics and good guitar rhythms. The vocals on the album are typical of past Cars, but the music has become more sporadic and sounds similar to the sound you get from a rhythm organ in a Sears Department Store. The real skill involved in Heartbeat City is in the mixing of the LP in its exceptional sound quality.

In general, the album disappointed me, as it has become too simple for the Cars and does not utilize any component in the band to its full advantage. The album will probably do well in the market, as its album cover design is very unique.

Parmely Named Director

Claude R. Parmely, assistant professor of chemistry at Juniata College, has been named director of the college's Brumbaugh Science Center.

In announcing the appointment, Juniata President Frederick M. Binder said that Parmely will be responsible for overseeing the physical facilities and support services of the Brumbaugh Science Center. In addition, Parmely will assess problem areas within the science departments, and help establish policies in the areas of safety, security and equipment use.

A member of the Juniata faculty since 1982, Parmely holds a B.S. degree in chemistry from the U.S. Military Academy at West Point and an M.S. degree in inorganic chemistry from the University of Iowa. He also has received professional education at the military Airborne School and taken the infantry officers basic course as well as the military intelligence officers basic and advanced courses.

Prior to joining the Juniata faculty, Parmely was an assistant professor of chemistry at West Point. He served in the U.S. Army where he was line unit supervisor/commander in Stuttgart/Augsburg, West Germany, and chief of the Intelligence and Electronic Warfare support section at Frankfurt, West Germany.

"The Brumbaugh Science Center is one of the finest facilities in the east, and we are proud of the important role is has played in the academic program at Juniata," Dr. Binder said. "Under Professor Parmely's direction the center will continue to provide students with the finest equipment, laboratory and classroom facilities."

Indoor Soccer Games Played

After last week's column I thought that I had it easy for the rest of the term. All I had to do every week was write about the soccer games from the week before, but like usual I forgot something. Every week I have to find a way to open the column, this should suffice for this week.

In the season opener "JTFB" took on the "Gooney-Goo-Goo Mobiles." The action in the first half was very even. Each team had some very good scoring opportunities but neither team could take advantage of them. Both goal tenders did an excellent job in the opening half keeping the score tied after twenty minutes.

The second half started out the same as the first, with neither team taking control of the game. The first goal of the game was scored by Mark Repole off of a pass from Russ Leberman. Leberman put the G-G-G Mobiles ahead 2-0, with an assist going to Tom Visosky. "JTFB" came back with a goal to make the score 2-1 in favor of the "G-G-G Mobiles" with the game ending without any further scoring.

In the second game of the evening the "Cerebrums" played "The U.N." This game turned out to be a much higher scoring game than the first. A total of 9 goals were scored. "The U.N." came up short in the final tally with the score 6-3. "The Cerebrum's" 6 goals were spread out among five players, while "The U.N.'s" goals were scored by two players.

Before closing, the schedule for April 24 looks like this: "G-G-G Mobiles" vs. "Cerebrums" at 9:00 and "JTFB" vs. "The U.N."

The matches are played in the Memorial Gym, and there has been a crowd on hand for Indoor Soccer games played in the past, so come on down and catch the action. Have a good break!

Plenty of Co-Rec Softball Action This Spring

by Andy Hiscock

The I.M. Co-Rec Softball season began on Thursday, April 27th and will continue up until Thursday, May 10th, then the play-offs will start. This year, there are 16 teams split up into two Flights (Blue & Gold) each containing 8 teams which makes up the Co-Rec Softball system. The top four teams from both divisions will make the play-offs at the end of the regular season. The weather caused many games to be cancelled in the past two weeks, but now that the weather is turning more seasonable, the players are out in force.

There was plenty of softball action Sunday, April 1st (before the snows came). In Blue Flight action, "Magpies" defeated "P.M.G.'s" by the score of (16-10). The "Magpies" spread their scoring throughout the whole game while "P.M.G.'s" did all of their scoring in the 1st inning, and then went cold. In more of a defensive battle, "Kings of Pain" beat "Basom's Batters" (5-2). The Kings held off the Batters by letting them only get 1 run in the top half of the last inning to win.

In Gold Flight action on Sunday, "Loaded Bases" defeated "Chug Boat Crew" lopsidedly (24-6) — sounds like a varsity baseball score. The Crew scored a number of runs in just about every inning to build up their lead. "Woo" beat "Party Pat's Brigade" in a close game (6-5). It was a tie game up until the bottom of the last inning, when "Woo" drove in one run with two outs to win. "The Sliders" crushed "The Animals" (14-8). "The Animals" got 3 runs in the last inning, but could not catch the enemy. There were a couple of teams that couldn't muster enough manpower on this fine spring day. "The Wicked Libidos" beat "The Academic Pro's" by default and "Fu-This" also came about a victory by way of the easy road over "Zoo Crue."

I.M. Softball games are played on the Intramural fields (behind Ellis) on Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Sundays. Besides having a Co-Recreational League (men & women), there is an all Men's League as well as an all Women's League. All spectators are welcome to watch these games.

Women Split Opening Matches

by Ginny Krall

The 1984 Women's Tennis Team saw action twice last week after coming off a shaky pre-season plagued by limited outdoor play.

Opening their season at Dickinson April 3, the Lady Indians dropped the match 9-0. Conservative shots and hesitant reactions seemed to characterize the whole contest. Coach Nancy Latimore attributed the slow start to lack of quality outdoor practice and literally no match play.

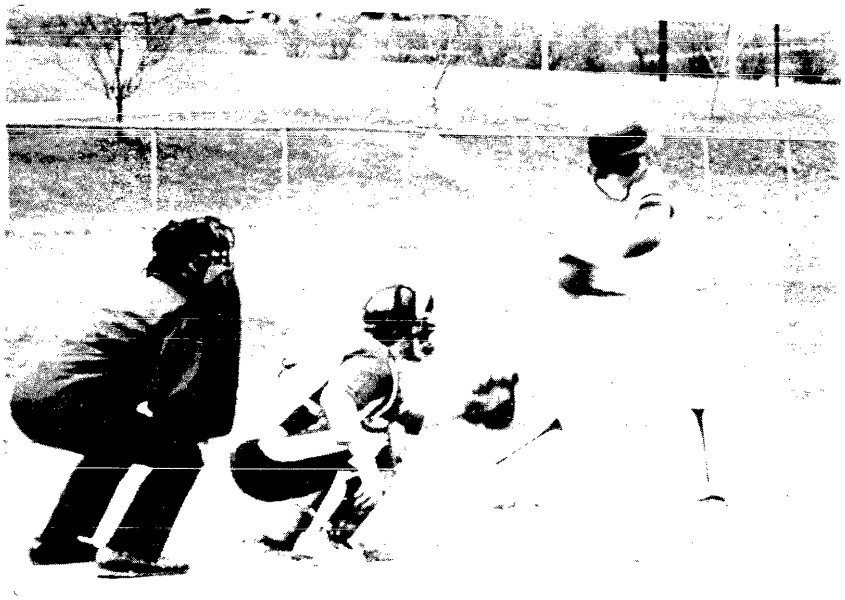
Saturday, April 7, the Lady Indians again took to the courts and hosted York College. Despite the cold spring weather conditions the squad played steady, controlled tennis and defeated their opponent 7-2.

Sophomores Leanne Egolf and Ginny Krall headed the team with singles victories. Freshman Sue King and Marie Rose also captured points for the Indians in fairly easy matches. A three set, well fought struggle left Jodie Shriver just short of her first collegiate win. Freshman Debbie Little also captured a victory as sixth seed for the Lady Indians.

In doubles Egolf and Krall paired up to take a decisive win in first doubles. King and Rose also came away with a victory in their first match as a pair. York picked up their second point of the contest as the Indian's third duo, junior Carol Uber and sophomore Cheryl Hurst fell.

Latimore commented, "We're playing good tennis considering how much outdoor play we missed early this spring. Right now we have a lot of unrealized potential."

This team which seeds only three upper classmen in its top six is an "exciting young team" according to Latimore and one that should be watched throughout the upcoming season. The Lady Indians are matched up again on Wednesday at Elizabethtown and Friday against Wilson.



Senior Grady Paul takes a cut which brought him his first home run of the season (409'). He went on to hit 5 for 8 with 2 singles and 2 doubles to help the Indians sweep the double-header with Albright by scores of (19-3) and (12-11).

Indians Top Albright in Doubleheader

by Andy Hiscock

Amazing!! The Juniata Indians Baseball team successfully completed the doubleheader sweep of Albright this past Saturday (4/7), but it was not your typical sweep by any means!! The fans (yes, there was a good showing of support) who braved the cold and windy "football-like" weather along with myself were treated to two of the most action-packed and entertaining games that I have ever seen. Both games contained plenty of offensive punch with both teams combining to push an incredible 45 runs across the plate for the afternoon, along with some good defensive plays interspersed. I could easily fill up this whole page with the action, but I will try to stick to some highlights and key stats.

Before the start of game no. 1, I learned that this was the first game of the season for Albright, which made me wonder if that would give their pitchers a slight advantage for being fresh, or would it hurt them because they were still rusty. Well, my questions were answered in the first inning. Rich Howie started the game on the mound for the Indians, and he went on to pitch 6 complete innings, striking out 3 and letting up only 3 runs. Albright scored one of their 3 runs in the top of the first inning, but when Juniata stepped-up to the plate in the bottom of that same inning, the roof caved in on them. When the dust cleared, the Indians had gone through the order two complete times and had begun a third before being retired. The Indians had 9 hits (8 singles & 1 double) to score 13 runs making the score read JUNIATA 13 . . . Albright 3 after the first inning. Getting singles in the inning were Grady Paul, Dave Murphy (2), Jim Laphan, Glenn Hineman, Scott Cole, Steve Poska, and Dave Crane. Grady Paul also poked a double into right field to score two runs to go 2 for 2 in the inning. The winning run crossed the plate when Terry Yoder was hit by a pitch with the bases loaded. The Indians scored two more runs in the bottom of the second and drove in a run for each of the remaining 4 innings. Albright picked up two runs in the top of the 3rd but they couldn't make up the ground.

Game no. 2 did contain a lot of scoring, but it was not a lopsided victory as in the first game. The crowd tended to grow as the game wore on rather than disperse as in Game no. 1, as the Indians clawed their way back from an early (7-3) deficit after 3 innings to hold off Albright in the last inning for the 12-11 victory. Let me try to give you an abridged version of the action. Dave Heydrick was pitching for the Indians in this game, and he went 5-2/3 innings, had one strike-out and let up 5 earned runs for the day, but he was not the pitcher of record. Kevin Smith came in for Dave to force the next batter to ground out to stop the Albright rally at three runs. Albright again opened the scoring in the top of the first inning with 2 runs, but Juniata started where they left off and answered with three of their own (Dave Murphy drove a triple to the left field fence to get 2 RBI's and later scored on Jim Laphan's infield single). Then the Indians began to make menta. mistakes, over the next two innings, Albright scored 5 runs with Juniata making 3 fielding errors (unofficial). Juniata pulled one closer with Dave Murphy's home run in the bottom of the 4th. Again in the top of the 5th, the Indians committed 3 more errors leading to three unanswered runs. In the bottom of the 5th inning, the Indians scored 3 runs on 2 hits (double — Grady Paul, single (1 RBI) — Glenn Hineman, and a fielder's choice (1 RBI) by Jim Laphan), but time was running out.

Now that I have had time to sit back and look at the notes that I took at the game, I have come to the decision that the ability of the Indians to concentrate and tighten up their defense (something that Albright could not do in Game no. 1) after committing mental errors was one of the keys to their comeback and eventual victory, and I think that it shows that this year's team has a lot of character and intestinal fortitude which is needed for any championship team in this day and age (brute force just doesn't work).

You may notice that I said that correcting their mental errors was ONE of the things that led to their comeback, the other key may well be the mysterious RALLY HATS. When the Indians are down and just about out, the call goes up in the dugout for the "RALLY HATS"!!! All team members then turn their hats inside out which acts as the sign for the team to pool their forces and offensively explode (in other words, have a Rally). Now I'm fairly sure that Coach Berrier does not practice this strategy with the team or encourage its use, but I am almost positive that the Coach would say that a good team has to get psyched to score runs, and encouraging each other is an excellent way to accomplish this goal. That is exactly what the RALLY HATS allow the team to do. Well, to make a Giganic story just Huge. the RALLY HATS came out in the bottom of the 6th inning with the score (10-7), and they did their thing. In the bottom of the 6th, the Indian dugout came alive with chatter and encouragement for each other, and the bats responded. The Indians went from a three run deficit to a 2 run lead in the inning with 5 runs on 5 hits. Jeff Meeker had a two run double to the left field fence, and singles came from Grady Paul, Dave Crane (1 RBI), Jim Laphan (1 RBI), and Glenn Hineman (1 RBI). After a lead-off HR for Albright, relief pitcher John Summers came into the game to relieve pitcher Kevin Smith, who threw 1-1/3 innings, had 1 strike-out and let up 1 run to record the win for and his second save of the day. Kevin Smith was the pitcher of record for Game no. 2, and he receives the win.

I would now like to try to round out this article by pointing out some of the Indians who had outstanding afternoons. Grady Paul went 5 for 8 with 2 singles, 2 doubles, and a HR over the 405' sign in straight-away centerfield and had 5 RBI's. Dave Murphy went 4 for 6 with 2 singles, 1 triple, and a HR and drove in 4 RBI's. Jim Laphan was 5 for 8 with 4 singles, and a double and had 5 RBI's. Glenn Hineman went 3 for 6 with 3 singles and 4 RBI's, Jeff Meeker had 3 hits in 5 times at bat (2 singles and a double) and had 3 RBI's, and Mike Culver and Mike Smith were 1 for 1 with 1 RBI. All of the guys had good days, and I'm sorry if I missed anyone, but I would like to congratulate the whole team for their performance. If the upcoming games for the remainder of the Varsity Baseball Season are half as exciting as the games that I have just seen, I would not be disappointed. Come out and support the team at their next home game.

Men's Lacrosse action on Saturday April 7th vs. Lycoming. There was plenty of hard hits and good play. The Indians made a good showing for their season home opener but lost (5-2) to a tough Lycoming squad.

Vol. XXXV, No. 22 | Juniata College — Huntingdon, Pa. 16652 | May 3, 1984

Annual Lecture To Be Presented

One of the nation's leading biologists will deliver the annual Will Judy Lecture at Juniata College Wednesday, May 9 at 8:15 p.m. in Oller Hall.

Dr. Thomas Eisner, Jacob Gould Schurman Professor of Biology at Cornell University, will speak on the topic "Survival in the World of Insects."

A member of the Cornell faculty since 1957, Eisner is a native of Germany and received his B.A. and Ph.D. degrees from Harvard University. He has been a visiting scientist and professor at institutions and laboratories in Germany, the Netherlands, Australia, the Panama Canal Zone and Switzerland, as well as the University of Florida, Stanford University and the Marine Biological Laboratories in Woods Hole, Mass.

Eisner, a member of the National Academy of Sciences and a fellow of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences, has been the recipient of numerous honors. He holds honorary doctorate degrees from the University of Wurzburg, Germany and the University of Zurich, Switzerland.

The author of more than 190 technical articles and five books, Eisner's research interests are in the areas of animal behavior, chemical ecology, neurobiology and behavior and the chemical language of insects.

In addition to his many professional activities, Eisner sits on the editorial boards of the "Journal of Chemical Ecology," "Behavioral Ecology and Sociobiology," "Human Ecology Forum," "The Living Bird Quarterly," "Experientia" and "Quarterly Review."

The public is invited to attend Eisner's lecture which is made possible by an endowment from the late Will Judy, a 1911 Juniata graduate. A valedictorian of the Hamilton School of Law, he practiced briefly in Chicago and served in the Army during World War I, rising to the rank of captain and receiving the Silver Star.

Before retiring in the late 1950s, Capt. Judy operated a Chicago publishing firm for 36 years. He wrote eight books about dogs, edited a dog encyclopedia, and made "Dog World" magazine the most widely read pet periodical in the nation. He also lectured frequently and judged shows in the U.S. and 26 foreign countries.

Capt. Judy made numerous financial contributions to Juniata and in 1958, 15 years before his death, provided a $20,000 stipend to establish a lecture series "to supplement and enrich the academic program of the college."

Since its inception in May 1960, the Will Judy Lectureship has brought 28 speakers to Juniata.

Seminar Is Well Received

by Beth Gallagher

Nearly one hundred people, including students, faculty members, and professionals from the Huntingdon area, attended the Sixth Annual Banking Seminar held last Wednesday afternoon in Alumni Hall.

Coordinated by the Department of Economics and Business Administration, this year's seminar focused on deposit insurance. The seminar was entitled "Reforming Deposit Insurance" and lasted two and a half hours. It was immediately followed by a buffet-style dinner in the ballroom of Ellis College Center.

Dr. Frederick Binder, President of Juniata College, opened the seminar by extending a welcome to those in attendance. Following introductory remarks by Dr. James Lasko, Professor of Economics and Business Administration, the seminar discussion began.

Dr. Stanley C. Silverberg, the main speaker at the seminar, first layed out the background history of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation and then explained its functions. Currently employed by the FDIC as the Director of the Division of Research and Planning, Dr. Silverberg has had vast experience in the banking industry as economist with Bank of America, the U.S. Treasury, and the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency.

Dr. Silverberg touched on the problems the FDIC is experiencing with the recent deregulation of the banking industry. He then presented some personal views on ways that deposit insurance might be reformed.

Health Fair Turnout displeases sponsors

by Cinny Cooper

A low turnout of 175 people left the sponsors of last week's Health Fair disappointed. The bi-annual fair was open to the whole campus community at no charge.

The event was sponsored by Scalpel and Probe and the Juniata College Health Center. Chairperson of Scalpel and Probe, Margie Guerrini, and J.C. Head Nurse, Jane Brown, organized the fair which was held from 11 a.m. to 5 p.m. last Wednesday on the mezzanine of the Sports & Recreation Center.

The fair was an attempt to make the college community more aware of good health habits, preventive medicine, and medical options. This year's fair was the third of its type.

Local health services donated their time and know-how to administer the various tests and distribute information. Eye screening and dental screening centers were visited most frequently of the 15 booths which were set up throughout the mezzanine. Some of the other frequently visited displays were the booth on pulmonary function testing, the test for blood count, and diabetes.

In addition to these tests were urinalysis testing, information on the detection of breast and testicular cancer, and height and weight screening. New to the fair this year was the display provided by the J.C. Gym from Huntingdon. The gym displayed pictures of body builders, both male and female, and had pamphlets on physical fitness.

As the participants left the mezzanine, they were asked to submit suggestions for improving future health fairs. Nurse Brown especially emphasized that any further suggestions are welcome and should be directed to the Health Center in Lesher Hall. Says Brown, "It is particularly disappointing to have such a poor turnout when you work so hard to coordinate the event. Maybe with suggestions we'll get a better turnout next time."

Clean up Your Act!

It might have taken a while, but spring at Juniata has finally arrived. With that arrival comes the typical activity that most of us have longed for all winter: laying out for a sun tan.

This weekend past, the "beaches" of Juniata College were packed. It seemed nearly all residents of Juniata were out enjoying the sun and nice weather.

But when the sun set on Sunday evening, the residents of some dorms, particularly East Houses and Cloister, had left the remnants of the day behind. East Houses' front beach was cluttered with soda cans, candy wrappers, potato chip bags — you name it and it was probably there. Sadly enough, the same was true for Cloister and others. A quick glance around campus told any onlooker that the campus had been trashed.

Undeniably, those first days of spring give an aura of freshness, re-awakening, and purity. It is distressing to see that "spring fever" destroyed so quickly by the garbage which is carelessly dropped all over the lawns.

The Juniatian feels it necessary to remind those students who litter that the payment of tuition, room, and board does not also purchase a license to pollute the campus. The campus environment is here for 1,200 students — all of whom deserve, and many of whom enjoy, a clean beach or walking path.

Throwing away one's own trash or picking up a piece of trash enroute is not too low a task for anyone. Likewise, maintaining a clean environment is not nearly as difficult as having to clean up a trashed one.

It is our hope that littering won't become the standard at Juniata. The cleaner Juniata is kept, the nicer it will be in both the spring and always.

To the Editor:

" 'Mickey Mouse' education courses" is the one phrase I have grown to hate more than any other. I was shocked to find "The Juniatian" publishing such a cartoon as I saw in the 12 April 1984 issue. For those fortunate enough to have missed it, the cartoon showed a student entering college, and followed him through his college career. I quote, "1. I'm a freshman, first time away from home. Major? Partying, of course. 2. Now as a sophomore, I'm not sure what my major is . . . this week. 3. Being a junior, it's getting close to graduation. I better pick up some education courses for a teaching certificate. 4. At least I'll still have the summers off."

I fail to see the logic of an institution that sells education, at an inflated price, belittling the training of its lifeblood, teachers.

If employment in the education field is such a waste of time, suited only for drunks who aren't competent enough for any other field of work, where does that place the professors of Juniata, who are all in the business of education? Where does this place Dr. Binder, himself an educator? And

Students Speak

by Kathy Manzella

Question: "The Soviets are currently threatening to boycott the Summer Olympics in L.A. Do you think politics and sports should be mixed?"

Anne Garstka, Senior: "No because sports have nothing to do with politics. Team efforts could help relations in other things. If you're able to put aside politics you could think more clearly."

Tom Visosky, Sophomore: "No. I think they should be separate, but I don't see how they can ever do it. It's not fair to the athletes."

Patty Renwick, Junior: "No, because they're different scopes of life. The Olympics are supposed to be a friendly competition between countries. There should be some things they should be able to do despite their differences."

Dave Kunkle, Freshman: "No, I don't think they should be. The Olympics should be something the whole world can participate in without bringing political issues into it."

Fling Into Spring

O.K. Juniata, here's your chance to Fling into Spring. The first annual Spring Fling will get underway on May 11. The event was originally scheduled for this past weekend but was postponed along with Mud Volleyball and Raft Regatta.

The idea for the Spring Fling resulted from a class project in the Small Group Decision Making course. The group organized this event to promote campus unity. The event has been funded by Student Government and Centerboard, and other private benefactors.

Traditional beverages will be served in Cloister, North, Sherwood, and Tussey-Terrace starting at 3:00 p.m. Musical entertainment will be provided in Sherwood's parking lot by a campus band. An all campus barbeque will be held on Sherwood's patio at 5:00 p.m. The Spring Fling will conclude with a bon fire which will be held in South's parking lot at 9:00 p.m.

Expert Presents Lecture

"The U.S. and Southern Africa" will be the topic of a lecture at Juniata College Tuesday, May 8 at 8:15 p.m. in the Ellis Hall faculty lounge.

Jennifer S. Whitaker, a fellow at the Council on Foreign Relations and director of its African Development Project, will be the feature speaker.

A leading expert on African affairs, Whitaker served as associate editor of "Foreign Affairs" magazine from 1975 to 1983. She has traveled throughout Africa and while on the staff of "Foreign Affairs," planned and organized a series of seminars on U.S.-African policy.

Whitaker is a member of the Council on Foreign Relations, Women's Forum and the Rhodes Scholarship Selection Committee, New York State. She has lectured extensively and appeared on the "MacNeill-Lehrer Report" on PBS, the television series "Focus" and on BBC Radio.

The author of numerous articles and two books, Whitaker received her B.A. degree from Trinity College and her M.A. degree from Stanford University. She recently returned from a 2½ week trip to Southern Africa sponsored by the Council on Foreign Relations and the South African Institute of International Affairs.

Whitaker's May 8 lecture, which is open to the public at no charge, is sponsored by the William G. and Mary A. Nyce Lectureship which brings to the college respected American and International scholars and public figures to discuss and broaden the understanding of crucial world issues.

Henry To Head 84 Fund Raiser

Mrs. C. Jewett Henry of Huntingdon will again serve as director of the fund raising effort for the "Summer of '84" performing artist series at Raystown Lake.

Sponsored annually by Juniata College and the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, the series will mark its eighth season this summer.

According to Mrs. Henry, who has directed the fund raising efforts for the last two years, some 18 programs of music and dance will be staged at the amphitheater at the Seven Points Recreation Area beginning Tuesday, July 3 with the Charlie Shaver Family Bluegrass Band and running through Aug. 24-25 with a bluegrass weekend featuring Country Generation.

One of the most popular features of the "Summer of '84" series, the annual Raystown Country Banjo Pickin' Festival, will be held this year on Saturday, July 28.

"Summer of '84" is supported by a grant from the Huntingdon County Arts Council through local government matching funds granted by the Pennsylvania Council on the Arts, as well as individuals, businesses and industries in the Huntingdon area. Mrs. Henry noted that although donations are accepted at the various performances, no admission is charged for any of the programs.

"Since operating costs increase each year, this means that expenses must be met through other means," Mrs. Henry said. "This is achieved primarily through a program of patrons, associates and friends, which is still open to area residents, businesses and industries."

Noting that the "Summer of '84" artist series is a unique and exciting program, Mrs. Henry looks forward to the same positive support from the community that has occurred in the past. "It is the enthusiasm of local supporters — and the performers as well — that has made this program successful," Mrs. Henry said. "I look forward to another exciting summer of entertainment at Raystown."

Mrs. Henry has been active in many local organizations including the Girl Scouts, Brownies, Friends of the Huntingdon County Library and the Juniata League of Women. She attended Juniata College from 1929-31 and received her B.A. degree from Cornell University. Mrs. Henry is the wife of the late C. Jewett Henry, a prominent Huntingdon attorney, Juniata graduate and former chairman of the college's Board of Trustees.

Working with Mrs. Henry on the "Summer of '84" project will be Dr. Howard H. Crouch, professor of education and H. Christopher Peterson, assistant professor of economics and business administration.

Sea Animals Face Danger

Many species of whales and seals are nearing extinction. Soon we might only be able to see these beautiful creatures in museums. But as Juniata College students, we find ourselves repeating the old Juniata expression, "so what". It would be a shame to carry our apathy we have on campus to the "real world" where issues such as the preservation of sea mammals deserve our attention.

There are two critical areas surrounding this issue. One is the sheer number of animals being slaughtered yearly. The other is the manner in which these animals are killed. Many of us know that whales are harpooned, and seals are hit over the head with clubs so as to preserve their skins. However, many people don't know some of the specifics of the common threats facing these creatures. For example, year in and year out, hundreds of marine mammals are becoming entangled in discarded fishing nets and are dying a slow death. The increasing use of monofilament nets further compounds the problem and makes the seas even more treacherous because these nets do not decompose very quickly. Scientists have estimated that every year 50,000 seals are slaughtered needlessly through drowning in discarded fishing nets. For example, scientists for The National Marine Fisheries Service reported one such incident where 11 seals were observed swimming in and around nets which were snagged on coral head to prevent the seals from being drowned or smashed against the rocks with the next rising tide. In another incident, officials recovered the body of a gray whale which had drowned in a net in the Palix River in Washington State.

As was said before whales face death by the hands of humans through the use of the harpoon. Most of us don't know the details involved with the slaughter of these intelligent animals. Usually when a whale is harpooned, it suffers about 10 to 11 minutes before the whale actually dies. The Japanese and the U.S.S.R. have developed a "cold harpoon" which is supposed to kill in 3 to 4 minutes. Though claimed to be a more humane way to kill the whales, how humane is it to shoot a whale with a harpoon which explodes inside the whale and still has the whale linger for three and a half minutes? In an era of high technology, if we cannot kill whales more quickly and humanely, then we should cease whaling altogether.

Every day sea mammals face dangers that place the existence of many of the species in question. If these different species are to be preserved, human involvement is necessary. As college students, we should start becoming more aware of the sea mammal's plight, and become more willing to take action for their preservation.

Muddy Run

This may come as a surprise to many of you, but the strategy in vogue is not only to nuke for political purposes, but also to do away with those things to which people are most emotionally and materially attached — in order to break the fighting spirit, etc.

Certainly this is the case with our beloved Sports & Recreation Center. What better way to break the spirit of college folk — nay, of the whole town — than to obliterate their temple?

Just think of the consequences of such a catastrophe. There wouldn't be any place to sleep — all the dorms would be gone. There'd be nothing to eat — no Baker Refectory. Why, with just the loss of Ellis, there'd be no Big Screen T.V., no late night grilled munchies, no V103, no Juniatian . . . With no information desk, none of us would know what was going on, or even where to sign up for it. Of course there couldn't be any classes for a while. Bummer.

Actually, the above scenario is rather silly. If a bomb were dropped here, we'd probably be too dead to miss even the Sports & Recreation Center (depending on your religious beliefs).

So let me propose another idea. You have all heard of the neutron bomb which is supposed to kill only people and leave the buildings standing. Well, Arlo Guthrie has proposed the idea of an un-neutron bomb which does just the opposite — melts all the buildings and man-made type things, leaving trees and flowers and "nothing but naked people everywhere." "Now isn't that the kind of war we want to have?" he asks. I must admit it doesn't sound too bad — as far as wars go.

But could Juniatians handle it? Let's say an un-neutron bomb was dropped on the Sports & Recreation Center the week before graduation. As far as I'm concerned, there's no reason why ceremonies and festivities shouldn't go on. But I'll bet the administration would have a fit and find some reason to charge us for the inconvenience.

I can see that we'd have to do away with the pomp. Circumstance would still be there — just slightly altered circumstance.

But we Juniatians (and probably most people in general) are too hung up with the material aspects of the occasion to deal simply with the recognition of four years of preseverance. That's just not enough on its own.

Imagine graduation right after an un-neutron bomb had been dropped. No buildings — but that would only be inconvenient if it rained. No chairs — but if it was really important enough people would accept sitting on the grass (there'd be plenty of that). No diplomas — but those are just pieces of paper which (lucky for some of us) don't even include public display of the GPA. But

Social Service Update

by Kay Rockafellow

Although the end of the school year is quickly approaching, the Social Service Club is still going strong with plenty of planned activities.

Tonight there will be a short tour of the Huntingdon Food Bank at 7 p.m. The Food Bank is located in the basement of the First Street United Methodist Church and is headed by Reverend Bill Brown. If anyone is interested in seeing how the food bank is operated, they are encouraged to meet in front of Ellis Hall at 6:40 p.m.

The club has asked Professor Betty Ann Cherry to speak on Women's Roles in the '80's. The discussion is open to the entire campus and the date will be announced to all.

Both the Big Brother/Big Sister Program and the tutoring of youths at the Chestnut Terrace Housing Project in Mount Union continue to be successful. There is a kickball game and picnic planned for each group to finish out the year on a good note.

The Social Service club is also planning their first annual picnic on Sunday, May 6th out at Lake Raystown's Seven Points Marina. Each member of the club is invited to join the club at the lake and is entitled to bring a friend along.

Currently, the club's officers are in the process of deciding what social organizations and charities to donate their money to. The club would like to extend its appreciation to all of those who helped them in raising money through parties, carnation sales, and other fundraisers.

Outdoor Concert Planned

The Juniata College Band will celebrate spring with an outdoor concert Friday, May 4 at 7 p.m. on the Detwiler Plaza in front of the Kennedy Sports & Recreation Center.

Under the direction of Ibrook Tower, associate professor of music, the band will perform a variety of selections including music from "Return of the Jedi" and "Music Man."

Erickson To Give Recital

Ruth A. Erickson of Bethlehem will be featured in a senior vocal recital Saturday, May 12 at 8:15 p.m. in Huntingdon's Stone Church of the Brethren.

Sponsored by the Juniata College music department, Miss Erickson, a senior music major at Juniata, will perform selections from the operas "Carmen" and "La Boheme," as well as music by Mozart, Schumann and Schubert. Her program also will include selections from Gilbert and Sullivan's "Patience" and "West Side Story."

Singing with Miss Erickson on some of the selections will be senior Miguel Esteban of Sewickley (Tenor), sophomore Debra L. Waltz of Penllyn (soprano) and Dr. Wilfred G. Norris, professor of physics (bass). Piano accompaniment will be provided by Katsuko Ochiai, instructional assistant in music and freshman Charlene Porta of Hollidaysburg.

The public is cordially invited to attend Miss Erickson's vocal recital. There is no admission charge.

were then heard from Mr. John R. Beyer, and Mr. Donald E. Mattern. Both men were representative of two banks, the Mid-State Bank and Trust Company and Hamilton Bank, respectively. Ideas such as pro-bank expansion and the plight of the smaller bank were emphasized, in addition to what detrimental effects non-bank competition is having on the banking industry.

All three gentlemen entertained questions from the audience for the last hour of the seminar. Those in attendance were invited to stay for the buffet where the relaxed atmosphere gave students and guests alike the opportunity to mingle and discuss mutual interests.

The seminar was sponsored by the J.B. Kunz Company, one of Huntingdon's oldest manufacturing firms. Likewise, the Business Department at Juniata expresses its gratitude to the First National Bank of Mapleton, Penn Central National Bank and the United National Bancorporation for their financial support of the seminar.

Commented Becky Noamer, one student in attendance, "I was happy to see the department sponsor such a program. I think they should sponsor more seminars like it for other industries, too." In light of the banking seminar's success, the business department may just do that.

Leaders Attend Program

The 1984 Spring Leadership Development Program began its series of seminars on April 26 with a discussion on Goal Setting by Dr. Arnold J. Tilden. The program was initiated after elections were held to ensure that newly elected officers would have the advantage of participating. The program is intended to give students the opportunity to learn effective ways to run an organization.

The remaining 3 topics to be addressed in the program include the following: Networking, to be presented on May 3 by Julie Keehner, Delegation, on May 8 by James Donaldson, and How To Run a Meeting, on May 10 by Wayne Justham. All seminars are held at 3:30 p.m. in Lesher Lounge.

A reception or dinner will be held upon completion of the program, at which all participants will be presented with certificates. All sessions can be included in a co-curricular transcript.

where are the students of Juniata, who willingly pay thousands of dollars to be educated by these "incompetent drunks?"

This is the type of Dark Ages reasoning that is destroying our present educational system. If taxpayers (read that as alumni of Juniata) would vote to pay teachers a decent wage, perhaps the field would attract fewer "drunks" and more dedicated people like the Education Department at Juniata College.

Clouse Edits Encyclopedia

Dr. Robert G. Clouse, the J. Omar Good Visiting Distinguished Professor of Evangelical Christianity at Juniata College, served as one of the editors of the recently published Brethren Encyclopedia.

This three-volume publication discusses the background of the various groups that descended from the church started by Alexander Mack, including the Church of the Brethren.

In addition to serving on the Board of Editors, Dr. Clouse wrote two dozen articles for the encyclopedia, including lengthy ones on Brethren Church policy and the National Fellowship of the Grace Brethren Churches.

Dr. Clouse also has edited and contributed to the book "Wealth and Poverty: Four Christian Views" published this month by InterVarsity Press. The book is a discussion of responses to poverty by four different scholars. After each of the four essays in the book, the other three writers respond from their viewpoints, making the book a unique contribution to the dialogue on this issue.

CROP Yields Returns

Juniata College's annual "Meal for CROP" held April 10 so far has raised more than $2,000 and proceeds from ticket sales are still being turned in.

According to the Rev. Dr. M. Andrew Murray, Juniata's campus minister, all of the funds will go to CROP, the international organization dedicated to fighting world hunger.

Murray stated that more than 90 percent of Juniata's students gave up their dinner on CROP night and 540 area residents attended the

J.C. Playoff Hopes Destroyed Last Week

by Joe Scialabba

Playoff hopes for the Juniata baseball and softball teams suffered final setbacks last week in Middle Atlantic Conference play. Both teams will miss the MAC playoffs set for this weekend.

The softball team, although hovering around the .500 mark all season, saw its playoff hopes swept away in a doubleheader against visiting Elizabethtown. The Tribe got caught in an untimely losing streak and couldn't get it together in time to win the big games. They split with visiting Susquehanna on Saturday.

The baseball team suffered a similar fate in losing their playoff chances on foreign ground. A weekend trip to Wilkes-Barre cost the Indians three losses and any hope of a MAC title.

On Friday, the Tribe "looked ahead" to Saturday and the deciding league twinbill with Wilkes by dropping a 5-0 decision to hosting King's. Juniata never got it going and had one of their worst hitting days of the season leading to the shutout defeat.

On Saturday the bats got going but not quite enough as the Wilkes Colonels earned an MAC final four berth with a clean sweep of the conference doubleheader. Wilkes took the first game 8-4 and won the nightcap 9-6. The Indians needed a sweep to win the playoff berth outright and a split would have forced a playoff with the Colonels here this week. Unfortunately, the only totally bad thing happened with the Wilkes sweep. And so, Juniata's MAC playoff hopes died in northeastern Pennsylvania. Any NCAA regional chances are also gone.

As MAC's are played this weekend the Juniata name will be missing from the scoresheets, quite unexpectedly. Preseason talk was of playoff berths for both the baseball and softball teams, but it just wasn't meant to be.

Both teams had to deal with bad weather throughout the spring, which not only had schedules constantly changing but got the year off to a slow start with only minimal outdoor practice time possible. Young teams need time to develop, maybe this was the deciding factor during the recent stretch runs.

Despite spoiled 1984 playoff futures, neither team has to look to the future in general with anything but extreme optimism. Both teams were loaded with good young players and hopefully they will return next year with the desire and experience necessary to improve and become the MAC contenders they feel they can be.

Lady Indians Drop Two Away Matches

by Ginny Krall

The Women's Tennis Team was defeated twice last week as they dropped two away matches at Albright and Susquehanna.

Albright clobbered the Lady Indians with a final score of 0-9. Leanne Egolf was denied in a three setter while the other singles players fell in straight sets.

In doubles Egolf and Ginny Krall lost in a close 4-6, 6-7 match. Kim Detwiler and Marie Rose also lost doubles in straight sets as did Cheryl Hurst and Carol Uber.

The team traveled to Susquehanna on Sunday where they again fell in a 1-8 match. Indian Freshman Jodie Shriver picked up her first season victory and the only Juniata point.

Inconsistency and unforced errors seemed to once again plague the team. These factors along with this spring's weather have really made the Women's Tennis Team's season rather disappointing.

Golfers Finish A Poor Season

by Joe Scialabba

The Juniata golf team got off to a disastrous start this season and it cost them a winning record. The Indians lost four of their first five matches on the way to a 3-6 mark, leaving them below the .500 level for the second straight year.

The Indians picked up home wins against Lycoming and Dickinson while gaining a road victory at Gettysburg over Mount Saint Mary's. Juniata lost to York, Susquehanna, Western Maryland, Ursinus, Gettysburg, and Lock Haven. A tri-match at Wilkes was postponed and will not be rescheduled.

The team is looking forward to next year since only seniors Mike "App" Appleby and Jack Williams will be lost to graduation.

This year's team was led by Steve Borza and Mark Loeper, both having consistent seasons with Borza having the best individual average while Loeper turned-in the low 18 with a 5-over par 75 against Lyco. Other players who were in the line-up include Tom Cancelmo, Steve West, Jeff Spicer, Jim Armstrong, Doug Henry, Dave Challenger, and Joe Scialabba.

The Indians sent Appleby, Borza, Loeper, Challenger, and Spicer to MAC's this week at Shawnee on the Delaware. Juniata finished 16th last year in a 21 team field.

Students Honored on May Day

Roxann L. Binner of Dillsburg, a senior mathematics and computer science major, was honored as Juniata College's "Woman of the Year" during the annual May Day breakfast held May 1.

In all, 18 Juniata students were recognized on the basis of their cordiality and poise; personal competence and achievement in the arts, academics, sports and other fields; service to the college, community or both; and self-determination and responsibility.

The "Woman of the Year" was escorted by the Juniata "Man of the Year," Jeffrey R. Rush of Canandaigua, N.Y., a senior finance major. Members of the court included eight "Juniata Women," two from each class, and eight senior "Juniata Men."

A Dean's List student and a member of the Juniata Honor Society, Miss Binner has been the recipient of several scholarships while at Juniata. She is currently secretary of the senior class and this year was named to "Who's Who Among Students in American Universities and Colleges."

A 1980 graduate of Northern Senior High School, Miss Binner is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. B. Delmar Binner of R.D. 5, Dillsburg.

Rush, also a memer of the Juniata Honor Society, serves on the Finance and Investment Committee of the college's Board of Trustees. He is a residence hall assistant, and a member of the Campus Ministry Board and Juniata Executives Club. Rush also has been named to "Who's Who Among Students in American Universities and Colleges."

A 1980 graduate of Canton (Pa.) Area Senior High School, Rush is the son of Mr. and Mrs. E. Neil Rush of 42 Island Dr., Canandaigua, N.Y.

Dr. Linda Sue Esch, associate professor of mathematics and computer science and a member of the Juniata faculty since 1976, was the guest of honor at the May Day breakfast.

A Huntingdon resident, Dr. Esch is a 1968 magna cum laude graduate of Juniata and received her A.M. and Ph.D. degrees from Boston University. An Altoona native, Dr. Esch was the recipient of the 1979 Lindback Foundation Award for Distinguished Teaching. Before joining the Juniata faculty, Dr. Esch taught at Boston

Narrow Margins In Senatorial Race

by Cinny Cooper

Last week's dorm senator elections came down to the wire with some offices being won by just a slim margin, said Glen Bouder, President of Student Government.

This election had "one of the better turnouts" of voters, said Bouder. Over 500 students cast their ballots.

Lesher saw the tightest contest with sophomore Kelly Bauer running for re-election against freshman Tracey Beaver. Bauer kept her seat as Lesher's senator, edging out Beaver, previously a freshman senator, by 12 votes (Bauer — 237, Beaver — 225).

Junior Scott Steffey made a valiant attempt at the senator's post for Long-Miller. Running as a write-in candidate, Steffey's campaign at the polls on election day carried him past sophomore Victor Gregory but just short of Kelly Mehigan, also a sophomore. Mehigan slid past Steffey by 23 votes (Mehigan — 214, Steffey — 191, Gregroy — 108).

Three students ran unopposed for their respective dorms. Lisa Aurand will represent Tussey; Danielle Rupp will be Terrace's dorm senator; and John Skoner will represent Sherwood.

North West, North East, and Off Campus (private) had no one running on the ballot for senator. Juniors Diana Melzer and Dave Hollander won as write-ins for North West and North East respectively. Sophomore Karrie Bercik will represent Off-Campus (private).

Freshman Molly McCooey will serve as South's dorm senator. Off-campus (college-owned) will be represented by Sharon Arber.

The newly elected senate will be full of new faces, said Bouder. Most of the previous senators have either graduated or moved into other Student Government positions.

According to the constitution of Juniata's Student Government, the Student Senate is "the primary governing body of the Student Government." It is made up of one senator from each of the dorm areas and three senators from the freshman class. Each

Binder Reveals Plans to Retire

Dr. Frederick M. Binder, who has served as Juniata College's eighth president since Sept. 1, 1975, has announced his retirement effective June 30, 1986. The president made the announcement at the spring meeting of the college's Board of Trustees held May 4-5.

Noting that he will celebrate his 65th birthday in November, 1985, Dr. Binder said that his decisions to retire coincides with a milestone in his career. "By the end of the 1985-86 academic year, I will have served 26 years as a college president and 40 years in college and university teaching and administration." Dr. Binder taught at Temple University, was Dean at Thiel College and was president of Whittier College, Whittier, Calif. and Hartwick College, Oneonta, N.Y. before coming to Juniata.

"Although I look forward to two more productive years as Juniata's president, I have announced my retirement now in order to give the Board of Trustees ample time to select a new president and to permit me and my family to make concrete plans for the future," Dr. Binder said.

"Under Dr. Binder's leadership, Juniata has grown and prospered academically and financially," said Dr. Charles C. Ellis, Chairman of the Board of Trustees. "His many accomplishments will serve future generations of Juniata students, faculty and staff. We are deeply grateful for his leadership over these past nine years and look forward to his continued positive administration for the next two years."

A native of New Jersey, Dr. Binder is a graduate of Ursinus College and holds M.A. and Ph.D. degrees in American history from the University of Pennsylvania. He also holds four honorary doctoral degrees.

After service in the Navy during World War II on motor torpedo boats in the Pacific, he began his teaching career at Temple University and continues teaching today as a professor of history at Juniata.

While on leave from Hartwick College in 1967-68, Dr. Binder was the first Fulbright lecturer in American history assigned to Yugoslavia. From 1969-70, he was Associate Commissioner of Higher Education in the New York State Educational Department.

The author of two books and several educational and historical articles, Dr. Binder has served on numerous educational and civic boards and committees. In 1983, Gov. Richard Thornburgh appointed Dr. Binder to the Pennsylvania State Board of Education and its Council on Higher Education.

In addition to Binder's retirement, the Board announced at the president's request, that it is expanding the goal of Juniata's current Century II Campaign from $13 million to $20 million to be achieved by the end of the decade. At present, the campaign has raised more than $10 million.

Dr. Ellis noted that the funds raised in this endeavor will be used for academic equipment and campus improvements, as well as endowment to support academic programs and scholarships.

The Century II Campaign was launched in October, 1980, with $1.73 million on hand. The successful completion of the new $4.9 million Kennedy Sports + Recreation Center constituted the major portion of the first phase of the campaign.

During the weekend meeting, the Board also approved the reappointment of nine trustees to three year terms.

Senate Elections: Now or Later?

Last week, Juniata students elected a new body of dorm senators for the upcoming academic year. As the primary governing body of Juniata's Student Government, the newly elected senate picked up one senator from each dorm area and will add three freshman senators in the fall.

In compliance with the Student Government constitution, those dorm senator elections were held before the housing selection processes. Under this current method, when a student is voted to represent a residence hall, he or she is guaranteed to get a room in that residence hall, without considering the seniority or number priorities currently acknowledged by the housing department.

Undoubtedly, many students look at dorm senator elections as the perfect opportunity to get housing in a popular residence hall that they might not otherwise have the chance to live in. In some cases, the responsibility of representing that dorm is overshadowed.

This philosophy not only violates the intent of the student senate, but it undermines the purpose of a random room draw process. The present system is not fair to either side.

The Juniatian deems it necessary to change the timing of the election process. Why not hold dorm senator elections after students have chosen next year's housing? Or why not wait until the fall when students meet those living in their dorms and can better assess who would make the better senator?

A change would solve both discrepancies by ensuring that those who ran for office were really interested in the position. This might even improve the quality of the student senate. And of course, the housing procedure would be pardoned the abuse it is currently taking.

To change the election procedure requires senate ratification of an amendment to the Student Government constitution. Interestingly enough, this year's Student Government started these proceedings before the elections. Unfortunately, the proceedings were lost in the shuffle of paper work and time ran out before election day.

To take the amendment proceedings off "hold" would be a wise decision for Student Government to make. For too long, the process has hurt both the students and the organization. Were it our decision, the Juniatian would definitely elect to change the voting procedure.

Letter to the Editor:

Were I a student at Juniata, I'd have to LOVE playing my flute a lot to practice on my own and with the band, only to have none of my friends or others of the college community show up at the concert last Friday night! Performers, whether in drama, music or sports, need an audience; it makes all the difference in the world. I am disappointed and disgusted at us who make up the college community, for failing to support the efforts of our members. Why put in the time if only a handful of people show up? Do we really want only classes and parties at JC? I certainly hope not but that could happen by default if we do not support these events with our presence — and they're free!

Thank you,

The end of the year is always very busy. There's all kinds of banquets to eat at and speakers to hear. The biggest and best weekend of the year is finally here, that is, of course, excluding graduation itself.

Normally we would send all of our tan bodies down the warm Juniata until we reach our destination with more than just the glow of sunburn on our cheeks. This year, however, is different. Different for two reasons. First, it's Chad Schauer, Sophomore: "I think it's up to the student. I think parents and students should decide. It's not up to the school."

Tim Sunderland, Sophomore; John Dorner, Freshman: "We think a minute of silence would be a good thing. If you do that it gives the option for people who want to pray and it doesn't force those who don't want to."

Carolyn Saulnier, Junior: "No I don't. There's too much controversy between the religions. If there was a universal religion then I could see it."

University and Colgate University.

The guest speaker at this year's breakfast was Marta Daniels of Hartford, Conn. a 1970 Juniata graduate and staff member of the American Friends Service Committee, a Quaker organization dedicated to finding non-violent solutions to human conflict.

Through the organization's Peace Education Division, Ms. Daniels has worked for peace and disarmament in both the United States and Europe. She told the May Day audience that they must work hard against the annihilation of the human race. "The world has progressed in most ways, but not in its thinking. We must think differently and act differently if we are to preserve what we have," she said.

Ms. Daniels called on the students to use their education "to prevent the nuclear winter, not to threaten nuclear war in order to keep our enemies in line."

The author of several articles on U.S.-Soviet relations, Ms. Daniels has made three trips to the Soviet Union to discuss issues of peace and disarmament. She is the author of the book "Jobs, Security and Arms in Connecticut," the first comprehensive profile of the state's corporate involvement in military contracting, the impact on the state's economy, its dependence on arms production and arms sales abroad, and the need for statewide conversion planning.

The eight students selected as "Juniata Women for 1984" are seniors Alyson L. Pfister of Willingboro, N.J. and Karyn L. Cable of Clearwater, Fla.; juniors Elizabeth A. Gallagher of Harleysville and Deborah L. Maue of Shamokin; sophomores Katrina M. Weader of Selinsgrove and Cynthia L. Cooper of Covington, and freshmen Danielle M. Rupp of Red Lion and Erica L. Seybert of Berwyn.

The other eight "Juniata Men for 1984" are Robert E. Adamek of Pittsburgh, James G. Adams of Altoona, Christopher D. Collins of Ebensburg; Gregory A. Kimble of Tyrone; Ronald F. Renzini of Scranton, Mark J. Shaw of Norristown, David R. Sloan of Wayne; and Joseph W. Whitacre, Jr. of York Springs.

The annual May Day breakfast was attended by several hundred women including students, faculty and staff members, wives of faculty and staff members, and several special guests.

The Juniata women were joined at the May Day Breakfast by faculty, staff, community members, and trustees.

Annual Weekend Is Approaching

by Steve Creps

It's been a long wait, but it's finally here. Yes, that annual weekend of Spring frolicking is upon us again. This year's event promises to be bigger and better than any we have seen before. Not only is there a new addition (Spring Fling) to the festivities, but the Raft Regatta will be the largest ever. And, of course, who could forget Mud Volleyball?

The festivities kick-off early Friday afternoon with Mud Volleyball. The competition will start at 1:00 p.m. and run till conclusion on the courts in front of Sherwood. This event is sponsored by the Juniata Executive Club (JEC). According to organizer Rob Yelnosky, there are 68 teams registered for the competition. There will be T-shirts for the winning teams and music for the event will be provided by Juniata's own V103.

If Mud Volleyball doesn't hold your interest, or if you need something to quench your thirst between games, don't fear, there are plenty of other activities planned. Spring Fling will get under way at 3:00 with the serving of traditional beverages in Cloister, North, Sherwood, and Tussey-Terrace lounges. At the same time, live musical entertainment will be provided by JC's own Phase 9 in Sherwood's parking lot.

An all-campus barbecue will be held at 5:00 on Sherwood's patio. Individuals are encouraged to bring frisbees, softballs, footballs, or whatever, and start a friendly game. Or if you just want to catch a few rays of sun, bring your beach towel. The evening's festivities will end with a bonfire in South's parking lot at 9:00.

Spring Fling was created with the purpose of promoting campus unity. The idea for the event came from a class project in the Small Group Decision Making course. It is being co-sponsored by Student Government, Centerboard, and private benefactors.

With one day of activities down, Saturday morning will arrive with the loading of rafts for the Regatta. According to Greg Kimball, co-chairperson of the Regatta committee, there is a record number of 98 rafts registered for the event. That translates into a total of 937 participants.

Due to the number of entrants, some changes in the pick-up schedule for the rafts have been made. Pick-ups will begin at 7:00 from three locations on campus, East, Cloister, and South. A reminder that students are responsible for the loading of rafts, and their unloading at the Smithfield Bridge site.

Transportation to the launch site will be provided starting at 9:00. Vans will be leaving from in front of Ellis Hall.

Food Service will be providing a packed lunch for those students who so desire. During the breakfast hours, cold cuts for sandwiches, and fruit will be available for those students who are on the meal plan to make a packed lunch. Food Service will also be providing coffee, doughnuts, and orange juice at the launch site.

The Raft Regatta Committee wishes to stress a few safety reminders and regulations. First, NO glass bottles, or styrofoam rafts will be allowed on the river. Second, there will be NO PARKING at the beginning (Smithfield Bridge) or end (Mill Creek Bridge) sites of the Regatta. Student vehicles may be used to transport materials, but they must be removed immediately after unloading. Finally, life preservers will be required. They will be provided for students, but guests must provide their own. Any violation of these rules will result in a $50 fine for the raft.

Have a great weekend and Happy Sailing.

Muddy Run

pretty cold outside for spring. At least the calendar said it was spring. A calendar has never lied to me before but these days you never know, you know?

The second and biggest reason that this year's Raft Regatta (or Regatta Raft depending on when you got your T-shirt. I believe only seniors are able to really relate to this) anyway, this is my last Raft Regatta. gasp!! Never again will I be able to frolick down the river on a homemade raft that may or may not finish the race. Never again will I watch whole rafts full of people pull over to the side and exodus into various bushes to answer to Mother Nature.

In only 16 days I'll watch my friends and colleagues finally get that wood pulp and ink that they've worked for for so long. You know, the one that is so vital to happiness and a 2.5 children life. Actually it seemed a lot longer when we were projecting from 1980 into 1984 than when we look back from 1984 to 1980. I'll probably never see all my friends dressed up exactly the same again either.

That's right. You guessed it. This is my last Along Muddy Run. I hate to get sentimental but, most of the time, Muddy Run has been fun. Sometimes it's been a real pain in the * ° @ + ! , but most responsibilities are. Listen to me, practically a college graduate and I'm calling responsibility a pain in the * ° @ + ! . It makes me seriously wonder, but I don't like to think about what else more $30,000 could have done for me.

Each day I approach my mailbox and find yet another little memo about some other formal little affair I'm supposed to attend, many in full battle array. There's also a small amount of confusion as to what this stuff is all about. Every time I hear someone bring up the Baccalaureate service a big question mark pops into my head. All I know is that it's some kind of religious service. So I ask someone everytime I hear it and everytime I get the same answer. "It's some kind of religious service." So there you are all you underclassmen — no need to ask any further. The Baccalaureate is some kind of religious service. May you all sleep well tonight with that knowledge.

Then there's the problem with the cap and gown. My gown is basic black, my tassel is white (for B.A.) and my eyes are dark brown. But moving away from the TV for a moment, there was another item in the cap and gown package. It's some kind of hood or something and it's got one of the weirdest geometric designs I've ever seen in an article of clothing. Hence, the confusion as to how it should be worn. They give you all kinds of directions about how to walk and how to shake hands and how to gently tap the front of your cap or something but they don't

by Ginny Krall

President Frederick Binder raised between $650 and $750 for cancer on May 7th in Binder Natatorium.

Binder, a former cancer victim, was expected to swim at least 64 lengths of the pool. Instead, he surprised the crowd by going over 100 lengths, nearly 1½ miles in less than two hours.

Pat Briggs, Professor Clayton Briggs' wife, also swam for cancer. Briggs went 20 lengths and raised around $200.

This first ever swim-a-thon for cancer was sponsored by the Circle-K Club and directed by Dr. David Eyman.

Despite the turnout, which was very poor, spirits were not downed by those reaching out to help others. Congratulations to all involved in this worthy cause!

Sen. Jubelirer to Speak at Juniata

Senate Majority Leader Robert C. Jubelirer of Altoona will discuss "The Role of the Majority Leader in the Passage of Legislation" at Juniata College Wednesday, May 16 at 8:15 p.m. in the Ellis Hall faculty lounge.

Jubelirer's presentation, part of the G. Graybill Diehm Lecture series, is open to the public at no charge.

A graduate of the Pennsylvania State University and Dickinson Law School, Jubelirer was first elected to the state Senate in 1974 and has served as Majority Leader since 1981. He is chairman of the Rules and Executive Nominations Commitee and is a member of the Appropriations, Judiciary and Military and Veterans Affairs committees. Jubelirer also served as chairman of the State Senate Republican Campaign Committee from 1979-82.

During his tenure in the Senate, Jubelirer has been active in the areas of economic development, improved transportation, stricter sentencing for criminals and more efficient state government. He also is active in numerous civic and community organizations including chairman of the Blair County Multiple Sclerosis Society and board member of the Allegheny Chapter of the National Multiple Sclerosis Society.

A partner in the Altoona law firm of Jubelirer, Crothers, Krier, Halpern and Smith, Jubelirer represents the 30th Senatorial District which includes Bedford, Blair, Huntingdon and Fulton counties.

The G. Graybill Diehm Lectureship in Political Science was established in honor of the late G. Graybill Diehm of Lancaster, who served 35 years as a member of the state House of Representatives, Republican County Chairman, state Senator, Chief Clerk of the state Senate and top advisor to state GOP leaders. The lectureship brings to Juniata speakers on such topics as political leadership, governmental operations and procedures on the state and local level, and participation by a responsible citizenry.

As the ninth week of the term comes to a close, it is not too early to think about and make some preliminary plans in preparation for final examinations. One of the keys to successful performance in any evaluative situation and particularly in testing situations, is prior planning. Get'ing yourself organized so that you will indeed have sufficient study time will go a long way in enhancing your chances of doing well on finals. Sounds pretty straightforward and rather simplistic, doesn't it? Unfortunately, many students find it hard to get organized until the last minute, and then it just might be too late.

Often times students will come to me and say that they lost an entire grade on the final. For example, they may have gone into the exam with a B and then ended up with a C in the course because of poor performance on the final. While there are no magic formulas or panaceas for success, a few basic suggestions may help you maintain, indeed, even help to raise your course grade.

In my opinion, the most single effective exam preparation strategy is simulation. It consists of creating or approximating the conditions that one will encounter before the actual testing occurs. This is particularly helpful if one is affected by test anxiety. Simulation is an attempt to desensitize oneself to the anxiety-producing situation. It is nothing more than practicing and rehearsing prior to the scheduled event. It only stands to reason that the more familiar one is with a particular situation, the more successful one will be.

A second suggestion to enhance test performance, and it ties in with simulation, is referred to as "predicting the exam." In other words, what can one reasonably expect to see on an exam based upon the material covered in the course. There are a number of ways to accomplish this: (1) talking with the professor regarding format (essay, multiple choice) and content; (2) reviewing old exams as a means of determining possible test material (many profs keep old exams on file for just this purpose); (3) forming a study group to help insure that all key materials are covered from more than one person's perspective (many heads may be better than one); and finally, constructing your own exam(s) based upon class notes, outside readings and text material. These are only four suggestions for predicting the exam and you can probably come up with additional ways to do it.

Next week we will continue our discussion on how to deal more effectively with final exams.

"Creep Shows" Preview

by Beth Gallagher

Horror sets the mood this Friday night when "The Creep Shows" take over the movie screen at 7:30 in Alumni Hall.

The movie opens with a little boy paging through a comic magazine. Infuriated to discover this, his father throws the magazine away. This triggers the little boy's vivid imagination all the more until suddenly, the comic strip comes to life.

The first of four such 'horror tales' takes place in a graveyard. Every year on the anniversary of its occupant's death, the grave is visited by the person who murdered him — no less, his daughter. This year's grave event takes a different course when the father comes out of the grave and to life for what else — REVENGE.

The next plot witnesses the disaster of an adulterous love affair. Upon discovering that his wife is cheating on him, a madman kidnaps her and takes her to the beach. Her fate is cast to the sands, as he buries her alive and waits for the tide to come in. And what of her lover? Of course, he awaits the same fate. The madman does not have the final laugh; for as revenge would have it, he gets a taste of his own medicine.

The third creep show is the more humorous of the four. It features the discovery of a centuries old tasmanian devil creature. Quite a few students and professors fall prey to the creature on the loose on a college campus before he is at last caged again.

The final story depicts an immaculate man in a modern penthouse apartment. In his obsession with cleanliness, the man loses the ability to handle normal crises, such as household cockroaches. The cockroaches get the best of his sanity and over run him and his apartment.

The movie closes with that familiar shot of the comic book (what else?). This time, though, all the characters are kept inanimate.

True horror lovers will find "Creep Shows" disappointing, as many of the scenes appear fictitious and cheap. But for the average person who enjoys a laugh along with a little horror, the "Creep Shows" will provide adequate entertainment for only $1.50. Don't forget — tickets can be purchased at the door.

Gibbel recognized for leadership

In recognition of his many years of volunteer service to Juniata College, Henry H. Gibbel of Lititz has been presented with the Outstanding Volunteer of the Year Award by the Central Pennsylvania Chapter of the National Society of Fund Raising Executives.

A 1957 Juniata graduate and current member of the college's Board of Trustees, Gibbel's award was the first one ever presented by the Central Pennsylvania Chapter, and honors his "exceptional leadership skills in coordinating groups of volunteers for major fund raising projects." Gibbel was nominated for the award by the college.

Most recently as General Chairman of the Kennedy Sports+Recreation Center phase of the Century II Campaign at Juniata, Gibbel has provided leadership for some 150 volunteers and raised approximately $4.9 million for the college.

Gibbel also has served the college as president of the Alumni Association, alumni representative to the Board of Trustees from 1973-76 and in a variety of other volunteer roles. He was named to a permanent seat on the Board of Trustees in 1978.

"Many of Juniata's successful fund raising campaigns, including the recent effort of the new Kennedy Sports+Recreation Center, can be attributed to the leadership of Henry Gibbel," said Juniata President Frederick M. Binder. "Henry has always been anxious to lend his support to college projects. We benefit from his dedication, seek his leadership and trust his advice. The successful completion of the $4.5 million Kennedy Sports+Recreation Center campaign is the most recent example of Henry's efforts on behalf of Juniata," Dr. Binder said. "Henry is representative of the long tradition of trustee leadership Juniata has drawn from Central Pennsylvania."

Gibbel, executive vice president of Lititz Mutual Insurance Company and chairman of the board of the National Association of Mutual Insurance Companies, also serves as an officer and director of the Penn Charter Mutual Insurance Company, Excess Mutual Reinsurance Company, and is secretary/treasurer and past president of the Pennsylvania Association of Mutual Insurance Companies.

In addition, Gibbel is a director of Farmers First Bank in Lititz, trustee of the Mutual Insurance Education Foundation, vice chairman and trustee of Brethren Village and a member of the President's Council of Bethany Theological Seminary. He and his wife, the former Joan Reist, have three children including Henry R., a 1981 Juniata graduate.

The Central Pennsylvania Chapter of the National Society of Fund Raising Executives is dedicated to the development and growth of professional fund raising managers committed to the preservation and enhancement of the philanthropic process of society.

Snyder Delivers Lecture

"Covenant Ethics and Biomedical Decision-Making" was the topic of a J. Omar Good Lecture given at Juniata College Monday, May 7 in the Ellis Hall faculty lounge.

A native of West Virginia, Dr. Snyder received his B.A. degree from Manchester College, his B.D. degree from Bethany Theological Seminary and his Th.D. degree from Princeton Theological Seminary. In addition, he has studied at Goettingen University in Germany, the University of Oslo in Norway, Pontifical Institute of Christian Archaeology in Italy and Cambridge University in England.

Dr. Snyder has been a member of the Bethany faculty since 1959 and also has been a visiting professor at Garrett Theological Seminary, Lutheran School of Theology, Evangelical Theological Seminary and Chicago Theological Seminary.

Students' Hobo Trip Successful

by Mary McDougall

Approximately 60 students were given the opportunity to prove themselves on an obstacle course on the annual field trip for Behavioral Analysis of Organization, May 3-4.

The obstacle course, consisting of eight stations, is designed to build self-confidence and encourage group cooperation. The HOBO students, divided into groups of approximately 10 each, were asked to cross a creek on rope bridges, get their group across a 10-foot wall and an "electric wall," among other tasks.

"It was a great feeling when we finished an obstacle — really satisfying," said Mary Jo Rizzo. "I did things I never pictured myself doing."

If we don't they nab us for an overdue book or something on May 26 and we have to go to summer school for five weeks to learn how it is to be worn properly.

Students Perform in Oller

The sounds of spring were filling Oller Hall last Friday night as the Juniata College Concert Band presented its Spring Concert. The concert, which was originally planned to be an outdoor concert, included marches from around the world.

The concert opened with the Bicentennial march "Parade of the Tall Ships", by Jay Chattaway. This was followed by selections from "Return of the Jedi", by John Williams. Other highlights of the concert included selections from the Broadway musical, "The Music Man", and the jazz-rock tune, "Odyssey."

Other selections included the following marches: "Valdres" from Norway, "Lassus Trombone" from the United States, and "Amparito Roca" from Spain. The concert concluded with the English march "Colonel Bogey".

The Concert Band, which is under the direction of Associate Professor of Music, Ibrook Tower, performs two concerts annually. One concert is on Parent's Weekend, and the other in the spring. The band plans to perform once more this year. That will be during Commencement.

Banquets to Honor Students

Both the Centerboard and Communications awards banquets are going to occur in the upcoming week. They will be held in the Ballroom of Ellis to honor students involved in these areas of campus life.

Centerboard will be honoring those individuals who have helped with such programs as Parent's Weekend, Homecoming, Spring Fling and those who are members of the Centerboard organizations such as Circle K, the Film Committee and the Fine Arts Committee.

The Communications Awards Banquet, to be held on Tuesday, consists of the Alfarata, The Juniatian, and V103.

The J. Omar Good Lecture Series was established with funds from the estate of the late J. Omar Good, an 1896 Juniata graduate and Philadelphia printing executive who left the college $1 million, the largest gift ever made to Juniata.

An active member of Philadelphia's First Church of the Brethren where he served as missionary treasurer, clerk and trustee, Mr. Good died in 1969 at the age of 92.

Special Olympics

by Kay Rockafellow

Special Olympics are scheduled for Tuesday, May 22nd on the Memorial Football field from 10 a.m. to 2:30 p.m.

The sporting events are designed to help those children who are handicapped enjoy the spirit of competition and gain a sense of self-worth. Students from the college are asked to participate and help with the clinics. The clinics will be run from 1 p.m. to 2 p.m. as a form of entertainment for the younger children. Meanwhile, the older children will be occupied with other events.

Some of the ideas for the clinics are kickball, frisbee, and an egg toss. Painting faces and blowing soap bubbles seem to be all-time favorites for the kids, too. Lisa Fusco, who is organizing the clinics, also hopes to get the Huntingdon No. 2 Fire Company to donate their time and a fire truck for the children to explore.

Interested persons can obtain volunteer forms at the information desk in Ellis. The deadline for the forms is May 16th. Supplies for the clinics will be provided by the Pennsylvania Special Olympics Area J. David Distoer is the area coordinator.

Even though Special Olympics are during finals, why not come out for a study break and join in the fun. Special Olympics provide us all with the opportunity to do something for others.

mented, "I have a great deal of respect for the group I was with. They had a good approach to the task and to each other."

The obstacle course was just one aspect of the two-day trip to Camp Blue Diamond. The HOBO students arrived at the camp early Thursday evening. After dinner some chose to follow Dr. Cherry on a hike, despite the steady rain. This was followed by the main activity of the evening, the presentation of skits. Each of the six groups performed a skit they had created parodying some aspect of HOBO.

Friday morning started at 7:15 for the campers. After breakfast the groups departed for the obstacle course.

"I was pleasantly surprised by what a positive experience I had on the trip," said Sue Ferguson. "It wasn't at all what I expected."

Rugby Seasons Close

Both Teams Improve Markedly

by Andy Hiscock

This week, I think that the Juniata Men's and Women's Rugby Clubs should get their share of print. I don't think that the Rugby Clubs get their share of attention here at Juniata. After all, this sport is right up there when it comes to being physical, as well as being fast paced. The Men's and Women's Rugby season may not be as extensive as Juniata's other sports, but the players turn out every week, and practice hard for their matches. These two teams have been in existence for a relatively short time here at Juniata, but the teams have steadily improved, and the participants enjoy themselves (which is the true goal of sports)!!

This past week, the Men's and Women's Rugby seasons came to a close, and I would like to give you a recap of the action. On Saturday, May 5th, under the supervision of faculty advisor Julie Keehner, the Women's team hosted Bucknell, and later in the day, the Men hosted Allegheny College.

The lady Ruggers had a tough time battling the Bucknell "Amazons". Bucknell jumped out to a (20-0) lead by the time the first half came to a close, but the second half was a different story. The Juniata ladies tightened up their defense extensively, and held their opponents to only one score during the entire second half. This type of play is what helped the lady Indians to a victory over Cal-State earlier in the season and provided the light at the end of the tunnel for the girls in the years to come. The lady ruggers had a (1-3) record for the season, and for captain Stephanie Porter and the rest of the girls, next year is something to look forward to.

Later on Saturday (May 5th), the men took on Allegheny College and here is where the sparks flew. This match was extremely hard hitting, with both sides suffering heavy losses. Among our casualty list were Mark Kirchgasser (multiple leg injuries), Chris Herman (clobbered about the head and shoulders), and Mark Murdoch (torn cartilage). There was a crowd of between 50-70 people on hand, and the action was intoxicating! The men suffered a (14-6) loss, but they kept the match close with a try (a try is like a touchdown in football, and is worth 4 points) by Bruce Catando followed by a 2 point kick by Mark Kirchgasser. The men have been improving all year, and this final game provided fuel to the fire with the ruggers scoring their first points of season. After the matches, the guys try to unwind at their post game parties (no rugby queen was selected this year from the many applicants). Something that you may want to see would be the Alumni Game scheduled to be played on Sunday, May 12th, which pits the Men's Rugby team against various returning Alumni members (1:00 p.m.). Captain of the men's team this year was Tony Gentile who was responsible for organizing the practices and setting up the games. As one player was quoted as saying, "Despite the (0-5) record, we had a heck of a good time!!!" Both the Men's and Ladies' Rugby Clubs have found the fine line that allows them to compete and have fun at the same time, which I feel may be lost in many athletic organizations of today. Both teams welcome anyone interested in playing on next year's team. Contact either captain

Nat'l Track Tourney

Two Juniata College track members qualified for the 1984 NCAA Track & Field Tournament to be held between May 21-26th at Carleton College in Northfield, Minnesota.

Peggy Evans qualified for the tournament in the triple jump field event at the Western Maryland Invitational on April 7th, 1984. Peggy made a jump of 33 feet 8½ inches to put herself well over the 33 foot minimum qualifying jump set by the NCAA to move into the tournament. Since then, Peggy has broken the 37 foot barrier. Peggy Evans is an Accounting and Finance major here at Juniata, and is the daughter of Mary Ann Indovina of Gleneagle Dr., Murrysville.

Sophomore Gino Perri has also qualified for the national tournament. Gino was able to make the tourney in the javelin throwing field event when he surpassed the NCAA qualifying mark of 206 feet 8 inches with his throw of 207 feet 4 inches during a Tri-meet with Messiah and York Colleges on April 27th, 1984. Gino has also gone on to break Juniata records with his 212 feet 4 inch javelin throw at the MAC's along with his new school record of 46 feet 11 inch shotput throw during this year's MAC's. Both of these throws won him 1st place and 20 points for the team in the 1984 M.A.C.'s. Gino Perri is an English/Secondary Education major here at Juniata, and is the son of Esther Perri of Windriver Dr., McKees Rocks. "We are all very proud of these two fine gifted athletes," said Head Coach Al Hartman.

Indian Baseball Makes Good Showing in MAC's

by Joe Scialabba

Thanks to Wilkes, Juniata found itself in the Middle Atlantic Conference baseball championships last weekend at Elizabethtown. However, when the dust finally cleared on Saturday evening Coach Bill Berrier and his Indians had to settle for a second-place finish.

Juniata got in to the MAC tourney after Wilkes was discovered having an ineligible player. Berrier notified NCAA officials who ruled the Colonels had used a player for five seasons and had to forfeit all games in 1984 which he played. The result was the MAC Northwest title went to Juniata. After learning of the decision on Friday, the Indians had little time to prepare for the big day on Saturday.

In the semi-finals Juniata faced Northeast division champion Delaware Valley. The Indians used a powerful offensive attack to take the Aggies 12-8. With the victory, they moved on into the afternoon conference final with Western Maryland.

The Tribe again had the bats booming and looked to be in great position to win the crown leading by a 12-6 score in the eighth inning. The Green Terrors came back, however, to tie it up with six runs in the inning. A scoreless ninth inning sent the game to extra innings.

After neither team scored in the tenth, Western Maryland took the championship with a single-run in the eleventh. A triple and a sacrifice fly drove home the game-winner for the new MAC champs. Final score: Western Maryland 13, Juniata 12.

For Juniata it was a bitter defeat but a good showing. The Indians now hope to use their weekend game as a stepping stone to a strong finish to the regular season.

If the Indians can finish off the year strong, they could gain an at-large bid to the NCAA Division Three tournament which begins later this month. Juniata has an excellent chance to come-up with a second straight 20-win season and hopefully the national bid. The only obstacle is that the remaining games are all on the road. If the Tribe can come up big in the next week, they could be playoff bound this year. Last year, despite a 20-7 record, the Indians were passed-up by the selection committee.

Right now, the Indians are looking good at 16-7. A strong finish will make the Juniata offering similar to last year. It might be up to the selection committee again. Let's hope they choose right this time around.

Play-Offs Begin

by Andy Hiscock

The 1984 I.M. Co-Rec Volleyball season has finally ended. It was a long and grueling road to the playoffs with a dogfight waged for every point.

Here is some of the action from the last week of play (5/3/84). In Co-Rec V-Ball action, "Umkas" defeated "Mohummed's Revenge" in three games (15-17), (16-14), (11-3). "Umkas" moved into sole possesion of third place with the win. "Squamas" stayed in 4th place with their victory over "Our New Team" (15-4), (15-9). In Blue Flight Action, "Cloister Clergy" remained in 1st place by defeating "Thrusters" in a close three game match (15-13), (6-15), (11-8). At the time of printing, the play-offs have not yet begun, but they are on now and everyone is welcomed to attend.

Tennis Ends
MAC Rep Does Well

by Ginny Krall

The Women's Tennis Team closed out the short 1984 season last week by dropping a 1-8 match to Bucknell.

Ginny Krall picked up the only Juniata point in a three set battle 4-6, 7-6, 6-1. Lady Indian Kim Detwiler also went three sets, but came up just short in a very close match.

Although the conditions this spring and the inexperience of the team hindered the Lady Indians, all team members are looking forward to a productive and very successful 1985 season. Women's tennis next year will see all six starters coming back and the much needed experience that will help in match situations.

Last Friday Detwiler, Krall and Leeanne Egolf all traveled to Gettysburg College to participate in the individual M.A.C. tournament. In doubles Detwiler and Krall fell in the first round to a duo from Dickinson. The Juniata representatives went three sets but fell in a very disappointing third set 5-7, 7-6, 5-7.

Egolf made her singles debut in the first round by bumping off the fourth seeded M.A.C. player from Swathmore. She continued into the second round and was victorious against a player from Elizabethtown. Egolf then lost in the quarterfinal match by falling to John Hopkins in straight sets.

Overall the Juniata representation at the M.A.C. tournament was very impressive. This also shows hope for the 1985 season. Egolf's performance was just one representation of the unrealized potential this team has.

Dave Murphy follows through on his swing that gave him a bloop single to centerfield on May 1st versus Bucknell. The Indians went on to win the game (7-4) and moved closer to a potential National berth after their 2nd place finish in the M.A.C.'s. Photo by Tom Hildebrandt.

The JUNIATIAN

Vol. XXXV, No. 24 | Juniata College — Huntingdon, Pa. 16652 | May 17, 1984

Faculty Promotions Announced

Three Juniata College faculty members were promoted by the college's Board of Trustees during its annual meeting held recently on campus.

President Frederick M. Binder announced the Board's action, naming the three involved. Promoted to associate professor are Dr. Douglas S. Glazier, assistant professor of biology and James R. Donaldson, assistant professor of economics and business administration. Promoted to assistant professor is Thomas R. Thompson, II, instructor in economics and business administration.

A native of Michigan, Glazier joined the Juniata faculty in 1980 after serving as a technical editor of the Ecological Society of America. He received his B.A. degree cum laude from Oakland University and his Ph.D. from Cornell University where he also served as a teaching assistant in general biology, vertebrate zoology and ecology. He also was a teaching assistant at Oakland University.

Glazier's academic interests are in the areas of animal ecology, biogeography and evolutionary theory. He is the author of several papers and articles, and has been the recipient of numerous professional awards and grants.

Editorial

The final chapter of 83-84

Once again it is time to close the book on another memory filled year at Juniata College. In this final editorial of the year, the Juniatian wishes to re-cap some of the highs and lows of 1983-84.

September '83 brought a new freshman class to Juniata, young and unwise to the ways of the campus. The class of '87 quickly adapted, though, after meeting profs, upperclassmen, and joining activities. Some special weekends of fall term are always Parent's Weekend and Homecoming; this year all the more so as women's volleyball action dominated both weekends. On other sports notes, the football, soccer, and cross-country teams did not live up to potential, but the women's field hockey team saved face by making it to the MAC semi-finals. November came fast and fall term drew to a close. Nevertheless the blahs of final exams were overshadowed by the excitement of going home to share Thanksgiving with family and friends.

The first snow of the year happend our first week into winter term, and very appropriately ushered in the Christmas season at Juniata. The beauty and pagentry of the Madrigal Dinner, South's Semi-formal and other holiday parties made the three weeks unforgettable. Christmas break allowed us to return home once again to enjoy the holidays and ring in Orson Wells' long awaited '1984' with a bang. When we returned in '84, JC was ready for a new challenge at hand — a very long, cold winter term.

The warmth of Valentine's day shed some light on the cold winter months, as we can't forget the flooding which devastated Huntingdon. For East Houses residents Muddy Run caught everyone's attention as it flooded the parking lots, baseball field, and lawns.

March came in like a lion and so did the Class of '84 when they conquered their third consecutive victory in the Annual All Class Night competition. A surprising second place went to Juniata's newest class — a feat both rare and commendable.

April and May seem too blurred to distinguish. Between spring breaks (in Florida for many), the senior banquet, the May Day breakfast, Convocation, SpringFest and a pig roast, the spring weeks flew by.

This past weekend, from what we remember, culminated in the most exciting, wild, and crazy two days of the whole year. The first ever Spring Fling, coupled with Mud Volleyball kicked off the weekend perfectly. Raft Regattas at Juniata just get better and better, this year thanks to the efforts of some very dedicated people. All three events are locked into our memories for years to come.

For the Juniatian staff, 1983-84 has ended on a good note. To the class of '84, we wish you the best of luck in all your endeavors. Freshmen, Sophomores, and Juniors — see you in September.

Letters to the Editor

To the Editor:

My colleagues and I was distressed to see the cartoon chosen for this week's Juniatian (5-10-84). This caricature of a black woman supposedly epitomizing the "rural and urban minority poor" is highly offensive. The labeling of this bleary-eyed, hefty woman as a "Rumpie" is equally tasteless. I would hope that the Juniatian staff would be more sensitive to material utilizing such derogatory stereotyped. This cartoon is not worthy of an educated audience.

Luise Van Keuren

To The Editors,

I am writing after having read the most recent issue of your paper. I have to say that I am displeased and unimpressed but not surprised. Your treatment of the resignations of J. Westwater and Dr. Binder and the relevant issues was typically and pathetically lacking. I am not one to often read the Juniatian but today I readily searched through it looking for some information in these areas and was very disappointed. Why was there no mention of the registrar whatsoever? Why was your coverage of Dr. Binder's resignation so incomplete? Surely you must understand that this is important news. Certainly you must realize that students want to know what is happening. Are you deliberately keeping us uninformed? As I read your paper I wondered if you realized what you have done to it by sidestepping reality. You've admitted that the Juniatian is not a real paper and that you are not concerned with what is really happening on campus (and I don't mean May Day and Raft Regatta). You've

by Kathleen Achor

Fellow JCers:

With the wave of resignations thundering through the Juniata community, some of which have been made so eloquently, I thought it only fair to alert you that my name must be added to the list.

Yes friends, as of this very day I am going into at least temporary retirement as a columnist. Rather sudden? Well, yes, I have somehow faithfully managed to slip my column under the door just in the nick of time biweekly, without showing any outward signs of discontent at the nature of my job. It isn't really a matter of salary either, for I knew what I was getting into from the start. It's not any kind of personality problem with the staff, for to be honest, this is a very independent kind of job (I never see them), and I am able to keep my own hours — or hour, as the case may be.

So now you're probably wondering, "If everything is so great, why are you leaving?" Well, now I am forced to expose a highly discriminatory policy to which the Juniatian adheres: in order to be a Muddy Run columnist, one has to be a senior enrolled at Juniata.

Shocking, eh? Something I'm sure none of you have really given much, if any, thought to. But these are the facts. I was aware of this ugly side when I took the job. It's just time to face reality. I graduate in ten days, and despite the fact that I qualified for the job a year ago, I'm being pushed aside for others who will undoubtedly be more in touch with the campus than I will be in just a few months.

So, accepting my fate, I figure that now is the time to make my final statements.

First, I would like to publicly thank both President Binder and Assistant Dean/Registrar Westwater (fellow resigners, by the way) for their written support of my literary efforts this year. Much appreciated encouragement.

Secondly, I would like to forgive my fellow Juniatians for not contributing to the Muddy Run Restoration Project. I thought that this would truly be a way to stamp out student apathy, but perhaps it was just because no one has any money anyway. My sole contribution came from two retired liberal professors who were able to grasp the true social significance of my endeavor. I thank them for their support, and note to the rest of you that it's not too late to try to bring back Muddy Run — it's part of Juniata's heritage. (Write Muddy Run Restoration Project, Box 1052).

I would like to thank Alyson Pfister for sharing the burden (they're forcing her into retirement as well).

I would like to point out that making students pay a $200 nonrefundable registration fee before they know whether or not they will be able to return on their summer earnings is tyranny.

If I have any regrets about life at JC, it is that I never won an intramural champion T-shirt (although The Few, The Proud, The Anarchists put up a good fight).

I encourage everyone to vote Democratic in the November elections (the Meadow Party, running Bill the Cat, would also suffice under the circumstances).

I thank the Juniatian for giving me my first job as a writer, even if they are forcing me to make this resignation statement with honor before they fire me. They'll be sorry when I'm rich and famous.

For, like I said folks, my retirement is only temporary. Rumor has it that Muddy Run leads to syndication. (I know it is a rumor as there seem to be no cases of this on record as of yet).

I, for one, will miss Juniata and Huntingdon.

Take good care of the banana plant.

Question: "What was your most memorable event/events here at Juniata?"

Rich Burgan: "Raft Regattas, All Class Nights, Senior Banquet, living next door and partying with Tread, Ranger Missions, the wild parties we threw at the Stumble Inn, and feeling like a garbage can."

Mike DiMatteo: "Watching a friend throw up in Muddy Run."

Michael Sachais: "I didn't know you were allowed to print that stuff in the paper."

Amy Reed: "My Hobo group experiences, my rafting and skydiving trips, Swimming and Lacrosse Clubs, Wanita's Weenies, and having my Cocker Spaniel here my last year."

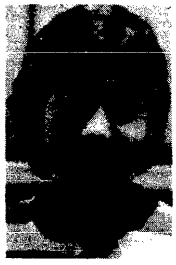
Chris "Corky" Collins: "Four great years of being in All Class Night, those obnoxious 402 parties that everybody loved, the many social and business encounters that I've had with Dean Tilden and Mr. Linetty, and finally those memorable trips down the Juniata river during Raft Regatta."

Dave Africa: "The Senior Banquet and my Junior Year abroad."

Terri Squires: "It was hard to pick but my most memorable experience at Juniata was playing in the Senior-Faculty football game at Mountain day. I like football and since I was a freshman, I couldn't wait to play in this traditional game. It was all I'd hoped it would be. I had a fantastic time."



Barb Huber: "The Hobo hike, my 21st birthday, and Wanita's Weenies."

Kip Benko: "Sophomore All Class Night, lawn party after the Senior Banquet, couch races, cooking bagels in Feruk's toaster oven, Appleby walking upside down on the ceiling, South's semi-formal in shorts and tie, our Christmas card, and our trips to Arnie's office."

Judy Eastep: "Sue O. mooning the bridge on Raft Regatta '84."

Jeff Booher (not pictured): "A panty raid on Lesher after the Storming on the Arch. I was the only one in my group who didn't get anything! Also Wanta's Weenies."

Mindy Long (not pictured): "Getting fined $30 for having a half keg in my room."

Mike Appleby: "Sophomore Raft Regatta and my attempt to get up the hill. People had to carry me up. It might be right now if I go tackle Arnie in the mud!"

and Marie Glendenning: "Bob Marley party 1984."

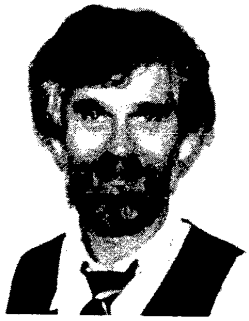
Faculty And Staff Members Announce Plans for Departures



Bruce A. Hirsch, Assistant Professor of Music , has signed with LaVerne College, Juniata's sister college, in California and will begin teaching there at the start of the upcoming academic year. Photos by Tom Hildebrandt.

by Amy Smith

As the end of the year approaches, Juniata is faced once again with the task of altering administration and staff positions in preparation for the 1984-85 academic year.

According to Dr. Donald T. Hartman, Dean of Academic Affairs, this spring has not been as hectic as previous ones despite the many changes that are occurring. Along with the resignation of Dr. James Westwater, college Registrar, about which Dean Hartman could offer no current information, several staff members and other administration personnel have announced their departures.

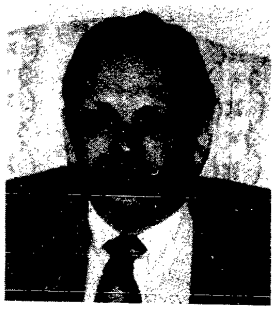
Four staff members have formally announced their transfers to other schools. Professor Bruce A. Hirsch and Marjorie E. Hirsch, Music department, Dr. Jeff W. Borroughs, Psychology department and Dr. David H. Eyman, Director of Libraries, have set their termination dates for the conclusion of this school year.

There will also be a temporary loss of three staff members due to sabbaticals and part time field experience. Dr. David R. Drews, Psychology department, will be spending the upcoming year at the University of South Carolina. Dr. Wilfred G. Norris, Physics department, will be in Columbia for a portion of next year. Robert F. Reilly Sociology department, will be working in a hospital with medical teams for part of the 1984 year.

Dr. Robert Clouse, the J. Omar Good visiting Distinguished Professor of Evangelical Christianity, will end his one year stay at Juniata in May. Claude R. Parmely, Chemistry department, has complete his initial two year stay contract and moved to a non-faculty position. Dr. Martin Clark, Sociology and Religion department has taken an indefinite leave of absence due to illness.

In addition to those who have formally informed Dean Hartman of their departure, others have verbally conveyed their intentions to leave. The name of these individuals can not be released until definite plans have been given to the administration.

Dean Hartman assures the campus community that the number of people leaving the Juniata institution is no higher than in previous years. Hartman stated that several times he received up to fifteen departure notices in one spring, not including personnel changes.



Dr. David H. Eyman, Director of Libraries, has accepted a position at Skidmore for the start of the 1984-85 school year.

J.C. Jazz Emsemble Performs

by Steve Creps

The quote "There's never anything to do at Juniata on a weeknight" is an often heard expression around campus lately. But that certainly wasn't the case last Wednesday night. Ellis Ballroom was full of activity as the Juniata College Jazz Ensemble and Steve dePerrot provided musical entertainment for the Campus Ministry Board's coffeehouse.

The entertainment began with original and contemporary music provided by pianist/singer Steve dePerrot. The evening then continued with classic and contemporary jazz from the JC Jazz Ensemble. Selections included the oldies "Blue Moon" and "In the Mood", as well as a jam session on Herbie Hancock's "Watermelon Man".

About 100 people attended the coffeehouse, which was originally planned for Detwiler Plaza. The event was coordinated by CMB member Beth Bence, and Jazz Ensemble organizers, Rob Schwartz and Doug Yokoyama. Refreshments were provided by CASE (The Committee for Alcohol Studies in Education).

Dr. Jeff Burroughs will join the Clemson University Psychology Department this fall. Burroughs has been a member of the Juniata staff since 1980.

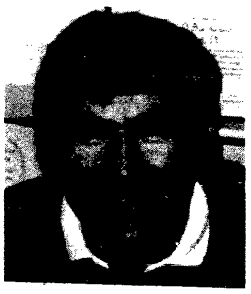
Dr. Jay Buchanan



Last week we discussed a number of ways to get ready for final exams with particular emphasis on pre-test behaviors. We stressed the importance of being organized and managing time wisely. In addition, we talked about the strategies of simulation and predicting the exam.

This final article will focus on what can be viewed as intest behaviors, that is, how one behaves during the actual testing situation.

Many students indicate that they freeze up or otherwise become anxious during an exam. They say that their performance on the exam is not reflective of their true knowledge of the material due to the anxiety that overcomes them. Indeed, most of us do experience a certain amount of anxiety prior to a situation in which our performance is being evaluated. But, for most of us, as we settle into the task, the anxiety or nervousness diminishes. This is known as facilitating anxiety and serves to enhance our performance. When one allows the anxiety to take control, it becomes debilitating and takes away from the performance of the task.

Research in test anxiety suggests two types of variables in operation during an evaluative situation. They are task relevant-variables and task-irrelevant variables. The former are those which help to accomplish the task while the latter serve to interfere with task accomplishment. Examples might include worrying (a complete waste of energy), allowing time to be an enemy rather than an ally, nervously observing others leaving the exam ahead of you, and thinking about the negative consequences of failure.

The important point is that we can learn to attend to task relevant variables, eliminate the task-irrelevant variables, and thus control our behavior in testing situations.

Test taking can be a potentially stressful situation. There are definite techniques to learn so that the anxiety experienced is facilitating and not debilitating. Space does not permit a lengthy discussion of them, but learning to relax is a key to success. Taking a deep, cleansing breath at the first indication of anxiety will go a long way in reducing that anxiety.

The use of imagery is another helpful technique. As you relax, think back to a more pleasant, anxiety-free situation and imagine yourself momentarily in that situation. Changing negative, self-fulfilling statements ("I'm going to do lousy", "I'm losing it") into more positive self-statements can help one through some critical situations during an exam.

Since this is the last article for the year, my best goes out to all of you. Have a productive and relaxing summer and remember Martin Clark's Rule No. 11: "Do not take yourself too seriously" (Thank-you Jim Lakso for mentioning that point).

J.C. Marching Band Makes Fall Plans

by Steve Creps

The Juniata College Marching and Concert Bands will get an early start next fall. Band members will be returning on August 27 to begin the 1984 summer band camp. During the camp, the band will learn the halftime shows, practice pep music, and begin work on the fall concert.

The band has many performances planned for next fall. The marching band, flags, rifles, and majorettes will be performing at all the home football games, and one away game (Wilkes). The band plans to perform a different halftime show each week, with the theme centering around Broadway shows. Drills being planned include "Cabaret", "On Broadway", "Tomorrow", "Memories", and "Ease on Down the Road."

The concert band will present its annual fall concert on Friday and Saturday evenings of Parent's Weekend. Practice for the concert is scheduled to begin during band camp and continue on Tuesday and Thursday evenings until the concert.

Director Ibrook Tower is expecting a membership of 60 instrumentalists, 10 majorettes, 8 flags, and 5 rifles for next fall. Upperclassmen, as well as freshmen as encouraged to join any of these groups next fall, if they so desire. If interested in joining the band students should contact one of the following people: Ibrook Tower (Director), Steve Creps, Danielle Rupp (Drum Majors), Marianne Shipp (Flags), or Bridget Berich (Majorettes).

As a marching band is so important to school spirit, the JC marching band hopes to acquire some new members to further enhance the spirit of the college.

Dr. Frederick Binder was awarded a plaque of appreciation by graduating Weight-lifting Club President Henry Coyne (left) and incoming club President Ken Osiecki (right). Binder was awarded the plaque on Monday for his many fine contributions to the Weight-lifting Club over the past two years as club advisor. The club looks forward to having President Binder continue his leadership in the upcoming year.

missed the real news. You've admitted that the paper exists for nothing more than classifieds, lecture series, and movie reviews. What's more you've denied students the opportunity to understand what is happening administratively in an institution that they pay to attend, by a paper they pay to support. Are you inferring that students are not even concerned with this kind of issue? I feel that this is very cheap on behalf of the Juniatian, but as I said, I am not surprised. I know that the Juniatian is probably not objective enough, or secure enough to print this letter, or part of it, but I'm not concerned with that. I just want you to know that you've made a farce of your paper and disgusted at least one of your readers. I welcome any response.

Sincerely,
Paul J. Wagner '86

Student Honored With Scholarship

Juniata College sophomore Alan E. Thomas of Meyersdale has been selected by the St. Andrews Society of Philadelphia as an Andrew Mutch Scholar for the 1984-85 academic year, Juniata President Frederick M. Binder has announced.

Thomas was one of only three students selected from among nominees from numerous Pennsylvania colleges and universities. He will spend his junior year in Scotland studying at the University of St. Andrews. The $7,500 scholarship award will cover expenses such as tuition, room and board, books and transportation.

Since 1957, the St. Andrews Society has sent students to the Universities of St. Andrews, Aberdeen and Edinburgh. Scholarships have gone to students from such schools as Ursinus College, Pennsylvania State University, Swathmore College, University of Pennsylvania, Temple University, Bucknell University, Franklin and Marshall College, Haverford College and Dickinson College.

Thomas is the third Juniata student to study in Scotland as an Andrew Mutch Scholar. Heather J. MacCrindle, a 1983 Juniata graduate, spent the 1981-82 academic year at the University of St. Andrews, and Mark D. Hyssong, a 1980 graduate, spent the 1978-79 academic year at the University of Aberdeen.

Selection of Andrew Mutch Scholars is based on a number of factors including academic achievement, Scottish heritage, extra-curricular activities, sincerity and integrity.

"The competition for this prestigious award is extremely keen," Dr. Binder said. "The fact that Alan is one of only three students selected is a tribute to him and to Juniata as well. This is the third time in seven years that a Juniata student has been selected as an Andrew Mutch Scholar, and I am proud of this distinguished achievement," the president said.

A 1982 graduate of Meyersdale High School where he was a member of the National Honor Society, Thomas is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Adrian Thomas of 134 Center St. The biology and pre-medicine major is a Dean's List student and the recipient of the Alumni Annual Support Fund Scholarship.

The official announcement of the scholarship was made at the college's recent Awards Convocation where Thomas also received the Juniata College Honor Society Award for academic achievement.

Indians Finish With Excellent Record

by Joe Scialabba

The Juniata College baseball season came to a close last week with two disappointing losses. Coach Bill Berrier's Indians finished with an excellent record, however, going 18-9 in 1984.

The Tribe, after finishing second in the Middle Atlantic Conference tournament, still had hopes of a NCAA at-large berth but was passed up again. The key setback for the Indians was last Friday's trip to York.

The twinbill was of major importance for both teams in their quests for Division III playoff spots. York, sporting an excellent record, was in a similar position as the visiting Indians.

Game one was a disaster as the hosts put on an offensive show in running away to a 9-0 shutout win. Juniata's Rich Howey, the ace Indian righthander, had problems early and couldn't calm the York bats. Howey, despite the loss, had another great year on the mound, losing only two games.

In the nightcap, Juniata jumped to a lead thanks to some timely hitting, including two homers by senior Grady Paul. York wouldn't quit though, and the hosts took the lead for good in the bottom of the sixth and held on in the seventh to record an 8-6 win. The doubleheader sweep almost assured York of a playoff berth.

For Juniata it turned out to be the close of the season as Saturday's twinbill at Lock Haven was washed out and will not be rescheduled.

The Indians did pick up one win last week in their only other game as they nipped Gettysburg 9-8. Juniata took an early lead in the Thursday afternoon affair and had to hold on in the end. Freshman Mike Smith came on to save it with the Bullet's tying run on second in the ninth. The game was played at Gettysburg.

As the season ends it is fair to say that the baseball team again showed why Juniata is well respected on the small college diamonds of Pennsylvania and the east coast. Despite missing the NCAA's, the season was a very good and exciting one for the team and nothing to be anything but proud of for all those involved. The team will lose some key people, but plenty of experience will return to make the 1985 Juniata baseball team a winner and playoff contender again.

A New Twist for Soccer

by Carl-Georg Boge

This year's Altoona soccer affairs were changed by seven people from Juniata College. Faculty Bob Reilly and Klaus Jaeger, Admission Associate Director Mike Sexton, alumni Geoff Clarke and graduating students Barry Keijster, Carl-Georg Boge and Christoph Schwemmlein joined the Altoona YMCA Indoor Soccer League team "United Beverage".

They converted the team's last years' no win record to win one of the two-foot high cups, which will now decorate the business of team sponsor and captain local distributor ("United Beverage") Dave Paretta.

The team reached an impressive 6:2 record. By doing so they surprised some of the other teams who were not willing to recognize that one team had brought in some outside skill superior to theirs.

Nevertheless, their emphasis on passing rather than individual actions let them score 130 goals, some 50 more than the second team in the league. Klaus Jaeger, known as an outstanding J.C. Intramural scorer, accounted for a total of 30 goals, an average of almost four per game. Thus he earned the trophy for "the most goals scored." Later, Klaus Jaeger announced his retirement from active playing.

After their final 14:9 last Wednesday against the second team (each of the five competing teams had to play each other twice) the Juniata branch joined their Altoona teammates for an appropriate celebration of the event.

Jaeger and Co. can look back at a successful year which's first half had ended with a most narrow (and violent) 2:3 overtime defeat in the J.C. Intramural final of winter term.

Co-Rec Volleyball

by Andy Hiscock

This year, the whole volleyball system was split up into two different divisions (A & B). Division "A" consisted of seven teams while Division "B" consisted of eighteen teams. The "A" league was designed for more advance players because it allowed spiking and overhand serves while Division "B" did not. At the end of the regular season, the top four teams from Division "A" qualified for the play-offs with the 1st place team playing the 4th place team while the 2nd place team played the 3rd place team to make up the Semi-final round of the play-offs. The two winners then moved on to Final Championship Match.

Division "B" had a different play-off system since more teams were enrolled. Since the "B" division had 18 teams in it, it was further broken down into two separate flights (Green & Blue). The top 5 teams from each flight qualified for the play-offs. The top 3 teams in each flight received First-Round play-off byes. The four remaining teams after the first round met in the Quarter-finai Round. After the Quarter-finals, the two remaining teams from each flight meet to find the Flight champion who then goes on to the Final Championship Match versus the champion from the other flight.

In Division "A" Semifinal play-off action on Tues., May 8th, both matches went to the maximum three games. "Little Dinkers" were able to get past "Sables" in three games (15-5), (3-15), and (16-6). In the second game, "Romf's" defeated "Better Than Avg." by an even narrower score. The Final Championship Game was held on Thursday May 10th between "The Little Dinkers" and "Romf's". This match went into the third game of the match and even went over the eleven point score to finally decide the victor. When it was all over, "The Little Dinkers" were Division "A" Champs (15-4), (10-15), (12-10).

In Division "B" Play-Off action, First Round winners were; in the Green Flight: "The Other Team" defeating "Psilocybin" and in the Blue Flight, "Thrusters" beat "Off The Wall". In the Quarterfinals, (Green) "The Other Team" beat "Umkas" and "Squamas" beat "Temporal Stasis"; while (Blue) "Few, the Proud, the Anarchists" beat "Tequilla Sunsets" and "Thrusters" beat "Cloister Clergy". In the Final Championship Match Thursday, May 10th, "The Other Team" was able to defeat "Thrusters" in two games (15-2), (15-7).

World News Update

by Cindy Duick

WASHINGTON — Walter F. Mondale announced Sunday that he will meet with Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko in New York on September 27, one day before President Reagan's scheduled meeting with Gromyko in Washington. Mondale also stated that the Soviets will gain nothing by postponing the negotiations past the November elections because, "If I am elected president, I will drive a tough bargain and I will not sign any agreement that fails to protect American security."

Vice-President Bush supported the Reagan-Gromyko meeting, playing down talk of "election year politics" by saying, "Let's just be glad that they are meeting."

ENNIS, Ireland — The World Bank has proposed a confidential plan to create emergency aid for the most impoverished black African nations, according to Western diplomats here. The Bank report, recently distributed to governments meeting here, explained that unlike other regions of the developing world, black Africa's economic problems have been worsening rather than improving. Officials said privately that the amount of the fund was thought to be about a billion dollars.

The Reagan administration and the West German government oppose the idea saying that it is not the best way to aid the African countries. Other Western nations, led by France, are sympathetic to the proposal and say that the Latin American debt crisis is distracting attention from the situation in Africa.

LONDON — Princess Diana gave birth to her second son, Prince Henry Charles Albert David, on Saturday September 15 at St. Mary's Hospital. The six pound baby was born after nine hours of labor with Prince Charles at her side. The bulletin posted at the castle of Balmoral where the other members of the Royal family, including the Queen, were on holiday read, "Her Royal Highness the Princess of Wales was safely delivered of a son at 4:20 p.m. today. Her Royal Highness and the child are both well."

New Policy Set at Health Center

by Scott Snyder

Over the summer some changes have been made in the Health Insurance Plan and the Health Center policy. These new changes will cost the student an initial direct payment but will result in an indirect savings.

The new policy at the Health Center was brought to light by Julie Keehner, Assistant Dean of Student Services. The policy has established a $1.50 charge per visit to the nurse or doctor. This $1.50 charge will include the visit itself and any needed medication. The primary reasons for the new charge were budgetary concerns. The Health Center needed an increase in funds in order to maintain the services already offered and prevent any reduction in the services. Since Juniata is not a college that normally charges fees, such as activity fees, the possibility of a standard health service fee charged to all students was ruled out. Julie added that she felt that the new policy will help to educate the student on health care outside the college community as visits to doctors outside of the college are not free.

The Accident and Sickness Insurance Program also underwent some changes this summer. Bill Alexander, in charge of business affairs at the college, feels the new policy has more to offer to the student than did the old policy. The new policy has a $100.00 deductible payable by the student. Under the old policy the college paid this deductible. The exception to this new $100.00 deductible applies to any accident incurred by an athlete in a varsity sport. Any charges over the $100.00 revert to a valid policy of the student, such as a parents policy; any cost over the amount paid by that policy will be paid by the college upwards to $5000.00 The old policy only paid up to $3000.00 of the excess cost not covered by the student's valid policy.

Another added benefit of this new policy is that it offers coverage up to twelve months, whereas the old policy only offered coverage for nine months. A voluntary Sickness Insurance Program is also offered by the college at a nominal cost to the student. For more information concerning the new Accident and Sickness Insurance Program, stop in at the business office and pick up a brochure.

Frosh Stormed by Upperclassmen

by Missy Mohrey

The annual Storming of the Arch, which took place September 12 at about 7 p.m. was once again a success. The upperclassmen proved to be victorious by not permitting the freshmen to penetrate the Arch. Spectators lined the banks of the Cloister courtyard in anticipation of the customary event. True to tradition, the freshmen charged from North's lawn into the courtyard where the upperclassmen stood, prepared in defense.

Appearing to be ready for battle, the freshmen charged from North's lawn into the courtyard where the upperclassmen stood, prepared in defense.

Preparing for any type of attack, the freshmen wrapped duct tape around their clothes in case any foul play occured. They attempted to drive through the Arch five times by wrestling their way past the upperclassmen crowd. Student referees kept a close watch on the proceedings, making sure all actions were legal.

Insulting chants were exchanged from one group to the other between charges and an abundance of raw eggs, vegetables, and other "miscellaneous" objects were hurled in both directions.

Bystanders cheered their support as the upperclassmen dominated the onslaughts time and time again.

To prove their humbleness, the freshmen good-heartedly shook hands with their adversaries, earning acknowledgement from their peers.

Tickets for Juniata College's 1984-85 Artist Series, which opens Sept. 25, are now on sale.

This season's five-program series offers music, dance and theater, and is designed to provide cultural and aesthetic opportunities to both the campus community and its larger regional audience.

The first performance on Sept. 25 will feature mime Trent Arterberry. Arterberry has performed with Julio Iglesias for sold-out crowds at Radio City Music Hall, and appeared with the Kinks, B.B. King, Jonathon Edwards, Buddy Rich and Pure Prairie League. Performing on the 1982 world cruise of the Queen Elizabeth II and being named Performing Artist of the Year in 1983 by the National Association of Campus Activities are some of Arterberry's other career highlights.

The next performance will be on Oct. 22 featuring the American Ballet Theatre II. The dance troupe was formed in 1972 by Richard Englund in association with the Ballet Theater Foundation Inc. with the goal of providing quality dance in communities that could not accommodate the financial and technical requirements of the American Ballet Theatre.

ABT II's repertoire ranges from romantic and classical ballet to contemporary and modern dance. Many of the country's most talented young dancers have had their first professional performing experiences with ABT II and have gone on to appear with such companies as the National Ballet of Canada and the New York City Ballet.

Jan. 17 will be the date for the appearance of the Alard String Quartet. The group has experienced 25 years of outstanding success, including 500 concerts, radio and television appearances, recordings and international critical acclaim.

The quartet has premiered works by Shostakovich, Bartok, Penderecki, Laderman, Persichetti, Siegmeister and others. They have performed throughout North America, Europe, Mexico and the Pacific and have been featured at the American Music Festival of the National Gallery in Washington.

"Doc" Watson, the blind musician from Deep Gap, N.C., comes to Oller Hall on March 26. Although Watson is not technically a bluegrass musician, much of his national exposure has come Take two aspirin and leave $1.50!

Upon returning to Juniata this fall, students are forced to contend with a new administrative health policy which requires that students pay a nominal fee of $1.50 to receive campus nursing services.

This administrative decision was handed down to us as a direct result of the penny-pinching budget cuts plaguing the Juniata campus. Runaway costs of medication, health supplies and salaried employees were the biggest factors to sway the administration to favor the nominal fee rule.

In light of all these budgetary concerns, the Juniatian still questions the practicality of such a decision. It's a given: College students get sick. A nominal fee will certainly not act as a deterrant against contracting illnesses. Unfortunately for JC students, this nominal fee will act as a deterrant against the proper treatment of those illnesses. Predictably, the number of students who go to the nurse will drop — perhaps at a large rate. As illnesses go untreated, it is conceivable that they will spread at a faster rate and to a greater extent. Obviously, neither of those outcomes puts the student in a favorable position.

In all likelihood, students can probably live with remembering to bring $1.50 to the nurse — inconvenient as it may be. However, the Juniatian perceives this policy as more than just an added inconvenience. This policy actually poses a threat to the good health and well being of the JC community. If even one sick student stays away from the health center because of the new policy, then the entire purpose of a student health services center is defeated. A health center is of service to one if its use is discouraged.

Again, the Juniatian is forced to question the motives behind this administrative decision. Is it really worth jeopardizing the health and satisfaction of this institution's customers, its students, in order to cover only a small portion of its operating costs?

Apparently, the administration places a higher priority on the latter. Nevertheless, the Juniatian stands firm in its belief that this health policy will generate more harmful effects than positive ones.

Thanks for helping the United Way

ALONG MUDDY RUN

by Mark Royer

Returning to Juniata for my final year was really a fairly easy decision. Sure, after three years the place gets a little monotonous, but just think, some professors spend most of their lives here (no wonder Dr. Fisher smokes chalk). I'm anxious to get out into the real world until I stop to consider the real world, like working eight hours a day.

When viewed from this perspective, hanging out in Huntingdon, PA. for one more year looks pretty rosy. After all, "People Like it Here", if you believe everything you read on billboards. Besides, I've already invested three years and countless thousands of dollars into my education. I should at least be able to enjoy the benefits of seniorhood. Oh yeah, and get a diploma.

By the time Juniata students are seniors, they have usually learned how the campus operates. They know what professors expect academically; they've learned how to deal with the administration (or better yet, how to avoid the administration), and they always, when entering the Sports-Recreation Center, carry in the shoes which they plan to exercise in. Seniors have also learned how to keep their classes from interfering with their education. There is a lot to learn on this campus about human nature and life in general if you just stop studying and look around sometime.

One thing seniors try to avoid more than the administration is the dreaded eight o'clock. You see, the beauty of POEs is that they are flexible. Let's say a senior has a certain class in his POE. While flipping through his course selection guide he realizes that it's only offered at eight o'clock. Well, bag that course. There has to be another course at ten o'clock (a much more reasonable hour) that fits into his POE just as well. Of course pre-meds are an exception here, but they're just intellectual masochists anyway.

Some people say seniors are lazy. I like to think that seniors are preparing for success in the real world. Dr. Strohman told our Sociology class about a study of top executives which found that they had one thing in common: they were all lazy. Or, in a more positive phrasing, they would look for the most efficient way of get-

Dear Editor,

After attending a "so called party" this past Saturday night I became extremely angry about how the Computer Club raises its funds. While fully aware that myself, my friends and others do not need to consume traditional beverages, it is generally the campus norm for a club not to charge $2.00 fully knowing that the beverages are finished. Having run many parties myself, I hope that I would never resort to these fundraising tactics for our class. So as a matter of fact I would suggest that the Computer Society get out of the computer room and into good business practices.

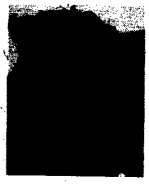
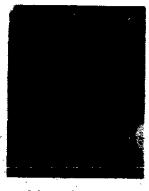
Question: "Do you think the way in which we nominate Homecoming candidates is a fair representation of the student body?"

Alan Reyes, Soph.: Yes, because the whole student body gets to vote.

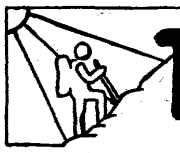
Mike DiTaranto, Soph.: No, it's just a popularity contest.

Mike Lang, Junior: No, I do not think so, for the fact that everybody votes for physical beauty and not integrity.





Kim Chatfield, Junior: Yes, but people are influenced by their friends and the people they know. Therefore it seems as if the same people are nominated every year!



Road Trips

As veteran readers of the Juniatian will be quick to observe, this is a column new to the paper; it will be dedicated to informing and encouraging students to take more advantage of what the surrounding areas have to offer. What this area has to offer is substantial: part of the uniqueness of Juniata which extends beyond the curriculum, the Program of Emphasis, and so forth, is where we are located, in the heart of a chain of ancient mountains, the Ridge and Valley province of the Appalachians.

Every week I will be exploring some aspect of the vicinity — the mountains, the waterways, small towns and points of interest, places to go, things to do; as college students under alot of stress, it is a well known fact that we need, from time to time, to get away from campus to blow off a little steam, or to simply get out for a change of scenery. This column will serve to suggest such places.

Contrary to what the name of this column implies, the areas dealt with will not be restricted to those which are only accessible by car. There is a great diversity of places which can be reached with relative ease from campus by foot. For this year's first issue of the Juniatian, I've chosen the nearest, most remarkable and best-known of the natural features of the immediate environs. They are, of course, the cliffs above Taylor Heights, west of campus.

According to Dr. Peter Trexler of the Geology dept., the cliffs are composed of a quartz sandstone dating from the Devonian period, approximately 350 million years old. Fossils in the rock attest to the fact that this area was once a shallow marine environment. The cliffs are a part of the "Oriskany formation," and the same sandstone may be found as far north as Oriskany, N.Y., (hence the name), through Pennsylvania, the Maryland panhandle, West Virginia, running as far south as Tennessee. The entire Appalachian chain was once a vast, shallow, swampy ocean with areas of dense, lush vegetation which would eventually create our coalfields. Sometime around 200 million years ago, "two lithospheric plates in the Earth's crust collided, slowly crumpling and deforming the flat coastal plain and creating the original mountains" of the Appalachian chain. The present-day Appalachians are a result of the erosion of the original mountains, once higher than the present-day Rockies. Running water "etched out the rocks of various hardnesses," leaving valleys where the softer rock was, and mountains where the harder rock was. The cliffs are a relatively recent formation, a water gap (similar to the Delaware Water Gap, but not as dramatic) where the Juniata river breaches the hard rock between two valleys.

In terms of more recent history, the water gap at the cliffs was used as a migration route and later as a trade route, by Indians for 12,000 years. According to Anthropology professor Dr. Paul Heberling, "two branches of the Juniata river provided access routes from the Susquehanna River Valley (which drains into the Chesapeake Bay) to the Ohio River Valley (which drains into the Mississippi) via a short portage over the mountain near Bedford (for the Raystown Branch Lake) and near Hollidaysburg (for the Frankstown Branch the river which flows past Huntingdon.)" Huntingdon itself is very rich in history, originally the site of a major Iroquois village, and later the first white trading post in the area in the 1740's. Pioneers began streaming through the existing Indian routes. The level crossing below the cliffs was an ideal route for the iron industries of the early 1800's, and in 1830-1835, the Juniata Division of the Penn Canal was built to serve iron barges fueling the young nation's forges. In the early 1850's the railroad came through, using the canal grade which was already in place.

Traces of the old canal can still be found, Dr. Heberling says, as well as other vestiges from bygone eras, such as the Myton Pottery ruins, which existed not far from where the power dam lies near the village of Warrior Ridge, visible to the west from the cliffs. There are some "romantic legends about the cliffs, but thats all they are, legends." Stories about "an alleged Indian village at the top of the cliffs," or "the hiding of the original Standing Stone in the caves about the cliffs" were fabricated and believed for a while, but have "no historical truth to them."

The cliffs have remained popular with Juniata students since the founding of the old Normal School. They are easily accessible by following Moore Street straight up the hill past the Science Center through Taylor Heights, and taking the existing trails to the right or the left beneath the telephone lines. Although the whole ridge is dotted with rock promontories, there are three "main groupings" of cliffs, the Near, Middle, and Far Cliffs, all accessible depending upon your amount of time or adventurousness. The Far Cliffs, my personal preference, are only 45 minutes away walking from campus, and the others (obviously) take less time. Wear boots, bring water, and exercise caution, not only in the proximity of the cliffs, but along the way as hunting season has begun. When you go to the cliffs, remember to keep it clean, and bring back any trash you find up there. They are a part of Juniata's heritage, so respect them, and if you haven't done so already, get out there and check'em out!

by David Orth Moore

Election day is seven weeks away, and as Americans we will again be asked to cast our vote in the name of democracy. Apathy, which is a factor in poor voter turn-out, was somewhat reduced amongst blacks thanks to the bold and imaginative efforts of Rev. Jesse Jackson. Those of us who do troop off to cast our vote, however, will undoubtedly vote for the wrong reasons.

The American political system is indeed in shambles; it is amazing to observe the circus antics of these politicians, promising this and that to each generation, religious group, business interest, minority faction, etc., etc. I contend that the American public should seriously judge the candidates, and their ability to manage one of the most important issues facing this nation: that of the financial and economic crises that will reach its peak during the next administration.

The case in point is, of course, the ridiculously steep budget deficit which is running between $150 billion and $200 billion. Ronald Reagan's federal debt during the past four years is higher than the federal debts compiled by his predecessors from George Washington to John F. Kennedy. Reagan's administration is the most spendthrift in our young history by far.

The debate between the candidates of a tax rise is, in fact, academic since it will ultimately become necessary to raise taxes in order to make a large dent in the budget deficit. Another way the government may reduce the deficit is by inflation; there is more hidden inflation than the present administration admits to. This becomes a clandestine form of extra taxation.

Most of us are less aware of another kind of debt that we are compiling. We are buying from foreign nations as never before, and paying for it with money we are borrowing from foreigners. At a rate of close to $10 billion a month, it will not take long before we find ourselves a debtor nation. We have been accustomed to being a creditor nation since World War I.

The money we borrow comes in the form of foreigners putting their money into dollars, and dollar investments. They are lending us money because we are paying such splendid interest rates; but at the expense of their nation which is losing needed investments and capital to aid in their economic recovery.

Because of these foreign investments, the value of the dollar is driven superficially high when compared to foreign currencies. As such, foreigners are not purchasing our exported products because our prices are too high on the world market. However, we are still importing foreign goods, (these prices are much less expensive than American made goods), hence our status as a creditor nation is slowly deteriorating. An example is our balance of trade: the current status of which is $109.8 billion for the past twelve months.

When will the day of reckoning come for all this living on borrowed money? Certainly the current administration will do everything to fend off such an event until after November elections. On the other hand, how long can the present 'boom' carry our economic recovery? Whoever it might be, we need someone in the White House who can best handle the economic problems of the day, and deal with them in a wise fashion. Let us hope then, that Americans will, in some extraordinary way, pick the candidate that is able to deal with the economic changes that lie ahead.

NEXT WEEK: ON SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE

— Guest Column —

by Jay Buchanan

Did you know that college students are not very good at making career-related decisions? In fact, many researchers suggest that as many as two out of every three students entering higher education today are unsure of what they want to do regarding career choice. While being unsure or exploratory is normal, to be unsure and do nothing about it is another matter.

To help students in the process of career planning and decision making, Juniata has recently acquired a software program referred to as SIGI. SIGI, short for System of Interactive Guidance and Information, was developed over the past ten years by researchers at Educational Testing Service (ETS). It is designed to aid students in making informed career decisions.

SIGI consists of six systems: VALUES, LOCATE, COMPARE, PREDICTION, PLANNING and STRATEGY. As student move through the six systems, they are provided with a number of occupations which fit their own personal specifications. Questions such as course requirements, salary range, job prospects and personal qualifications are answered for each of the occupations.

Since SIGI is updated on a yearly basis, only current and timely information is available to the user. SIGI also has a printout capability, so that users can take information with them.

While the entire program takes over three hours, students can "sign-off" at regular intervals. SIGI assigns the user an ID number which is then used when the user wants to "sign-on" again.

This has been a very brief description of SIGI and its capabilities. For information and an opportunity to use SIGI, stop by the Placement Center and reserve a time slot.

Club Plans Activities

by Kay Rockafellow

The Big Brother/Big Sister program will again be the primary focus of this year's Social Service Club.

The Club welcomes a change in this years's program as the little brother and sisters will be students from the Alfarata Elementary School instead of the Huntingdon Area Middle School.

The program requires that the college student and elementary student meet at least once a week for an hour or two for the entire school year. To help plan activities for the youngsters, the Social Service Club will be promoting monthly events such as movies, rollerskating and parties.

To get involved with this challenging and rewarding experience, one can contact either Kay Rockafellow or Marie Olver, 643-4837.

Did you know we can find a breast cancer as small as the head of a pin?

Such a tiny cancer can almost always be cured. Mammography, a technique of low-dose breast x-ray, can detect a cancer long before a lump can be felt. While it is still highly curable.

If you are over 50 or have special reasons to be concerned with breast cancer, ask your doctor about mammography.

Ms. Collins Steps in as Registrar

by Betsy Halsey

One of the newest additions to Juniata's administrative staff is the new Registrar, Constance Collins. Collins has just recently earned a Ph.D. in Higher Education from Syracuse University. She also has an M.A.T. in English from Emory University and a B.A. in English from Oberlin College.

Before obtaining her Ph.D., Collins was the University Registrar at the American University. She was also the Registrar at Douglass College.

Having just been a student herself, she feels she brings a student's perspective into her job and is eager to hear any ideas students have about streamlining in procedures as well as ideas about summer school and continuing education programs.

As far as changes are concerned, Collins feels that many changes will come about as a result of the new computer. She states, "It makes you rethink old procedures." Being new, she feels her perception is especially keen, and she often asks, "Why do we do things this way?"

Summer school and continuing education are two areas she is interested in exploring. She is particularly interested in continuing education and welcomes any ideas about it. She states that many people are not necessarily interested in getting a degree, but rather in increasing their knowledge, especially via computers.

Having been at Juniata for only six weeks, she feels she is still in the exploratory phase and needs to examine the needs of the community and the college in these areas. Collins is not planning any huge expansion but is genuinely interested in these areas. She goes on to say that while these programs may be expanding, her main concern will rest with full time under-graduates.

Collins is impressed with the student body. "They have a kind of seriousness, a seriousness of purpose." she states. "As a collective group they have such an influence on atmosphere."

Juniata's newest administrative addition is Registrar Constance Collins. Collins took over the position this summer and is excited about working on J.C.'s campus.

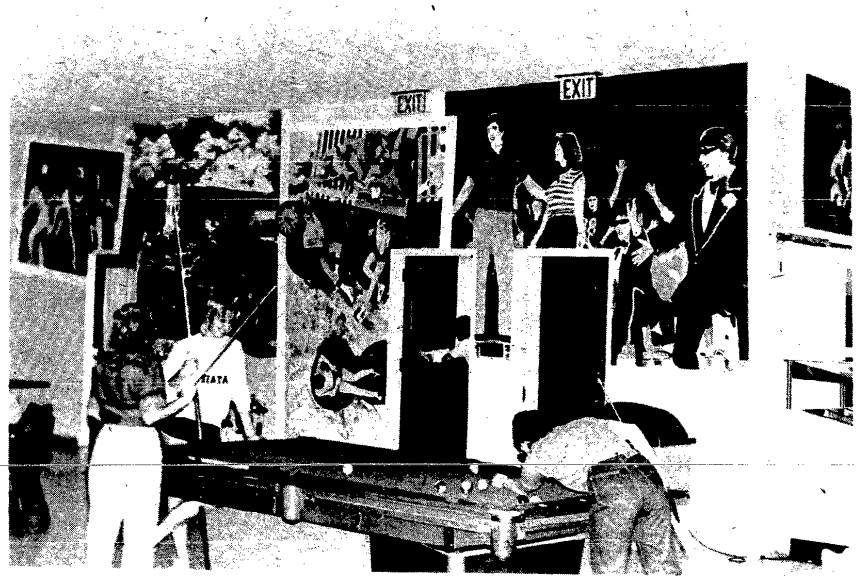
of National Unity, which includes both major parties, the Labor Alignment and the Likud Block, was formed last week. It is based on a power-sharing agreement between the two major groups that have been battling each other for 36 years of Israeli history. The agreement is such that the Prime Minister's office and other key jobs will rotate after two years. No one knows how the new idea in government will work. The reigning Prime Minister labor leader, Shimon Peres, has called it the "Government of disagreement," while the next rotating Prime Minister who will succeed him to power in 25 months suggested that it is a "great national adventure." A leader of a faction that broke with the new government was much more pessimistic, calling it a "two-headed monster." Like the leaders, public reaction is one of hope and skepticism.

WASHINGTON — The government is tightening the security of Federal facilities where nuclear warheads are designed and made. This is occurring under a new governmental program set up because of possible threats from terrorists.



These are just some of the wall murals that have been designed to decorate the Totem Inn. Artist Tom Mosser added these paintings as part of the renovations initiated last year.

Tote Comes Alive

by Carol Connell

As an addition to last year's renovation of Tote, wall murals of traditional events were created by local commercial artist, Thomas Mosser. The murals, depicting Mountain Day, Raft Regatta, Mud Volleyball, All Class Night, Graduation and Cloister Arch, were commissioned by the renovation committee, including Wayne Justham and Arnold Tilden, to "liven up" the area which had been "plain."

Beginning work in early August, artist Tom Mosser used black and white photos from old yearbooks, publications and the Admissions Office as a basis for his design. After enlarging the photos on the walls through both free hand and grid system techniques, Mosser was aided by a friend who did the chalkline work around the murals. Stating that a problem with tendonitis in his right hand caused him to draw and paint all but the details with his left hand, Mosser, working with acrylic paint for the first time, completed his third mural job a few days before students returned for classes.

While an undergraduate at Penn State, where he received a Bachelor of Fine Arts in Illustration, Mosser, whose family resides in Huntingdon, was a staff artist on the university newspaper and a football cheerleader. Mosser, working as a commercial artist, has had a drawing published in Sports Illustrated and another published as the cover of the New Jersey Giants program for the 1983-84 season. Presently living in State College, preparing a portfolio to display his work, Mosser seemed pleased with the final product of his work to which he gave his "best shot."

International Program Office Comes to JC

by Mary E. Ritchey

There's a new office in Founder's Hall this year, the Office of International Programs, which houses a familiar face with a new and cumbersome title. Dr. William C. Vocke has received the position of Assistant Dean of Academic Affairs and Director of International Programs.

Arising out of Juniata's growing interest and participation in foreign exchange programs, the office will handle all of the exchange programs which, until now, have been directed by faculty volunteers from all departments. According to Dr. Vocke the primary purpose of the Office of International Programs is to "help internationalize the campus" through programs both at Juniata and abroad.

For a college this size the opportunities for foreign study are incredible. Each year students, usually juniors, have their choice of four programs in Great Britain, three in Germany, two in France, and one each in Spain and Japan. Opportunities to study in the USSR are also available occasionally. There are programs available to nearly every Juniata student no matter what your major or degree of fluence in another language. There are three types of programs: the exchange, a-body-for-a-body trade with a foreign school; Brethren Colleges Abroad, which offers both full and half year opportunities; and independent arrangements with particular schools. A new program in the making is an international internship.

An important note about these programs is that they cost little more than spending the year at J.C. Financial aid is handled exactly as if you were remaining at Juniata and some of these programs even compensate for travel expenses.

The programs at Juniata include expanding existing courses and adding new ones to allow the creation of a POE in International Studies, promoting the International Club, promoting awareness of other cultures, and helping to pull Juniata out of the provincial attitude that has plagued the U.S. for most of our history.

This year there are approximately 22 international students at Juniata and nearly 30 Juniatians abroad. Students interested in learning more about international opportunities should contact Dr. Vocke in Founder's Hall and watch the Juniatian as this is the first in a series of articles about Juniata-sponsored study elsewhere.

The International Club is sponsoring a free lecture Wednesday, Sept. 19 in the faculty lounge and will be sponsoring other campus-wide activities throughout the year.

This fall the "Language of Film" class will show a film every Tuesday night at 7 p.m. in the Science Center. This weeks feature film is entitled "The Hiding Place," which is about a Dutch family who risk their lives to protect Jews during the Nazi oppression of World War II. These films are open to all Juniata students and staff.

Hot Wax

by April Evans

For this review I chose a relatively unknown and unplayed album called "Luxury" by a group named The Method Actors. The Method Actors have a brand of rock that sounds like a voodoo chant, complete with the steady beat of primal drums. The beat was the only thing this LP had going for it — unfortunately all the songs had the same beat. As a whole the lyrics were indistinct and often ghostly, or just a repetition of one phrase. If there were harmonies, they were generally off or did not fit. The one good thing about this record was its divergence from the mainstream top forty. These characteristics were common to each of the eight songs.

As the first song "You, The International Language" began I thought "Gee, this sounds interesting and just might be innovative." However, it turned out that the only thing I liked about this slightly eerie piece was its beat. I had a problem understanding the haunting repeated phrase in "The Problem," it was much like the previous song. "Another World", a mostly instrumental song, had a chanted section, and sounded like it was straight out of the old stories about African voodooism. The next number, "All Tomorrow's Parties", was possibly the closest of any of the pieces to standard rock, however, it shared the undesirable characteristics with the rest of the songs.

The first cut from the flip side of the "Luxury" LP was titled "Beating On A Drum". That is exactly what the Method Actors did, beat on a drum and add an eerie synthesizer, saxophone and guitar accompaniment to the unearthly lyrics.

The next piece "House On Fire" was a spooky chant of the same intentionally garbled phrase. I think the phrase was "House on fire". I have only one comment about "Detective" "What did the few lyrics I could understand have to do with the title?" I then had to suffer through the instrumental title song "Luxury."

Throughout its entirety this album was lacking in variety. It also was without interesting lyrics. Though it may be original in that it differs from the usual pop fare, all of the pieces are so similar they are dull.

ting the job done. This, I believe, is truly the American work ethic — do as much as possible with a minimum investment of time and energy. This is what made America great. At least it sounds better to me anyway. I'd much rather think of seniors as being patriotic than being lazy.

"The Cotton Patch Gospel," a musical featuring songs composed by the late Harry Chapin, will be performed at Juniata's Oller Hall on Sunday, Sept. 23 at 7 p.m.

Cotton Patch Gospel to Appear at Juniata

The "Cotton Patch Gospel," a modern-day story of the life of Jesus, will be performed at Juniata College's Oller Hall Sunday, Sept. 23 at 7 p.m.

Based on Dr. Clarence Jordan's popular "Cotton Patch Version of Matthew and John," this exciting two-hour musical tells the story of Jesus refashioned from the red clay of Georgia. Jesus is born in Gainesville, lynched by local thugs, and rises again in Atlanta.

During the show, Jesus preaches a sermon on Georgia's Stone Mountain and after a fast in the wilderness, accepts chili-cheese dogs from angels. He makes the covers of "Time," "Newsweek," and "U.S. News and World Report" after raising a child from the dead. On Good Friday, he rolls into Atlanta in a Volkswagon convertible and meets his prophesized fate.

This might seem unusual to some, but the show has been endorsed by both the Catholic and Protestant churches. It has run off-Broadway in New York and has received critical acclaim in Atlanta, Birmingham and Dallas. The Associated Press called it "a remarkable musical that just sweeps you along."

Jesus (Matthew) is portrayed by actor Dan Delafield who has appeared in New York productions of "The Fantasticks," "Macbeth" and "Comedy of Errors." In stock and regional theaters, he has performed in "Butterflies Are Free," "Bus Stop," "Godspell," "A Funny Thing Happened On the Way to the Forum," "Pippin" and "Hair." Delafield's television credits include the mini-series "Centennial" and the daytime serial "As the World Turns."

The musical features 8 folksongs, ballads and bluegrass numbers composed by the late Harry Chapin who died in a 1981 car accident one month before the play opened in New York. His brother Tom is the show's musical director and arranger.

The Sunday performance in Oller Hall is sponsored by the Campus Ministry Board and the College Center Board. The public is welcome to enjoy this delightful production. Tickets may be purchased at the door.

through bluegrass festivals. His guitar artistry has had a strong impact on bluegrass guitarists. In 1960 his talent was discovered while he was playing electric guitar in North Carolina with a local country swing band.

Watson's devotion to old-time music and acoustic instrumentation was rekindled by the enthusiasm of folk fans in urban areas. An exceptional musician and singer, he has a repertoire ranging from 16th century ballads to contemporary blues.

The 1984-85 series will close with the April 17 appearance of The Gordons, piano duo. Steven and Nadya Gordon were both students of Sergei Tarnowsky, the great pedagogue and legendary teacher of Vladimir Horowitz. At age nine, Steven won the Hollywood Bowl Award. He is a four-time Gold Medal winner of the International Piano Recording Competition and also competed in the 1970 Moscow Tschaikovsky Competition. Nadya began studying piano at age three and won three Gold Medals in the International Piano Recording Competition. After their 1983 debut at Carnegie Hall, the Gordons were described by the New York Times as having "obvious musicality" and "considerable style."

Prices for the 1984-85 Artist Series are $20 for regular season tickets and $25 for reserved seat season tickets. Patron tickets priced at $100 entitles individuals to two reserved seat tickets and ensures a listing on each program. All ticket orders may be placed through the information desk in Ellis Hall.

Writing Lab Offers Help

by Lauralee Snyder

After a few years of discussing the need for a Writing Lab, the English Department, with the strong support of the faculty, decided to materialize its ideas.

The purpose of the Writing Lab is to provide the student body with a facility to improve their writing skills outside of class. The Writing Lab, located on the first floor of the Quinter House, contains books, pamphlets, dictionaries, and various other reading material pertaining to grammar and writing skills. Computer terminals with special instructional programs designed to help with writing skills are also located there. Student assistants are also on duty to help with mechanical problems and offer advice to improve other students' writing.

Professor Louise Van Kuren is the coordinator of this new program and feels it will be a success. Besides offering a place to go for help, the writing lab also provides the student with a homey, but academic atmosphere in which to write. The writing lab is open to the entire student body. Everyone using the lab will be asked to submit a sample of their writing so it can be evaluated and then individual programs to correct the weaknesses will be set up. It is advised that all students make appointments before going to the lab by calling Extension 465. The lab hours are Monday-Thursday 1:00-4:00 PM and Monday and Wednesday evenings 6:30-8:30 PM.

V103 Develops New Programming Style

by Dave Peters

The new school year brings new changes, and WKVR radio is no exception. In response to the requests for a more clutter-free hour, a new programming format has been developed and is currently being used at V103.

For the past several years, V103, along with many of today's radio stations, has used a programming style that has breaks in the music every 15 minutes. Feeling that more music with less interruption is desirable to its listeners, V103 has shifted its 'breaks' to allow 30 minutes of music without any major stops. 'Breaks' include public service announcements, Newsvoice, Sportsbeat (college stories), Rockvoice and Mutual News. The Morning Voice, V103's 7 a.m. to noon format will remain as is, geared to the early morning hours. However, for the rest of the day, Mutual News will only be aired every other hour, with other features shifted to allow half hour blocks of music.

The new program, which was started on Monday, September 17, is currently being used on a trial-run basis. Program Director, Shelly Guest, feels optimistic about the move, saying much discussion has gone into it. "We feel we are giving our listeners more of what they would like to hear without wiping out any of V103's special features." Hopefully listeners will provide enough feedback, whether positive or negative, to let the V103 board know how successful the operation is.

The New Music Show is also new to V103. Aired every Wednesday night from 9 to 11, this feature gives exposure to lesser known new groups. The NM Show hopes to expose its listeners to the most current releases from new bands that might otherwise go unnoticed. Mike Giblin is the host.

Another feature on V103 that has been in place for several years continues this year with live broadcasts of all Juniata Indians football games. The broadcasts, heard every Saturday at 1:30 throughout the season, are commentated by Mark Kirchgasser, Steve Poska, Mark Rucinski and Joe D'Onofrio.

Nominees Selected

by Anne Cameron

Homecoming Weekend falls early on the Juniata calendar this year, and Center Board's Homecoming Committee has been working since Spring to make October 5th and 6th a great weekend. Their theme is "Around the World". Many activities have been planned, including a halftime show at the football game featuring the Homecoming Court and the crowning of the 1984 Homecoming Queen.

Voting for Homecoming nominations took place Wednesday, September 12th and Thursday, September 13th. Voter turnout was poor with less than 25% of Juniata students submitting ballots. Voters could nominate up to 8 girls from each class and 9 from the senior class. Ballots were counted on Thursday evening under the supervision of Chris Muha, nominations chairperson. The top four vote-getters from the freshman, sophomore, and junior classes, as well as the top five from the senior class will be the Homecoming representatives.

The representatives from the freshman class are Lisa Bear, Karen DiAngelo, Tammy Heck, and Mary Joy Sagan. The sophomore representatives are Marie Rose, Danielle Rupp, Jill Wineka, and Ann Cameron. Nancy Briggs, Kim Detwiler, Kelly Mehigan, and Lisa Smoker were chosen from the junior class. Finally, the five senior representatives are Kathy Crowley, Peggy Evans, Laura Keat, Sue Martin, and Lori Swivel.

A second voting will take place the first week in October to determine a winner from each class and the Homecoming Queen from the senior class. The results of the voting will be revealed Saturday, October 6th at the halftime ceremony of the Juniata vs. Western Maryland football game.

Student Leaders Plan Conference

by Ginny Krall

On Friday and Saturday Student Government and Centerboard members will participate in their annual Leadership Conference to determine goals for the upcoming school year.

The conference, to be held at Camp Green Hills, will include seminars that were requested by the students attending. The four major areas to be discussed during the Saturday morning sessions will be: Communication Skills, Resources For Your Group, Group Building and Maintenance, and Goal Setting.

Centerboard members will leave Juniata's campus on Friday night and spend that evening building group strengths through special activities. Student Government members will then join this group on Saturday morning and the special sessions will start around 9 a.m.

The leaders of Student Government and Centerboard are excited and anticipate an informative weekend retreat. Through programs like these, the student leaders of this campus can become more aware of the group needs, motiviation skills and ways of producing the best possible results from our campus clubs, action groups and organizations.

JV Indian Football Falls to Gettysburg

by Joe Scialabba

A lack of consistent offense plagued the Juniata junior varsity football team this past Monday as they lost a 20-7 decision to visiting Gettysburg.

The Tribe played almost the entire first half in their own end of the field as the Bullet defense put heavy pressure on the passing game while plugging-up the run.

Gettysburg scored first when following an interception Chris Suchanick ran 7-yards to paydirt. Mike Carlon kicked the extra point to make it 7-0 with 11:41 left in the second quarter.

The Indians came back late in the first half when Bill Hinchman took a screen pass from quarterback Jim Estep and sprinted 78-yards down the right sideline. Estep had rolled out of the pocket under heavy pressure before spotting Hinchman who made a nice open-field move to go untouched for the tying score as Mike Mothersbaugh added the PAT kick.

The visitors didn't wait long to retake the lead as just over a minute and a half after the Indian score the Bullets hit paydirt again with just :12 before halftime.

Bill Roseman broke several tackles as he spun 22-yards to score and make the count 13-7. The extra point was blocked.

A blocked punt led to the final Gettysburg score as Steve Royer fell on the loose football in the Tribe endzone with 3:24 to go in the third period. Carlon added the final point with the PAT kick.

Juniata never mounted a serious threat in the second half, or the game in general as the lone score came in big play fashion.

The Indians have been practicing hard all week for their next game. The Indians will host Susquehanna this Saturday, September 24th, with the kickoff scheduled for 3:00 p.m. This will be the last home game of the J.V. season, since the squad will be traveling to Shippensburg for their final game on October 8th, so come on out and support the team in their bid for their first victory.

Sean Ruth shows here, how physical the game with the University of Pittsburgh at Johnstown this past Wednesday was. In this shot, Sean goes up for a header while a U.P.J. opponent tries to block him off the ball.

X-Country Takes 3 of 4

This past Saturday, both the Men's and Women's Cross Country teams held tri-meets at home vs. Messiah and Gettysburg. Both teams looked strong, with the Indians taking three of the four possible victories. The men defeated Messiah (low score) 29-30, but were defeated by Gettysburg 50-15. Freshman Mark Kearns led the Indians with a time of 30:24, and was followed by Mark Royer, Dave Dann, Stan Wampler, and Jim Ghandy. The Ladies handily defeated both of their opponents, lead by the strong performance by Senior Terri Bollman (21:03). Sue Gill, Kris Smith, Chris Schleiden, and Dee Gulden rounded out the top 5 Indian finishers.

"Sports Corner"

by Andy Hiscock

Well here it is, the first edition of the Juniatian, and along with my Assistant Sports Editor Joe Scialabba, I intend to give you a step by step account of the progress of Juniata's Varsity and Intramural Sports organizations. Joe will be concentrating on Varsity sports, while I will try to cover the extensive Intramural program offered here at Juniata. We have a number of reporters that will be helping us this year, and you may be approached by one of them during the year to report a score or express a view. We can always use the help, so if you are in a sport that you feel is not receiving the attention that it deserves feel free to contact either myself or Joe and write up an article.

The Fall Intramural program will get into full swing over the next couple of weeks, and if this year is anything like those in the past, a number of you will be involved in the action. I.M. sports are a great way to relieve the tension of the normal everday routine and to meet new people, and I encourage anyone with some free time to get involved.

I am looking forward to a productive year for all of our teams, and I wish them luck.

ATTENTION!! SPORTSWRITERS WANTED!! No previous experience is necessary. Writers are needed for Varsity and I.M. sports. If interested, attend the staff meeting this Tuesday at 7:30 p.m. across from V-103 or contact Sports Editor Andy Hiscock in Box #336.

Sean Ruth sets up for a good opportunity on goal vs. U.P.J. The Indians made a number of good scoring attempts during this tough closing minute 0-1 loss to U.P.J.

Varsity Tribe Football Drop Heartbreaker

by Joe Scialabba

The Juniata offense continued to be very effective but several key mistakes cost the Indians last Saturday as Moravian won a 26-25 Middle Atlantic Conference contest at College Field. It was the second straight week that the Tribe gained more total yards than the visitors only to come-up short on the scoreboard.

The Tribe outgained the Greyhounds 354 to 321 but lost the game on miscues. In the season opener the Indians had four more total yards than Washington and Jefferson but also lost, 28-24.

The errors started early against Moravian as a fumble on the second play from scrimmage at the JC 12 led to a 1-yard sneak by QB Scott Rhinehart. The visitors added four more easy points in the first half when twice a Juniata punt snap went over Dave Hornberger's head and through the end zone for a safety.

A Mike Schaffner 36-yard field goal and a Mike Culver 60-yard TD run had Juniata in front 10-9 before the second safety made it 11-10 at halftime. The close score was little consolation to Head Coach Rob Ash.

Trailing 18-10 the Indians followed the Greyhound score with a 10-play, 82-yard third quarter drive that ended with receiver Dave Murphy grabbing a 15-yard touchdown toss from Culver. Culver hit George Plesce for the tying two-point conversion.

On their first possession of the fourth quarter, following a Rich Howey interception, Juniata moved 20 yards on the ground in five plays to score as Ian Malee plunged over from the one. Schaffner's second successful PAT kick made it 25-18 with 12:34 left.

"I was pleased with the comeback," noted Ash. "We didn't quit when we got down and showed we had character and heart. I really thought we had it when Howey intercepted his second pass with about seven minutes left."

However, the Greyhounds didn't roll over and play dead as they stopped the Indian's on just three plays and covered 47 yards following Hornberger's punt to score. WR Dale Houser, who caught a 56-yard TD pass in the third quarter, grabbed a 5-yard aerial from third-string quarterback Wayne Walling to make the score 25-24 with 5:42 remaining.

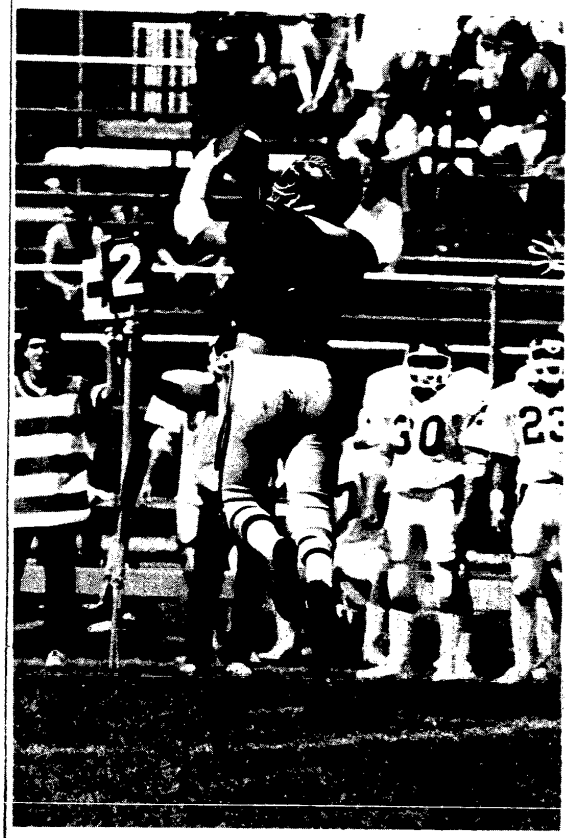
The visitors picked-up the winning margin when Walling hit Colin Amey out of the backfield for the two-point conversion.

The Indians could get only as close as the Moravian 45 yard line on their final possession as Murphy was stopped short of the sticks following Culver's fourth down pass.

It was another tough loss and things don't get any easier this week when Juniata heads to Chester to meet MAC-frontrunner Widener.

"Widener is once again a very solid team," stressed Ash. "They have been passing more this season, so we are going to have to work very hard this week to be ready."

"I think we can be a very good football team if we eliminate the mistakes. We were our own worst enemy against Moravian. However, there are plenty of things to be positive about and I feel we can regroup and play a solid game against Widener."



Senior Tom Wilkinson steps in front of a Moravian pass and picks up a key interception for the Tribe. The Indians ran out of time in this heartbreaking 26-25 loss.

Indian running back (#22) Bill Stamp had another successful day, as he picked away at the stingy Greyhound defense for crucial drive saving first downs.

Women Indians Capture First V-Ball Tournament

by Joe Scialabba

The Juniata women's volleyball team picked-up where they left-off last season as they started 1984 with victory in the Mansfield Invitational. The Indians, under Head Coach Larry Bock and assistant Sue Barker, a former All-American and a 1982 Juniata grad, swept through the weekend tourney without a loss.

Juniata worked through pool play on Friday and Saturday morning with wins over Slippery Rock 2-1, Gannon 2-0, Elmira 2-0, and Colgate 2-1.

The Lady Indians shutout Clarion 2-0 in the quarter-finals and then Loyola, MD, 2-0 in the semi's to earn a championship match against Slippery Rock Saturday evening.

The Indians were pushed in both games but came away victorious with a 2-0 shutout. Juniata took game one 15-8 and game two by a 15-9 score.

The tourney sweep gives JC a 7-0 record. The ladies played a tri-match at York on Tuesday and host Shippensburg in a duel-match on Saturday.

The Indians performed well this past weekend as they began the new season in impressive fashion.

Ekanong Opanaykul and Peggy Evans were both named to the all-tournament team while the entire VC squad played with confidence.

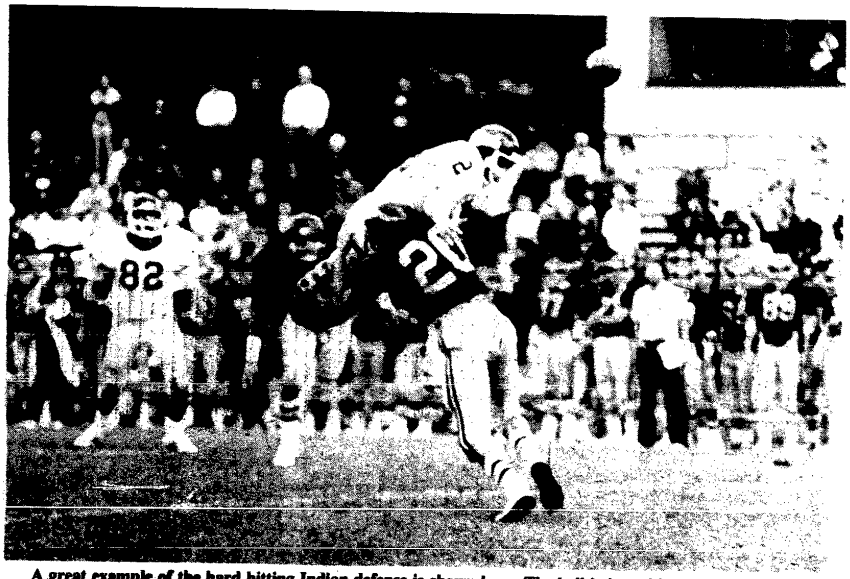
Carolyn Stambaugh had a fine tournament, especially her serving, while fellow sophomore Mariella Gacka came-up with some great net play.

Senior Tracey DeBlase had a nice tournament, coming-up with many outstanding passes.

Opanaykul and Evans, both seniors, put together solid play all weekend long as evidenced by their all-tourney selection.

The Indians hope to continue their winning ways and according to NCAA News are again one of the best Division Three teams in the nation.

The Indians are currently getting ready to face Shippensburg at home on Saturday, September 22nd at 6:00 p.m. in Memorial Gym and Gettysburg at home on Monday the 24th, also at 6:00 p.m. Everyone is invited to come out and support the team.



A great example of the hard hitting Indian defense is shown here. The ball is jarred loose by a perfectly timed hit by one of Juniata's defensive secondary.

World News Update

By Cindy Duick

JERUSALEM — The new coalition government intends to request that the United States serve as a "go-between" with Syria in an attempt to arrange a withdrawal of Israeli troops from Southern Lebanon. Foreign Minister Yitzhak Shamir, who explained the intended request, also announced last Friday that Israel would no longer insist on a simultaneous Syrian withdrawal from Lebanon as a condition for removing their own troops.

The United States' possible new role will be discussed this week when Mr. Shamir meets with Secretary of State George P. Schultz. "As a matter of principle we believe that all foreign forces should be withdrawn from Lebanon," Mr. Shamir stated. "But the question of how and when and under what circumstances — that is to be negotiated."

MEXICO CITY — Alarm among opposition groups and members of the governing party has sprung up due to a series of events over the past weeks that seem to tarnish Mexico's proud standard of civil liberty and social calm. A group of opposition legislators and human rights activists is in the third week of a hunger strike in which they demand information about "political prisoners" and people who have "disappeared" probably into Government custody. A few weeks ago a well-known Government refugee policy critic was kidnapped by armed men in civilian clothes. They took him from his home and blindfolded and questioned him for 14 hours. He was then released.

MANAGUA, Nicaragua — Nicaraguan will accept a draft peace treaty for Central America. The treaty was proposed two weeks ago by the four nations know as the Contadora group.

Although the text of the draft treaty has not yet been made public, diplomats familiar with its contents say that it would require signers to offer amnesty to political dissidents, hold impartial and independent elections, and end support for groups whose aim

Juniata Students Retreat for Leadership Conference

Goals and Activities discussed through various workshops

By Ginny Krall

The annual Centerboard-Student Government Leadership Conference was held this past Satuday at Camp Greene Hills. Thirty-four Juniata student leaders attended this all day event which featured seminars by Julie Keehner, Assistant Dean of Student Services, Arnold Tilden, Dean of Student Services, and Wayne Justham, Director of Programming.

The morning activities started with an ice-breaker exercise which led into Keehner's lecture on effective group communication. Verbal and non-verbal aspects of communication were discussed as well as assertiveness, feedback methods and meeting tips.

Tilden then led the group toward a better understanding of organization dynamics. He explained leadership and the five components of an organization. Effective group work is sustained only when purpose, structure, relationships, communication and rewards are directed through strong leadership skills. Tilden's circular diagram enforced this concept to the Juniata leaders.

After a short lunch and recreational period, Justham spoke on resources and their vital role in each campus organization. He explained that as student leaders our greatest resources are people, facilities, and budgeted funds. Alternative and original publicity and promotion also were stressed by Justham. Student leaders were urged to evaluate and record comments on all activities that they sponsor. Through this feedback the real worth of an event or action can be fully understood.

The final session was directed toward goal setting. Each organization divided up and worked on purposes, objectives, strategies and tactics based on the specific resources available to them. Missions were built and several brainstorms were created for future use.

The 1984 Leadership Conference proved to be an informative and productive experience for everyone involved. Group goals toward campus unity and more student participation were generated out of this seminar. Most importantly the leaders were given the chance to interact and discuss problems, concerns and new ideas. This was an invaluable opportunity to really develop Juniata's campus life through its leaders.

Jim Owens performed at the first Coffee House of the year last Tuesday night in the Catharsis lounge. Owens performed three sets of folk and 60's music such as "Willin" by Little Feat and "Amy" by Pure Prairie League on the guitar and the harmonica. He also performed a few contemporary tunes such as "Old Time Rock 'n Roll" by Bob Seger and "Desperado" by the Eagles. The event was attended by about 135 people. The next Coffee House will be on October 5 with the Jim Carr Irish Band performing.

Juniata Heads to the Hills

By Mark Royer

How do you spell relief from tedious classes and monotonous meals? Many students spell relief M-O-U-N-T-A-I-N-D-A-Y.

This year's legitimate blow-off day will find the Juniata community invading Greenwood Furnace. Last year's location was the Trough Creek State Park. One word of caution — make sure it's really Mountain Day before you decide to sleep-in. Pranksters just love running through the dorms, or worse, posting signs, proclaiming Mountain Day. As traditional as Mountain Day itself are the attempts by deviant students to discover the date of the holiday. Past strategies have included phoning the bus lines to see when the buses are reserved and checking with the rangers at the parks. Unfortunately, the administration has caught on to these ploys and it will probably take a more creative

Democratic Students Organize

By Sherri Reed

Last Tuesday evening 12 students and advisor Bob Howden gathered to form a new voice on the Juniata campus, the Young Democrats. The students present showed enthusiasm and indicated that several other students not present were also interested. Membership is expected to increase as the club becomes more established and November elections grow near.

Temporary officers were elected at the meeting. Denise Gontar will serve as chairman, Bridget Berich as vice-chairman, Rich Mrosky as secretary, and Steve Creps as treasurer.

Activities being planned for the near future include campaign work for Nancy Kulp, Democratic candidate for Congress in the Ninth Congressional District which includes Huntingdon. Kulp will be running against Republican incumbent Bud Shuster and is expected to be his first real competition in 12 years. The Huntingdon County Democratic Committee believes Juniata's Young Democrats can aid Kulp's efforts and, more importantly, help to somehow increase area and campus voter registration by the Oct. 9 deadline. The students have also discussed distributing literature on the Mondale-Ferraro Presidential campaign. The club expects to meet Tuesday evenings and attendance is open to anyone, not only students who are registered as Democrats. Club advisor Bob Howden, also the college's director of public relations, feels the Young Democrats is an organization "long overdue at Juniata." He is pleased to see "there are students interested in working for the Democratic Party's principles and prompting other students to become politically aware in a very important election year."

The club in general is pleased that the Young Republicans, a

The common has vanished from courtesy

In the three weeks school has been in session, the Juniata campus has witnessed enough results of willful destruction to last the entire year.

A quick glance around campus can tell anyone that destruction of both campus and private property has been the height of night-time activity for some warped individuals. Although the records may show that destruction is down from five or six years ago, nothing takes away from the fact that vandalism still plagues the Juniata campus. It's also not a great consolation to the people whose property has been damaged.

In only three short weeks, a list has accumulated: Breaking windows in Sherwood tops the list, followed by setting off fire extinguishers in South and fire alarms in Cloister. The list goes on to include turning the soccer goal posts up-side down, throwing a T.V. in Muddy Run along with some other trash, and destroying a deer head in an East houses apartment.

So what's the point of all this destruction? More and more, the Juniatian wonders where the respect for others' rights and property has gone. Has the common been dropped from common courtesy?

Certainly, almost everyone likes to go out on a Saturday night and have a good time. Yet, the Juniatian thinks it necessary to draw the line on what a 'good time' really means. It never means breaking someone's furniture or throwing beer bottles at passersby. It never means using the fire extinguisher for fun so that it can't be used should there really be a fire. It never means breaking windows or doors so that tuition has to go up more than usual to cover replacement costs.

Willful destruction at Juniata will probably always exist to some degree, but it doesn't have to occur at an epidemic rate. The Juniatian thinks that with a little effort on everyone's part, both in restraining and reporting destruction, it can reach an all time low in 1984.

ALONG MUDDY RUN

By Linda Ramsay

The Complete Senior Handbook: Distributed by Quality Distributors, Huntingdon

You mean I'm a senior now? It's funny how quickly four years can fly by. Well, maybe it's not so funny, but looking back on the last three years certainly made me aware of my memory. Watching the freshmen wander across campus looking for H100. That's the Humanities Center, bottom floor, where I used to have Freshman Composition many moons ago. My mind flashes back to the first day of classes as a Class of '85 freshman. Mom and Dad had driven away in the Chevy family station wagon as I waled toward Lesher, embarrassed that my Mom had called the dorm "The Nunnery." I guess as of late the "nunnery" has lost some of its Puritan qualities, because I don't hear Lesher being referred to in quite those same terms.

I can laugh now at recalling my most embarrassing moment as a freshman at Juniata, but on the first day of classes I was in tears. Chemistry 101, and it took me fifteen minutes to find A100 with the help of an upperclassman. After realizing I didn't have a backpack for my books and was taking notes with a pencil instead of a pen, I felt like running back to the "nunnery" and praying for help. I walked up to the front of the class to sharpen my pencil feeling queasy and lost Baker Refectory's french toast on center stage. I scrambled for a trash can and then tried to weave my way out of the classroom to find the bathroom. (I get lost now trying to find the bathrooms in the Science Center, let alone on my first day of class.) I could barely stand up straight.

I felt certain that I was pegged for life at Juniata College as a loser who couldn't handle the pressure. Little did I know that in future years it would affect my chances at being nominated for Homecoming Queen. If only I had worn a sign with my name on it when I threw up so that people would have recognized the name and written me in one of those six blank spaces for the next four years. I now know the importance of prominent marketing techniques due to my Juniata education and realize that I should wear a sandwich board to promote myself if I had really been interested in adorning heels and a dress and promenading across the muddy football field at halftime. What a gallant thought, but it doesn't look like it will ever happen for me . . . maybe May Day.

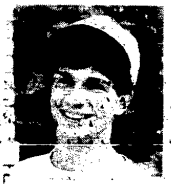
By Ginny Krall and Carol Stubbs

How do you feel about the new health policy — paying $1.50 for each visit to the nurse?

Jim Pierce — Senior: "I disapprove of it. I don't see it as a necessary thing after we pay so much for tuition."

Mike Wojcik — Junior: "I really don't approve of it. After all, we pay over '9,000 in costs, and now they're charging us $1.50 to see the nurse, along with .10 to cash a check. This is getting ridiculous. Next thing you know, they'll charge us to walk in the library."

Susan King — Sophomore: "I don't think you should have to pay $1.50. For going to a private school this should be included. I'll buy my own aspirin."



Joe D'Onofrio — Senior: "I think it sucks. I don't think students will go to the nurse as often, and this could cause more sicknesses. It should be included in the tuition."

The Competence of the Candidates

By David Orth Moore

The candidates seemed to have locked horns for a real debate during these past couple of weeks. But they did so while on their knees. Whether God is a conservative Republican, as some Reagan supporters believe, is a critical question six weeks before polling day. It is one which Mr. Mondale has pounced upon in the effort to convince the country that Mr. Reagan, and his conservative friends, do not embody the mood and values of our country.

Mr. Reagan, as of late, has been criticizing the press, and Mr. Mondale, for creating such a controversy over his stance on religion and the state. But, it was Mr. Reagan who at a prayer breakfast in Dallas, declared that "religion and politics are necessarily related," and who went on later to accuse opponents of optional school prayer as being "intolerent of religion."

The issue similarly boiled up at the Republican convention in Dallas, where God was called upon to play a prominent role in the festivities. This had been brewing for some time as Mr. Reagan embraced the Christian fundamentalists who have become political activists.

From Rev. Jerry Falwell, the leader of the Moral Majority, came some of the Republicans' platform such as denying homosexual rights, supporting strict laws against pornography, supporting school prayer, and opposing abortion. Enter with this evidence Mr. Reagan's remarks about the connection between politics and religion, and the only conclusion he would want people to draw was that true faith meant support of the G.O.P.

This is not to forget the southern Democratic constituency who have been flocking around the ideals of Rev. Jesse Jackson. But Mr. Reagan has brought the issue into debate through his controversial statements. This compared to Mr. Mondale, whose course has been furthered by Rev. Jackson, but who has not yet made a statement along the lines of Mr. Reagan's, it is no wonder that the Democratic Party is perceived to be the benefactor of this upcoming issue.

To be sure, religious groups in both parties have been playing a larger role in politics ever since the nation's virtues have, in their eyes, fallen by the wayside. But their increasing involvement in politics, and a President who is seemingly sympathetic to their view, corrupts other religious faiths, and might divide the country. Is Mr. Reagan confusing America's true religious ideals with those fundamentalists whose voices are so insistent?

Historically, we are a nation founded on the ideal of harboring those persecuted for their religious beliefs, and as such, we need a President who treats religion as an individual matter; and indeed we have a President who follows such an ideal. Increasingly, however, it seems that Mr. Reagan is seeking to impose some of his religious views on American society. If the President continues to force the issue of religion in his administration, the educated, middle-classes of America will surely become disillusioned with Mr. Reagan. And Mr. Reagan, who is a superb political communicator, knows that alientating these votes by mixing religion and politics would not make sense during his campaign. Similarly, Mr. Mondale will do everything in his power to push Mr. Reagan on this topic and seek to exploit every opportunity Mr. Reagan affords him on the issue.

The concept of separation of church and state is deeply entrenched in America. Former President Kennedy went out of his way to confirm that his beliefs would not be a force in decision-making while he was in office. The pendulum has clearly swung back in the opposite direction, and keeping in mind that the next President may be in the position to appoint several Supreme Court Justices, we all have an important task in front of us in the choosing of our next President.

NEXT WEEK: The Unions and Protectionism

By Andrew G. Davis

As the autumn kicks back into full swing and the warm Indian-Summer breezes wrestle the leaves to the ground, it's almost impossible not to want to be outside, soaking in the last rays of that precious summer sun. Whether you're heading out alone or in groups, to work or to play, there are several places, 15 or 20 minute's walk from campus, which are ideal for spreading out the books, meandering aimlessly, or simply absorbing solar radiation.

As I mentioned in last week's column, the Juniata River and its tributaries dominate the geography around Huntingdon. In addition to the cliffs, there are other places where you can get closer to the river, right to the level of the water. There is something indescribably peaceful about watching a river run its course, and it can produce philosophical thoughts of the noblest order and/or extreme drowsiness, depending on the weather at hand.

If one follows Mifflin Street down through town and beneath the railroad tracks, bearing right at Laney's Feed Mill, there is an old bridge foundation next to the new bridge, surrounded by a miniature park with shade trees and several benches. This is just downstream from the famous launch-site of the Raft Regatta, and offers a good view of the river and the hills beyond Smithfield. The tall, man-made levee bordering the river on the Smithfield side is the Dept. of Natural Resources' Flood Protection Project, built to contain the Juniata from wiping out Smithfield every ten years or so when torrential rains cause flood conditions. Its effectiveness has been disputed, but it does provide an excellent walking or running path along the river.

Bordering the river directly across the road behind the River-view Shopping Center in Smithfield is an expansive field with shade trees and park benches. Here Crooked Creek joins its parent river, and there is an excellent view to the west, with prime sun in the afternoon.

Continuing downstream, the next tributary to join the Juniata is Standing Stone Creek, a stream of much more fame and history. Near the place where the creek joins the river, there once was a strange geological formation — a long stone standing straight on end in the water. The Iroquois Indians used the rock as a marker signifying the approach of their village, located at the junction of the waters. The Iroquois word for "standing stone" was pronounced something like "oneuta-haga," which became Anglicized into the word "Juniata."

Following Penn Street out towards Rt. 22 to the east of town, one passes playing fields on the left, and crosses the bridge over the Standing Stone Creek. Immediately on the left after the bridge, there is a small, very attractive park housing an old wooden church of a curious design. There are picnic tables, stone benches, and even charcoal grills for cooking out. Following the creek is an old path, ideal for running on, or simply to walk along and explore the stream-bank in the most leisurely manner.

Next week: "The Higher Ground."

On the Health Line. . .

By Bettina Tweardy

Fitness . . . what do you think of as you read that word? Jogging? Racquetball? Aerobics? It's not surprising if you do. The current health craze has many of us sweating, grunting and one-two-three-four-ing our way to lower blood pressures, higher metabolisms, smaller waistlines and bigger biceps. And it's great! Exercise is health, and feeling good about one's body is important. But in this new wave of fitness, have people forgotten about something at least as important — if not more important — than physical conditioning? What about MENTAL fitness? I'm not just talking about mental alertness and test-taking ability, but true mental and emotional well-being. Being happy. Feeling good about yourself. Certainly one's mental health benefits from physical fitness, but it needs some personal time too. Mental fitness is not something to be taken for granted.

Noted psychologist Joe Czitkovic, Ph.D. states, "people who do not give themselves enough time to clear their thoughts, wash out negative ideas and develop positive, healthy ways of thinking can often become narrow, rigid and constricted."

As a result, Czitkovic continued, "people lose touch with what they are really feeling and thinking.

Band Will Perform

By Steve Creps

The JC Marching Band will be taking the field with more halftime entertainment during its third season. Work on the show began last spring, when the theme "Broadway" was chosen. Over the summer, meetings were held at which the songs, drills, and uniforms were discussed. The songs which are being used are "Everything's Coming Up Roses", "Cabaret", "On Broadway", "One", "Tomorrow", and "Memory". Drills for the shows were written by Juniors Todd Sponsler, and Steve Creps.

Band members returned to school a week early this fall, for band camp. During the week, the band was hard at work learning the shows, drills and routines. There were also practices for the Parent's Weekend Concert.

The band is anxiously awaiting the arrival of new blazers and pants which will serve as a uniform. The blazers will be navy blue. The pants will be gray. White shirts and blue/gold ties will complet the uniform. The uniforms are expected to arrive in time for Homecoming Weekend.

The band front has also purchased new equipment. The silks will be sporting new flags. The majorettes and rifles will also be using flags, and hats and canes. New rifles have also been purchased. These additions will add color to the half-time shows.

The band is led by Director Ibrook Tower; Field Conductors, Celeste Nezneski, Danielle Rupp, and Steve Creps; Head Majorette, Bridget Berich, and Flag Captain, Marianne Shipp. The band will be performing at all home football games, in the Homecoming Parade, and at Wilkes College on October 13.

CCT Program Stressed by Student Services

By Steve Creps

"Co-Curricular Transcript" is a phrase which is often heard around Juniata College lately. What exactly is a Co-Curricular Transcript, though? This article will be the first in a series of several articles which will take a closer look at co-curricular education at Juniata College. This week's article will outline the development of the program, introduce the goals statements, and take a brief look at the mechanics of the program.

First, what is Co-Curricular Education? It is a program which provides students with rich and rewarding learning experiences that serve to complement the intellectual training derived from the "formal" curriculum. Co-curricular activities at Juniata include many activities which were known as extra-curricular activites in high school. According to Dean of Student Services, Arnold Tilden, the prefix co- is used by Juniata because "it better suggests that these activities are important to the growth of an individual."

Students can participate in a co-curricular program by participating in intramurals, belonging to a club, or living in a residence hall. Other co-curricular activities include leadership training, workshops, Career Fair, and other seminars. Any activity which can result in personal growth and development for the student may be included in a co-curricualr transcript (CCT).

The CCT program was launched on a pilot basis in 1982. It was developed jointly by the Student Services staff members and the Economics + Business Administration Department. There were 12 participants in the program that year. By the following year, participation was increased to 82 students, with 5 seniors completing Co-Curricular Transcripts.

In developing the program, both departments were interested in helping students "develop leadership skills". With this in mind, six goals for the CCT program were identified as follows:

(1) To approach co-curricular learning more systematically.
(2) To offer more personal growth opportunities in residence halls.
(3) To offer greater opportunity for developing leadership skills outside the classroom.
(4) To improve the functioning and effectiveness of campus clubs and organizations through goal setting exercises and improved student leadership skills.
(5) To improve the student leader/advisor relationship by providing a greater degree of structure.
(6) To reward students who have acquired skills through co-curricular experiences by maintaining a verified record in the Placement Office.

To pursue goals one, two and three, programs were designed for the development of personal growth and leadership skills. We will take a closer look at these goals and the related programs in part two of this series.

To pursue goals four and five, conferences have been conducted with advisors to clarify their role, and to introduce the CCT concept. Forms have been developed for students to describe their responsibilities and skills, and for advisors to verify the experience.

To achieve the sixth goal, all forms are gathered and the information transferred to the final CCT form in the senior year. The CCT becomes a permanent part of the placement credentials. (We will take a closer look at goals four, five, and six, in part three of this series.)

In summary, the CCT is a program which provides a systematic approach to developing leadership and personal growth. It also provides for increased student leader/advisor interaction. But most importantly, the CCT program provides a detailed record of the responsibilities handled by the student, and the skills acquired in co-curricular activities.

Traffic Regulations Announced

By Kathy Manzella

Attention all car owners! The following information is of great importance to all J.C. students who have cars either on campus or off campus.

Housing Director Jack Linetty has reported that many students are receiving tickets due to the fact that they are unaware of simple regulations. Contrary to some rumors going around campus, students who reside at Hess and Mission House are required to register their cars. Students who do not register their cars face the possibility of receiving a ten dollar fine plus the five dollar fee for the initial registration.

Students are also reminded that the Oller parking lot is restricted for the use of faculty and staff. Any student parking there will receive a ticket. In addition, students are not permitted to park in the Oneida business lot, in the Admissions parking lot, or behind Good Hall. Cloister residents should also refrain from parking along the road leading to the Sports and Recreation Center.

Students are also urged to pay attention to the local street cleaning schedules on Scott Street, Moore Street, and 18th Street. Scott Street is more commonly known as the street on which Ellis and South are located. Students should refrain from parking on Scott Street from 7:00 a.m. to 12:00 p.m. every Tuesday. Street cleaning is also scheduled for Monday's on Moore Street, and for Friday's on 18th Street during these same hours.

One further problem area has been occurring on Moore Street. Recently the Huntingdon police have been setting up radars by the Borough Building. All students should adhere to the 25 mph speed limit. Local police have also been checking cars for broken headlights and taillights. In order to avoid any problems, Linetty has asked all students to pay strict attention to these guidelines and to the maintenance of their cars.

is to overtake governments. The treaty would also forbid military base construction in Central America and begin to reduce and eventually eliminate military advisors from outside the area.

WASHINGTON — Officials announced Saturday that security was deficient at the United States Embassy near East Beirut when the American diplomats moved there in July. Security remained below adequate last Thursday when a car bomb exploded outside the embassy.

Privately, State Department and other officials said moving into the embassy was a calculated risk in which the generally safe environment of East Beirut would make up for the embassy's lack of protective deferences.

BOSTON — Archbishop Bernard F. Law of Boston explained his and other Roman Catholic bishop's recent statements regarding abortion as the "key issue" in American politics. The Archbishop said that their intention was not to promote President Reagan's re-election despite the fact that Mr. Reagan is anti-abortion and his opponent Walter F. Mondale is for free choice. He said that the discussion of abortion whould be a moral one rather than a partisan one and that the Roman Catholic leaders were only seeking to seize the moment to raise the issue to the highest level. He rationalized that a legal ban on abortion could require long and divisive struggles and so it was not an issue the bishops could back down from.

WASHINGTON — By avoiding the issues President Reagan seems to be succeeding in his quest for re-election. With his performing skills and communicative impact he steers away from the major issues and centers his message on mass communicating opportunity and leadership themes, as well as moods and good feelings to the audience. He is pointing the way towards future campaign techniques argues one New York Times reporter; while Walter Mondale, the Democratic party and the press are following the traditions of all previous elections by sticking to the issues as primary importance in the campaign.

Political Concerns Stirred

By Linda Ramsay

Concern about the future of our country prompted the organization of a new group at Juniata. The Committee for Political Awareness is a group of Juniata students interested in raising political awareness on campus.

Due to the importance of this year's election, Stephanie Schwartz, a senior who was abroad in Germany last year, said that it is especially important to be aware of and participate in politics.

She is organizing the committee after being somewhat involved in politics in Germany. The committee's main focus is on voter registration and voter education. They hope to attain these goals by increasing both awareness and participation on campus and in Huntingdon.

Tables will be set up at dinner for students to have the opportunity to register to vote before the October 9th deadline. Voter education will be a continuing process in which the committee of twenty to thirty students and other interested students will meet once a week on Thursday's at seven in the Gold Room of Ellis to discuss current events and have open discussions on political events.

The committee is also looking into organizing debates, fundraisers and discussions with faculty members. The Committee for Political Awareness hopes to remain objective throughout the coming campaign months and stated they will make no attempt at convincing anyone of a specific political opinion.

Footloose Showing in Oller

By Lauralee Snyder

The hit movie "Footloose," which produced seven smash singles, will be showing at Oller Hall on Friday, September 28, at 7:30 p.m.

The story focuses on Wren, a teenager taken from the fastlane of Chicago and thrown into a hick-town where drinking, dancing and even playing the stereo loudly are considered crimes. The reason for these restrictions is that the son of a prominent town figure was killed while driving home from a bar. After his son's death, the father decides to rid the town of everything associated with "partying".

Wren arrives in the town after the laws have been in effect for a few years. Finding himself very bored with the social life of the town, he begins to speak out and petition for the privilege of having a school dance. He gains the support of many of his new peers, and the story becomes a battle between the adults and teenagers of the community.

The movie stars Kevin Bacon, Christopher Penn, and Lori Singer.

This week's feature film of the "Language of Film" class is entitled ALFIE. This 1966 British film creates a character who lives by the Playboy Philosophy, experiencing its assets and dilemmas. All films shown by this class are open to Juniata students and staff at no charge. Showing time is Tuesday October 2 at 7 p.m. in A100.

Cancer Fund Drive Goal Established by Juniata

HUNTINGDON — Juniata College President Frederick M. Binder announced today that the college has established a $5,000 goal for this year's American Cancer Society fund drive in Huntingdon County.

Dr. Binder, who is chairman of the Huntingdon County fund-raising effort this year, added that the goal for the entire county is $34,000.

"By establishing a $5,000 goal for the college, we are voicing support for the work of the American Cancer Society and underscoring the importance of this fund-raising project," Dr. Binder said.

The college plans to meet its goal by donating the proceeds from several athletic events to the American Cancer Society. The first event will be the Juniata College Volleyball Classic tournament on Oct. 5-6. "All of the proceeds from this 15-team tournament will be donated to the American Cancer Society," Dr. Binder said. "I invite area residents to come and support Juniata's outstanding women's volleyball team and the American Cancer Society." Play will begin at 4 p.m. Friday and 10 a.m. Saturday and continue throughout the day and evening.

On Parent's Weekend, Dr. Binder announced that the college will donate one dollar to the American Cancer Society for each general admission ticket sold to the Juniata/Lycoming football game Oct. 27. A third event may be scheduled later in the year.

"As a former cancer patient myself, I appreciate the work done by the American Cancer Society," Dr. Binder said. "Cancer strikes at any age, and it is estimated that some 450,000 Americans will die of the disease this year. That is 1,230 people a day or about one every second."

Dr. Binder noted that early diagnosis and prompt treatment are key factors in successfully treating cancer. "Continued research into the causes of cancer is also crucial, and that's why the work of the American Cancer Society is so important," Dr. Binder concluded.

The Schedule for Mountain Day this year will be similar to previous ones:

9:00	Buses leaving from Ellis
10:15	Sherwood/Cloister Football Freshmen/Faculty Volleyball
11:00	Lunch begins
12:00	Tug of War
1:00	Senior/Faculty Football
2:00	Buses begin leaving

Along with volleyball and football, there are lots of trails to go hiking on. Frisbee is another popular activity so you may want to bring one along. The consensus around campus puts Mountain Day on either Thursday of this week (today) or Monday next week. But don't take my word for it, and don't trust the guys down the hall. The safest bet is to listen to your RA, they know everything.

Lecture on Cold War Presented

By Avirl Opinante

A lecture entitled "The Cold War and the Causes of Peace," was given Wednesday, September 19 by Dr. Lewis Gaddis, a history professor at Ohio University and a national authority on the doctrine of containment.

In his lecture, which was presented to a full audience in the Faculty Lounge, Gaddis discussed the positive aspects of nuclear deterrence and the United States' post-1945 situation. He said the post-World War II system of international relations, which was based upon an arbitrary and artificial division of the world into spheres of influence, incorporated within it the most bitter and persistent antagonism short of war in modern history.

Gaddis explained that history shows that war usually comes about as a result of conscious decision rather than by accident. When leaders know the destruction that could be caused by nuclear weapons, and know that the use of these weapons could be brought about by their own carelessness, they think carefully before they act. He also said that our present system creates pessimism about war, thereby reducing its chances.

During the lecture, Gaddis also criticized the peace movement for its failure to acknowledge the complexities of the situation and to recognize the pros existing in our present system. In addition, he criticized the movement for hurling insults at its opponents.

Gaddis gave a thorough analysis of the positive aspects of the present system; however, anyone who expected to hear about the system's weaknesses or about how we could advance beyond mere stability would have been disappointed.

Dr. Lewis Gaddis spoke Wednesday Sept. 19 on "The Cold War and Causes of Peace" in the Faculty Lounge. The lecture was very well attended by the Juniata community.

The World Turns To Homecoming

By Betsy Halsey

The Homecoming Committee has planned an exciting time for October 5-7 including activities with the International theme in mind.

On Friday afternoon an "Almost Anything Goes" competition will take place. Teams of eight will join in a variety of crazy events which will run all over the campus. Dorm points will be given out to the winners.

Later on Friday there will be a pep rally on Detwiler Plaza featuring the Band and the Cheerleaders. The evening will be topped off with a coffeehouse performance by The Jim Corr and Friends Irish Band. This will be presented in Catharsis Lounge after the pep rally.

Saturday will begin with the annual Homecoming Parade. Dorms, groups, clubs and other attractions will fill Huntingdon's streets. Each class will again build a float which will be judged at the halftime game show.

An International Luncheon, the Homecoming Dance, an Alumni Soccer game and the football game vs. Western Maryland also will fill this weekends agenda.

To wrap up the weekend in the International theme, the film "Around the World In 80 Days" will be shown outside Oller on Sunday. Homecoming 1984 promises to be fun; hopefully everyone will attend.

This is one of several photographs of ruined cathedrals and abbeys that will be displayed in Shoemaker Gallery through October 28. The exhibit titled, "Ruins and Memories" is sponsored by the Ambrose Everett Yohn Art Fund.

Walker Hosted by J.C.

HUNTINGDON — The campus minister's office at Juniata College is hosting Patrick Walker of Winfield, as campus ministry intern for the 1984-85 academic year.

Walker is a graduate of Ursinus College in Collegeville, where he majored in philosophy and religion with a minor in psychology. Having completed two years of the M.Div. program at Princeton Theological Seminary in New Jersey, he plans to go to Rutgers University to obtain a masters degree in social work.

The seminary's three-year program requires an internship or one academic year of field experience. Walker chose the internship because he wanted practical exposure to the ministry. "I wanted to go out and experience it and live it," he said.

Walker will work with the Campus Ministry Board (CMB), a college funded, student governed organization committed to the wholeness and well-being of the members of the college community. The Rev. Dr. M. Andrew Murray, campus minister and the group's advisor in past years, wanted more time for personal contacts with the campus community and gave Walker the job of advising the CMB.

"I'm very impressed by the student and religious activities at Juniata," Walker said, "My function is to lend support and help in any way I can."

After he completes his work at the seminary and Rutgers, Walker plans to work in urban ministry, spending five to 10 years doing religious social work in New York and Philadelphia.

"Patrick is a real asset to the campus ministry program," Dr. Murray said. "He brings a great deal of enthusiasm and devotion to his work."

Art Exhibit Presented at Juniata

HUNTINGDON — A collection of over 60 prints and drawings featuring English and Roman ruins is currently on display at Juniata College's Shoemaker Gallery.

The display, entitled "Ruins and Memories," is almost entirely comprised of works from the 19th century. It features seven large prints by George Cuitt (1779-1854) of ruined cathedrals and abbeys in the Yorkshire countryside of England. The prints are made from the intricately detailed etchings and are created to draw the viewer into the mystery and dignity of these ancient structures. The plates " . . . have no equal in Britain and no superior in the similar school of any nation," claims one British authority.

There are also architectural prints by Italian etcher Pinanesi and his 19th century successor, Rossini.

Maxime Lalanne, considered by some to be the most highly regarded French printmaker of the 19th century, is represented along with Daubigny and Renior. Prints by other artists from the 17th and 18th centuries are also on display.

The public is cordially invited to enjoy these fine prints. The display will continue until Oct. 28. Shoemaker Gallery is located on the corner of 17th and Moore streets and is open weekdays from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Other times may be arranged by appointment. The exhibit is being supported by the Ambrose Everett Yohn Art Fund.

Effective October 1, 1984, van prices for the weekly trip to State College will increase from $1.00 to $2.00 each way. Tickets may still be purchased at the Information Desk in Ellis Center.

Kensinger Appointed As Director of Development

HUNTINGDON — Juniata College President Frederick M. Binder has announced the appointment of Charles E. Kensinger as the college's new Director of Development.

In this new position, Kensinger will work with the Vice President for College Advancement in the planning and conduct of the college's development program, including the current Century II Campaign. This ten-year, $20 million effort is designed to finance the growth of endowment for academic programming, student scholarship needs, campus renovation, educational equipment and program enrichment.

A 1972 graduate of Juniata, Kensinger received his B.S. degree in elementary education. He went on to the Pennsylvania State University to earn his M.Ed. in educational administration in 1975.

From 1972 to 1974, Kensinger served as head teacher for the Everett Area School District. He then taught for the Spring Cove School District and served as vice president and president of the Spring Cove Educational Association. In 1980, he was appointed as the district's elementary principal.

While serving as a principal, Kensinger developed the district's Long Range Plan for School Improvement, evaluated other elementary schools by serving on the Intermediate Unit 08 Evaluation Team and evaluated the total school program through examining standardized test results and students' daily progress. He has also developed programs for exceptional children. In 1983, Kensinger was named Outstanding Young Educator by Martinsburg Jaycees.

Much of his free time has been devoted to activities with the Martinsburg Memorial Church of the Brethren and numerous community organizations. He is also a semi-professional magician, performing throughout Pennsylvania and surrounding states. He is a member of the International Brotherhood of Magicians and the Society of American Magicians. He and his wife and daughter reside in Martinsburg.

New Coffee House Policy Established

By Maria Cavey

At one time the policy at Juniata was that only one lounge party was allowed on only one weekend night. As a result, competition among clubs and any effort to make a party exceptionally good were eliminated. Thus, the policy was then revised to allow two open parties on a weekend night. While some clubs' funds prospered, others lost money.

Since Catharsis Lounge in Sherwood was the only lounge opened for parties on weekday nights, organizations avoided the weekend party competition by having parties there. Consequently, residents and their R.A.s complained. Since Coffee Houses were considered "parties," they were objected to as well.

In defense, Center Board, sponsor for Coffee Houses, argued effectively that the only time for Coffee Houses was during the week since they'd definitely be ignored on the weekends when students would flock to larger and more over-whelming lounge parties. Thus, the policy was re-considered this year.

Traditionally, students who attend a Coffee House are seated at chairs and tables as opposed to standing in open space, as at lounge parties. This year the policy change has caused one more big difference between the two social events: the new rule is that in order for a party to be on a weeknight, it must be in Catharsis Lounge (as before) and now it must consist of live entertainment. This year Center Board is budgeting to have three Coffee Houses a term.

Tough Times For JV Tribe

By Andy Hiscock

The J.V. Indian football team had another tough outing this past Monday when they went up against Susquehanna at College Field. The Tribe was blanked 57-0 by a tough Susquehanna squad which scored 13-7-17-20 points in the four quarters respectively. The game did have bright spots for the Indians, who showed great intestinal fortitude as they delivered crushing blows while on defense, and had sputtering glimpses of hope while on offense.

Leading the Indian offense was freshman Jim Estep who showed good poise while under a heavy rush. We will definitely look forward to productive years in the future for him. Unfortunately, an excellent freshman receiver Mike Cottle was injured in the first half and was taken to the hospital with a possible separated snoulder. The injury to Mike was timely for the Tribe, as he was having a good year. The Tribe's best offensive threat occurred at the end of the first half when they were stopped at the one on a fourth down.

Intramural Action Begins

By Andy Hiscock

Well, the 1984 Fall Intramural sports season is upon us. This year the fall Intramural sports program consists of three different leagues. There are Women's Soccer, Men's Softball, and Co-Recreational Volleyball leagues. The leagues began to play on or around September 19th.

The Women's Soccer league is made up of three teams. The season will consist of a double round-robin with each team playing all of the others to complete their four game season. No play-offs are scheduled unless there is a tie. The women will hold their games on Tuesday nights at 6:00 p.m.

The Men's Softball season began on September 23rd with "LGCF's" deafeating "The Defenders" easily 13-1. This game does not foreshadow the whole softball season; there will be many close games, and the champions will definitely earn their title. The league consists of six teams. I have not yet received a schedule of game dates, but I will relay the information to you as I get it.

The third league in action this Fall is the Co-Recreational Volleyball system. This League is divided into two divisions "A" and "B". The "A" Division consists of 12 teams, and is separate from Division "B" because overhand serving and spiking is allowed. The Co-Rec V-Ball season will pit each team against each other team in the league one time to complete their eleven game season. The games will be held on Sunday's, Monday's, and Wednesday's between 8:30 and 11:00 p.m. Match play began Wednesday, September 19th with eight teams in action. The "Arrowmen" didn't have much trouble defeating "Two-Thirds" 15-12, 15-4. Brian Zimmerman and Rob Glenny were able to set each other up at the net effectively for the "Arrowmen." "The Red Herrings" also were victorious defeating "The Team To Beat" 15-13, 15-8. "Reverse Perspective" beat "The Saba Saba's" 15-10, and 17-15. Tom Hunt had a good serve for the Perspective. "Contusions" also won on the 19th beating "Great Expectations" 8-15, 15-19, 12-10.

Co-Rec Volleyball Division "B" consists of 18 teams, with neither overhand serving nor spiking allowed, even though participants in this league are out to win just as much as those in Division "A." Division "B" Action also began on September 19th. "The Druts" fought off "Ball Busters" 15-10, 15-

Indians Battle Widener But Fall in Second Half

Juniata gives up third straight game

By Joe Scialabba

Juniata wanted to limit the Widener passing game last Saturday in Chester and accomplished that goal fairly well with a 4-2-5 prevent-style defensive set. Unfortunately, the Indians couldn't totally shut-down the Pioneers as the hosts used a grueling ground game to score a 45-22 come-from-behind Middle Atlantic Conference victory.

The Indians dropped their third straight contest and second consecutive league game. Widener is 2-1 overall and 2-0 in the MAC.

The Tribe led 14-10 at halftime but surrendered 35 second-half points as Widener scored on all but one of its final six possessions. The Pioneers missed a 33-yard field goal on their fifth drive.

There was a good sized crowd on hand for the games, and they were a definite plus for the aggressive tribe defense as they forced the mistakes. However, only the first miscue led to Indian points. Juniata looked primed for an upset when Widener fumbled on three consecutive possessions in the second quarter.

QB Mike Culver scored from the two yard line, and combined with his first-period 11-yard scoring pass to Dave Murphy, gave the Indians a 14-10 lead with 9:04 until halftime. But the next two fumbles led to an interception and a missed 42-yard field goal. The Tribe couldn't build on the lead.

"The fact we didn't score and pull away a little was the key," said Juniata Head Coach Rob Ash. "If we would have scored after the second fumble and gone up 21-10 they would have been in trouble. We wanted them to throw to catch-up because we knew we could stop their passing game, or at least limit it. When we didn't get the bigger lead they knew they could still run and have plenty of time to win the game."

After halftime, Widener decided to run the football and it worked to perfection. "We knew we weren't passing well, so we decided to run as much as we could," said Widener's Bill Manlove. "I was very pleased with our offense in the second half. The line blocked well and we eliminated the mistakes we were making in the first half. (Joe) Bakey did a nice job at quarterback, too.

The freshman signal-caller replaced starter Dan Guy late in the second quarter and then played a tremendous second half throwing a 5-yard TD pass to Bob Mangold and running for two scores of his own from 9 and 2 yards.

Kevin Savage had scoring runs of 12 and 1 in the second half plus a 2-yard score in the second quarter. Savage led the Widener running attack with 115 yards on 26 carries. Mangold added 88 yards on 9 totes as the Pioneers gained 205 on the ground for the afternoon, 139 in the final 30 minutes.

Nick Pulos made seven-of-seven PAT-kicks and hit a 26 yard field goal that gave Widener a 3-0 lead on their first possession.

Juniata made only one brief run at the Pioneers in the second half when they went 70 yards in 7 plays to score. Murphy made a great diving catch on the 4th-and-8 call for the 12-yard TD play. Culver hit Carl Fekula for the two-point conversion and a 38-22 score with 10:57 left in the game.

On their next possession the Indians missed the sticks on fourth down at their own 29 and that led to the final Pioneer touchdown.

The Indian offense had its lowest output of the young season getting 259 total yards and only 69 yards rushing. Injuries are playing a key factor at the running back spot as starter Bill Stamp went down with a knee injury on his third carry early in the game and back-ups Tony Dively and Joe Fagan didn't even make the trip due to ailments.

"I'm very concerned about the running back situation," noted Ash. "We had to use Frankie Phelps and Rick Bouch (a quarterback), both freshman, due to the injuries. We have a real shortage at that position."

"I am also concerned about our special team play. We need better punt coverage and our kickoff work, both ways was lousy."

On the positive side, Murphy added another receiving record on Saturday as his two TD catches give him 19 for his career. He is now tied with Jeff Barnes (1965-68) for that Juniata mark.

Culver had a solid day, despite two interceptions, hitting 11-of-26 passes for 190 yards and 2 TD's.

"Murphy is a great receiver," praised Manlove. "You can limit him but you can't stop him. Culver also impressed me. He can really throw."

Juniata needs to put it all together Saturday when they host Albright at College Field. Kickoff is set for 1:30 p.m. in the MAC Contest.

World News Update

By Cindy Duick

WASHINGTON — An agreement "on a process of follow-up exchanges between the two sides" was the result of the Reagan Administration's meetings with Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko last week, according to a Senior State Department official.

During the nine hours of talks, on Wednesday and Sunday with Secretary of State George Shultz, and on Friday with President Reagan, there was a "rigorous give-and-take on nearly every global and bilateral issue," the official stated.

Mr. Shultz declared the discussions "substantive," saying that the agreement made is to "keep in touch . . . not casually, but carefully, through diplomatic channels." Calling the meetings "useful talks," Mr. Reagan explained that the Russians would "get a fair deal if they seek the path of negotiation and peace." He also shared that he told Mr. Gromyko that "we Americans have no hostile intentions toward his country and that we are not seeking military superiority over the U.S.S.R." He also stated that "the United States is committed to move forward with the Soviet Union toward genuine progress in resolving outstanding issues."

FULDA, West Germany — A week of protests against NATO (North Atlantic Treaty Organization) maneuvers in this region culminated Sunday with an anti-nuclear demonstration in which up to 30,000 people participated. The tens of thousands of participants gathered together to form four human chains along roads between Fulda and U.S. military bases.

The other protest activities during the past week, including the damaging to U.S. Army installations and material, resulted in the detention of at least 100 people and turned relations between United States military commanders and local political leaders sour.

Mime Thrills Audience
Arterberry fills Oller

By Carol Connell

If you happened to be in Baker Refectory early on Tuesday night, then you were able to see a preview of the opening act for the 1984-85 Artist Series, mime Trent Arterberry. Performing on the tables and around the dining hall, Arterberry set the tone for his later show in Oller Hall as he simultaneously surprised and amused the audience with his unique art form.

Learning his craft as an apprentice to Don McLeod, Arterberry began his career in Boston. A one-time member of the National Mime Theatre and a teacher of mime at the Boston Conservatory and Boston University, Arterberry is noted for his capacity for improvisation with his audience. Opening for such performers as The Kinks, B.B. King, Graham Parker, Jonathan Edwards, Pure Prairie League and Jean-Luc Ponty, Arterberry also appeared with Julio Iglesias at Radio City Music Hall for four sold out nights. Trent Arterberry, the 1983 winner of the National Association of Campus Activities' Performing Artist of the Year, employs music as well as vocalization in his sketches. He began the show with an 'Introduction' to a crowded auditorium.

Depicting such characters as a young father, a desperado, a baby being born, a little boy playing with toys, and a man with a dog, Arterberry cleverly displayed a wide range of human emotions, which resulted in laughter and identification by the audience. Arterberry also dealt with a current political issue in his sketch, War. Tracing the evolution of war and weaponry, Arterberry makes the statement that a nuclear war will return man to the stone age.

Arterberry, continuing without an intermission, developed many concepts, including one that characterized several genres of television shows and another characterizing a bachelor preparing dinner for his date. In this sketch entitled Dinner for Two, the young man being stood up goes into the audience in search of a replacement date. Mrs. Ellis, wife of former J. C. President Calvert Ellis, the mother of Betty Ann Cherry, played along beautifully in this role as she enjoyed 'wining, dining and dancing' with Arterberry, who gave her a flower in appreciation.

After the set of sketches, Arterberry took suggestions from the audience. Depicting a piece of bacon, a typewriter and a college freshman versus the flat tire, Arterberry led into the final portion of his program with a bit on the 'most popular thing on college campuses,' entitled Disjointed.

'Picking up' three members of the audience as passingers for his 'car', Arterberry then 'drove' over to student Mark Royer who was to serve as a gas pump and gas attendent. Royer, after being added as another passanger, continued to play along with Arterberry in a

Juniata Awaits Homecoming '84

The Juniata College campus will become a fantasy world Oct. 5-6 as thousands of alumni return to College Hill for the 1984 Homecoming celebration. This year's theme, "Around the World," will be featured in many events throughout the weekend.

Highlighting the two-day event will be the traditional Homeconing Parade through Huntingdon which will begin at 10:30 a.m. Saturday. Dr. Duane F. Stroman, professor of sociology and recipient of the 1984 Beachley Distinguished Professor Award, will serve as this year's Grand Marshall. The parade will include class and residence hall floats, the Juniata College Band and apparatus from the Huntingdon Fire Department. Parade judges will include Mrs. Elizabeth Cherry, associate professor of history, Dr. Constance Collins, assistant dean of academic affairs and registrar, and Dr. William E. Russey, professor of chemistry.

The parade route will begin at the Sears store and move south on Washington Street to Sixth Street. It will follow Sixth to Mifflin, proceed north on Mifflin to 18th Street and enter the Juniata campus.

Registration for Homecoming participants will be from 1-6 p.m. Friday, Oct. 5 in the Alumni Office located in the basement of Founder's Hall, and 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Saturday, Oct. 6 in the lobby of the Kennedy Sports and Recreation Center. There will be an art exhibit at Shoemaker Gallery both days from 1-6:30 p.m.

The 15-team Juniata Volleyball Classic tournament will begin at 4 p.m. Friday in the Kennedy Sports and Recreation Center and continue Saturday morning. The semi-finals will begin on Saturday at 6 p.m. with the finals scheduled for 7 p.m. Proceeds from all ticket sales will be donated to the American Cancer Society.

Other events scheduled for Saturday include the use of the Kennedy Sports and Recreation center for racquetball and swimming throughout the day and interviews by appointment at the Admissions Office from 9 a.m. until noon.

The alumni soccer game will begin at 10:30 a.m. on the soccer field. From 11:30 a.m. to 1 p.m., participants will be able to enjoy German music during the International Buffet Luncheon on the Oller Hall lawn. This will also be the site of Artists on the Hill, an open air exhibit of arts ad crafts.

Kickoff for the Homecoming football game against Western Maryland will be at 1:30 p.m. After the game there will be a Homecoming Reception in the Gibbel Lobby of the Sports and Recreation Center. Entertainment will be provided by the Juniata College Jazz Ensemble.

Following the finals of the volleyball tournament Saturday evening, the Homecoming Dance will be held in Kennedy Sports and Recreation Center.

Computer System Installed

By Scott Snyder

A new computer system has been instituted in the management of business affairs for the college. This new system is a data base system as described by William Alexander, vice president for financial affairs. He feels that this new computer will provide a better range of services to the student. The system will allow for an itemized bill for each term. It will also allow for better service at the registrar's office as changes can be made almost instantaneously.

An indirect benefit of the new system is that information is handled less, thus allowing for fewer errors. One disadvantage of the system is that anytime a withdrawal needs to be made, such as club funds, a minimal advance notice must be given at the accounting office. Once people become familiar with the new system a better and more efficient range of services will be provided.

The parking shortage continues. . .

If ever there were a concern that repeatedly crops up on Juniata's campus, it would have to be the issue of adequate parking on campus. Lately it seems as if there are more students with cars than there are parking spaces where students are permitted to park their cars.

In particular, the parking lot at Cloister is overloaded with cars in the areas designated for them. Security is indifferent to complaints from Cloister residents about this situation and continues to issue parking tickets to cars which have no place to park.

However, Oller Hall's parking lot is off limits to student parking. The reason behind this ruling is vague and unfair. It doesn't make sense that there are 50 open spaces in Oller, while cars are parking up and down the Cloister driveway with no legal space in which to park.

Security has told residents to park in South's lot, as it can accommodate the extra vehicles. The Juniatian questions why these residents should be inconvenienced and deprived of parking in their own dorm parking lot.

The Juniatian realizes that solutions to this problem are limited but not altogether impossible. Perhaps parking stickers should be issued for each respective dorm parking lot for the residents of that dorm only. If that doesn't correct the situation, maybe students should be assigned a parking space that is solely for their automobile.

Students cannot afford to keep paying for unavoidable parking tickets due to inadequate parking areas. The Juniatian finds this to be an issue that deserves immediate attention from the administration. In all practicality, this problem cannot carry on throughout the entire school year.

It's no secret that there has been an excessive amount of destructive behavior on campus recently. The problem now is what to do about it.

First of all, who is responsible for all this? Let's not blame the golf team and those wild Lesher women. Whoever there poor, misguided deviants are, I feel the college has a responsibility to provide them with an outlet for their frustrations. Innocent members of the student body, as well as numerous inanimate objects (i.e., walls, windows, soccer nets, etc.) have been paying the price for too long. Why can't we get these uncivilized people together to beat on one another? Yes sports fans, the solution is here: Intramural Brawling.

I.M. Brawling — a game where one needs no excuse to beat another human being senseless. No ball. No sticks. No score to keep. The rules are simple, everything is legal. It's a veritable free-for-all. The loser is the one who loses consciousness first. Concessions could also be made for broken bones and large losses of blood.

I.M. Brawling could be available in both individual and team categories. Some participants might not like the team brawl, because each side would begin with the same number of players. (Brawling is not supposed to be fair). Of course there would be no weight classes. In other words, if somebody goes out looking for a fight, they never look for someone the same size.

The best spot to hold I.M. Brawling matches would be the racquetball courts. Two combatants confined to a small room with no place to hide; sort of reminiscent of the Roman gladiators (real men if there ever were any). For the team brawl, the old gym would be more adequate. It could accommodate a large number of fans for

Thanks for the coverage on the new Writing Lab. There were some inaccuracies that students should know about.

Firstly, the Writing Lab is not attached to any department. It is a whole-college project. Our Academic Dean has been especially influential in making the new lab possible. His concern — shared by many faculty — as been that we had no place to refer students for extra help in writing. This was particularly true of students who were not enrolled in a writing course. And even in a writing course, students sometimes cannot get the individual attention they need.

Secondly, the Lab offers help in all kinds of writing problems. We help students learn to generate ideas, to plan and organize, the improve analytical skills, to read more accurately and efficiently, and to compose and respond to effective theses statements. We cover the more comprehensive and substantial skills as well as me-

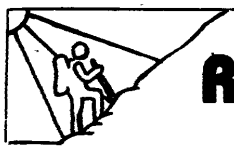
Have you had a problem with parking on campus this year?

Pete Garvey — Senior: "No, because I have a small car and I live at East Houses."

Bill Stutzman — Sophomore: "Yeah, I have a real big problem. I got three tickets so far this year and it's a real hassle. The main problem is the signs. They're not explicit enough about where you can and cannot park."

Bucky Arnette — Sophomore: "Yes, I got a ticket for $27 for illegal parking. There is not ample parking space on campus, especially by Cloister."

Kris Smith — Sophomore: "No. I live in South and there's that big huge parking lot down below."



Road Trips

October is perhaps the ultimate month for what I call "walking weather." It seems that whatever the weather, be it sunny and warm, misty and still, even brisk and windy, October, with her ever-changing colors and rich autumn scents in the air, definitely suits the habitual walker.

Continuing with last week's theme of places within fifteen or twenty minutes walk from campus, it would seem natural that after rambling the river's course, one would want to reach the higher ground, above the commotion and activity which is always associated with the environs of a river. The higher places are serene, detached; they give one an overview of what's going on below, a panorama of the distinct horizon.

Within the immediate vicinity of the college, the highest clear ground, (besides the cliffs) is Round Top, part of the long field behind the Science Center. This offers a moderately substantial view. Newcomers to Juniata have probably wondered about the flagpole visible from the hill, as well as most open places around town, perhaps spotting the flag mysteriously illuminated in the night. At the base of the flagpole is a small park with picnic tables under pine trees, and a fine view to the south across Huntingdon. The park can be reached by following Fifth Street up through town and continuing to the left around the reservoirs on the hillside. The flagpole is also accessible from other points, including Lion's Back, the road up the hill off Warm Springs Road behind East Houses. There are extensive trails beyond Lion's Back, all excellent for running, cross-country skiing (later in the season), and, of course, walking.

In close proximity to the flagpole park is another place which I've found supreme for wandering, especially in a somber, reflective mood - the hilly, meandering, cedar-lined byways of Riverview Cemetary. If you are interested in history, the cemetery is a fascinating place. Many of the stones date back to the 18th century, and there are graves of soldiers who fought in the Civil War as well as in the Revolutionary War. There is also a bronze monumental statue for the soldiers from this area who fell in the War Between the States, as well as many old family names which have been recognized for generations in Huntingdon County. The views afforded at various points in the cemetery are excellent as well. Riverview Cemetery can be reached by following most of the roads immediately parallel to Fourth Street, as well as by using the main entrance off Rt. 26.

To really understand the settlement pattern of a river town, or any town for that matter, one must either look at an aerial photograph, rent a hang-glider, helium balloon, or jet-pack, or climb to the most advantageous height to get as near to a bird's eye view as possible. Such a view of Huntingdon and its surrounding topography is attainable at the top of Piney Ridge, the steep, wall-like mountain across Rt. 22, due south from town. The part visible from Huntingdon is actually the edge of the long ridge, which runs north-east/south-west from town, and was "sawn in half" by the Juniata River eons ago. The highest point of the ridge, according to the U.S. Geological Survey map is 1,104 feet above sea level, compared to around 600 feet for the valley floor.

I discovered the Piney Ridge overlook quite by accident as a rambling but uninformed freshman. Hearing alot of talk about "the cliffs," I assumed them to be the ones visible from the highway, which would turn out to be Piney Ridge. Despite the fact that they weren't the right cliffs, I was rewarded with a magnificent view of the town and river, and Standing Stone Creek to the north, the hills all clothed in a warm autumn russet. One really gets a sense of how the town lies from the overlook, and the proximity of everything is put into perspective. Although I first made the mistake of attempting to climb straight up the hillside, which is composed of loose shale and very slippery, there is an easier access route up the slope. A small, intermittent stream cuts down the hill at an angle, emptying just past the sewage disposal unit across the road leading to Raystown Dam (off of Rt. 22), and a trail entrance can be found at that point. Bear right uphill off the trail, and keep climbing upward along the crest of the ridge. There is an old logging road along the ridge-top, and there are several rock ledges with extensive views to the north and west. It takes considerably longer than the fifteen to twenty minutes' walking time to the other places mentioned, though it can be done. Otherwise, there is a parking place where the road to Snyder's Run diverges from the main road to the dam. It is not an easy hike, but for the reward at the top, it is well worth the climb.

chanical skills, such as sentence clarity, punctuation, spelling, vocabulary, etc. So don't think of us merely as a service to help problem spellers. We also help people who don't know just what to say or the best way to say it.

Essentially, the Lab is tutorial. When you come we assign one staff member to work with you one-on-one. We first ask you to write a little for us (we give you a question to respond to) and then we work with you to identify problem areas. We're not a library or a computer center. We are a personal service in writing, offering the undivided attention of one staff member to work with you on your own writing needs.

While professors may refer you to us, you may also come on your own. We're pleased so many students have come to the Lab on their own initiative. They have realized that improved writing means all-around improved performance as a student.

Your don't have to bring anything. Just drop by Quinter House and see us Monday - Thursday, 1-4 p.m. and Monday and Wednesday evenings, 6:30-8:30.

¡VIVA ESPAÑA!

By Andrea Romano

Vacationing in Spain for ten days this summer was an experience that I will never forget.

Upon arriving in Spain, I had to adapt to the Spanish culture. The first thing I had to get used to was the food. The dinners have three courses. The first course is usually soup. Red scrambled eggs is the customary second course. I always bypassed this course, waiting for the third. Chicken with rice, chicken with corn or chicken with green tomatoes is the third course.

The first day in Madrid, I took a bus trip to the city of Toledo. It was the most beautiful city that I ahd ever seen. The houses were white with pink rooftops and colorful flower pots lined the windows and terraces. The streets are narrow and filled with young children screaming, laughing and playing in their little dresses and pants. The most beautiful aspect of the city was the Cathedral of Toledo. It is huge! At one end of the elegant cathdral, there is a hand carved transparency of a biblical scene, which appears to be alive. Rays of sunlight come through the abyss in the ceiling and one can see the expressions of all the images.

Back in Madrid, the night life is incredible! The city never sleeps. At 4:00 a.m. couples were walking arm-in-arm in the streets. Everyone wore orange or flourescent green. Jeans are rarely seen, thus everyone appears dressed up. On the contrary, one is considered wealthy if he owns a pair of Levis. The streets are made of cobblestone and people crowd around drinking and eating. The night that I was there, Spain had won a soccer game over Denmark. People were driving through the streets screaming and beeping their car horns. Spanish flags were waving.

There is an error in the September 27 Juniatian report on the "containment" lecture of Dr. Lewis Baddis. When he said the hurling of insults was not a good prelude to negotiation, he was referring not the peace movement but to the Reagan administration, in particular to pronouncements of the U.S. President himself.

Would you be eager to sit down and talk to someone who had referred to your government as "Mickey Mouse" (Reagan's phrase for the Russian government), who refers to your aspirations as those of an "evil empire", and who jokes about bombing you? Particularly when you're dealing with the only country (the U.S.) which has ever used the nuclear bomb against another country?

This is not to absolve Russia of any of its crimes against humanity. But we should try to understand the Russians as well as we can. They suffered greatly in W.W. II, for decades they isolated themselves from the world, they inherit a very different way of thinking which borders at times on paranoia. My point is that we will not establish dialogue with them as fellow human beings or as a world power by the hurling of insults, a practice which Dr. Gaddis also deplored.

Guest Commentary

If given the means or opportunity, what would you choose to change about yourself? Perhaps it would be to manage your leisure time more wisely, or perhaps to be less agressive with others (for some, it might be to act more assertively). Most of us, if we are really honest with ourselves, could benefit considerably from some modification in the way we currently manage our lives.

A helpful strategy towards self-improvement is to put into operation a five-step self-management model developed by psychologists Robert Williams and James Long. Let's examine each of the steps keeping in mind that, in many cases, the first two steps may prove sufficient in changing our behavior.

Step 1 — Goal selection is the first and most critical step in the plan. In deciding what goal to select, remember that it should be important to you, measurable and attainable. Also, it is best to work with only one goal at a time.

Step 2 — Monitoring target behavior, that is, keeping a record of the behavior to be changed. By taking note of when and where certain events occur, we can be in a better position to alter the factors affecting the behavior.

Step 3 — Changing setting events, that is, the situations that seem to support the behavior you want to modify. In other words, we want to control the events so that they are supportive of our desired behavior change.

Step 4 — Establishing effective consequences is the next step in the self-management model. The focus here is on establishing some kind of reward system whereby appropriate behaviors are positively reinforced. An effective way to reinforce a particular behavior is to follow that behavior with an immediate positive consequence.

Step 5 — Consolidating gains is the final step in the model. What are the payoffs for achieving your goal? The fact that one regains control over some problem behavior is indeed a major accomplishment. Additionally, success in one area can be generalized to other areas of one's life.

Since we are running out of space and probably approaching the limits of the attention span of most readers, let's continue our discussion next week. At that time we'll review the five-step model and give some specific examples of how it can be used.

On the Health Line. . .

By Bettina Tweardy

It was the answer to dieters' prayers. It was the biggest hit since Lean Cuisine and Weight Watchers' bread. It was used in everything: Diet Coke, Lipton Iced Tea, Alba milk shakes, hot chocolate, lemonade and every other possible reduced-calorie product.

Nutrasweet, also marketed as Equal, became the sweetener with no bitter aftertaste, no warnings that it caused cancer in Canadian laboratory animals and almost no calories. For what more could one ask.

How about safety? Recent tests indicate that Nutrasweet, composed of aspartame, may be hazardous when used in cooking or in hot drinks. According to Dr. Jeffrey L. Bada, a chemist at the Scripps Institution in San Diego, aspartame's two key ingredients -- phenylanine and aspartic acid -- exist at room temperature in a form that can be easily digested by humans. Because the chemical is so rapidly digested and passed out of the body, it has little chance to enter the bloodstream.

Unfortunately, aspartame undergoes a chemical change when heated, changing from an L-isomer crystal form to a D-isomer crystal form, according to Dr. Bada. This new structure is much more difficult for the body to break down. Because it remains in the body longer, this form of aspartame can get into the bloodstream and eventually reach the brain. Althouhg specific dangers of the chemical are unknown, researchers are concerned and advise that the sweetener not be used in cooking or in hot drinks due to this potentially harmful chemical change.

So why not sacrifice a few calories and use sugar or honey in your coffee or tea. Or better yet, ax the caffeine and drink water, fruit juice or milk.

NEXT WEEK: Osteoporosis -- eight out of ten women suffer from a calcium deficiency, which leads to a severe breakdown of the bones as early as age 20.

Hot Wax

Tracie, a British recording artist, has just released her first album in the U.S. "Far From The Hurting Kind" is a collection of tunes from a slightly older, mellow genre of pop. It is pleasant to the ear. Although a good many of the songs had strong beats, they did not become tiresome because of their musicality and harmony. In addition, Tracie is a singer who uses her voice well, although she could bring more of a range of emotion into play. The lyrics were generally interesting, using standard pop music topics and conventional wisdom.

Side one starts out with the song "(I Love You) When You Sleep". The music was pretty with good harmony. The lyrics dealt with an often used topic, which was that men are all bad, but they look innocent when asleep.

"Soul's on Fire" had a strong beat and nice harmony. This cut's lyrics were upbeat and dealt with the supposition that to accomplish something all you need is the will to do it. The whole tone of this tune was positive.

"Nothing Happens Here But You" began with a neat harmonica introduction. Like 'Soul's On Fire' it had a steady beat and optimistic lyrics.

"I Can't Hold On 'Til Summer" was a mellow song. It had a pretty piano introduction. It was essentially a love song written to someone who the lyricist can't wait until summer to see.

"Dr. Love", a slightly sexy song, had a strong pulsating beat. The lyrics dealt with a women offering herself as a means to satisfy his need. The first cut off the second side, "Thank You", was upbeat with good musicality and harmony. It had a strong beat and a nice piano part near the end. It is basically a song thanking a lover for being there.

"Moving Together" is a song about two people getting back together. It had an interesting synthesizer part at the beginning, and a steady beat the whole way through. The tone of this song is a very positive one.

"The House That Jack Built" was lyrically unlike the rest of the songs. The lyrics have more than just surface meaning. It poses the question "Who owns the house that Jack built". The lyrics go on to say that this "house we own" is crumbling. What does this mean? Why not listen to the song and figure it out for yourself?!

"What Did I Hear You Say" has a good guitar part, and a steady beat. The title phrase is repeated numerous times. This was one of the few songs that did not have interesting lyrics.

The title cut, "Far From The Hurting Kind", is a fast-paced song with a strong beat and a nice piano part. The chorus was repeated a number of times throughout the song.

In general this album was good musically, and lyrically. Although you wouldn't call it original, it was easy to listen to and was not boring. Tracie's vocals were strong, though somewhat lacking in emotional range. Stylistically the album borrowed much from the sixties' pop. Although I enjoyed listening to this record, it is not something I would play repeatedly.

Senate Returns to Work

During the month of September the Juniata College Student Government was hard at work preparing for the upcoming school year. The Senate met on September 11, 1984 and again on September 25, 1984.

President Glen Bouder opened the first meeting by welcoming everyone back to Juniata. His first item of business was replacing South dorm senator, Molly McCooey, who did not return to Juniata this year. Three South residents expressed an interest in the position. After discussion and a close election, Becky Hostetter was voted new dorm senator for South. Glen also commented on other items of business: refrigerator rentals; the Used Book Store, which got off to a slow start; and the new health fee of $1.50 to see the nurse.

Vice-president Jack Thomas then took the floor and asked for a volunteer to serve on the Joint Lecture Committee with a representative from Centerboard. Lisa Aurand volunteered, and a motion approved the various Trustee and Faculty committee representatives that were appointed last spring. A third motion approved Glen's suggestion that Patty Renwick and Chuck Hollander represent Student Government on the Student Affairs Council.

Bouder's opening comments at the September 25th meeting praised the Voter Registration Committee. The committee had registered 150 voters as of the time of the meeting. Glen also mentioned the September 22nd Leadership Conference at Camp Greene Hills. 34 students attended the seminars. It was a successful and productive day.

In committee action, Budget and Management reported the official budget cut for this year was $5,000.00 to Student Government. They will be meeting to allocate funds to the various clubs. The Student Concerns Committee reported that they are looking into changing the pool hours and are working on completing the Student Directories. The Residential Life Committee is considering an Energy Conservation Task Force and a project inviting town merchants to dinner. They also had 125 donors at the Blood Drive on Tuesday September 25, 1984. Finally, the Joint Lecture Committee named the frosh who were elected to the Freshman Steering Committee. They are Maria Cavey, Farley Ferrate, Donald Fry, Melissa Barbor, and Allison Von Allen. Freshman Senators will be elected on Tuesday September 9, 1984

The next Student Government meeting will be Tuesday, October 9th at 9 p.m. Everyone is welcome to attend. Your representatives would also like to remind you to check the bulletin boards on your hall where Student Government minutes are posted to learn what your Senate is doing to meet your needs.

East and North Hold Can Drive

The Residence Hall Assiciations of East and North are now holding a beer can drive. Residents are invited to leave their empty cans in cardboard boxes placed in the halls of the two dorms. They will be taken down to Paul's Recycling Yard in Huntingdon and redeemed for twenty-two cents a pound.

What the proceeds will be used for hasn't been decided yet, but as East's RHA President Jamie Van Buren says, "We always need money."

Homecoming Dance

The annual Homecoming Dance will be held this Saturday, October 6, from 10 p.m. to 2 a.m. in the Memorial Gymnasium.

The Homecoming Commitee has selected "Tiffany", a top-40 band from Altoona, to perform. Tickets for the dance are three dollars and they can be purchased in the Ellis Lobby during meal hours and at the Information Desk the night of the dance. No tickets can be purchased at the door.

The dance will be sponsored by the Centerboard Dance Committee.

Students Strive Together

By Lauralee Snyder

The HOBO (Human Behavior of Organizations) class went on a hike last Monday, September 24. But this was no ordinary excursion — it was a test in working together as a group in making decisions and taking risks.

The class was divided into four groups and each group was driven approximately thirty minutes west on Rt. 22. They were dropped off in the middle of nowhere with only a bag lunch and a vague sense of where Camp Blue Diamond, their destination, was located. No maps, compasses, etc. were provided; the students had to provide whatever they felt necessary. The groups started at 10:15 a.m. and spent the day blazing trails through woods and cornfields and over mountains, encountering wildlife (such as snakes) and using their combined instinct and knowledge to find Camp Blue Diamond. The first group checked in at 2:45, the second and third groups were in by 4:15. The fourth group never arrived; they were found walking along the road, not far from the camp.

The next day in class, the hike, its purpose and results, were discussed in depth. The individuals of the class learned more about themselves and being a part of a group. All in all, the trip was a very fun learning experience.

years ago, sent supplies to South Korea as flood relief aid. A North Korean convoy of 370 open trucks transported the supplies: tons of rice, medicine and cloth through Panmunjon to the farming area of Taesongdong in the demilitarized zone of South Korea. South Korean officials are calling the volunteer aid nothing but a propaganda move, insisting they did not need the supplies; but they did not turn the aid down, hoping to help aid-reducing tensions between their divided country.

what would no doubt be a very popular spectator sport.

Matches would be scheduled at the most realistic times, Friday and Saturday between 11:00 p.m. and 2:00 a.m. Participants would be encourage to reach a minimum blood-alcohol level before "play" would begin.

I hope the administration takes this proposal seriously. It's obvious that I.M. sports such as team handball and floor hockey are not providing satisfactory outlets for the aggressive behavior evident on campus. After all, why not be realistic about the situation and try to keep everybody happy?

Bring Joy to Others

By Kay Rockafellow

The Social Service Club is an organization created for helping those in need. The club succeeds in doing this by organizing and aiding various community groups throughout the school year. Thus, the Social Service Club needs members who care about the physical and emotional well-being of others.

The club is currently setting up a Big Brother/Big Sister program with children attending the Alfarata Elementary School. At Christmas time, the club plans to help Easter Seals by collecting and donating Christmas presents to handicapped children.

The Social Service Club also aids in the Cystic Fibrosis Bowl-for-Breath. Bowlers obtain sponsors who pledge money for the total number of pins knocked down within three games. Cystic Fibrosis is a genetic disease which affects the lungs and digestive system of children.

To finish up the school year, Special Olympics are held for handicapped youths. The club sets up areas for playing kickball, blowing soap bubbles and painting faces for the younger participants involved in the Special Olympics.

Throughout the entire school year, the club sponsors speakers and organizes fundraisers. The speakers discuss today's social issues and problems. The proceeds from the fundraisers are donated to local organizations such as Horsepower (horseback riding for the handicapped), the Huntingdon Food Bank, etc.

To help with any of the previous activities, come to the monthly meetings of the Social Service Club held on the second Wednesday os each month at 8 p.m. in Lesher's Carpeted Lounge.

Exchange Program Reviewed

By Mary E. Ritchey

This week I want to give you a more in-depth look at Juniata's foreign programs. As I mentioned last week, students interested in studying abroad have four programs and six countries from which to choose. Most of these options are for juniors only, but the international internships are still open to the current junior and senior classes.

Juniata Exchange Program

A one-for-one exchange with a student from another school in France, Germany, Great Britain and Japan. As a participant you will be totally immersed in the culture you have chosen. You and your partner trade living arrangements and family contacts and you are considered exactly as though you were a student from that country enrolled in that institution. If you want to find unparalleled opportunities to learn about others while pursuing your own field of study this is the program for you.

Jacksons Dazzle Philly's JFK

This past weekend the Jacksons performed in JFK stadium. They performed two nights, Friday and Saturday, for an appreciative crowd.

It was the Jacksons second trip to Philadelphia, due to the rained out concert on Labor Day weekend. The people with tickets for the Labor Day concert attended the Friday concert. I attended the Saturday night concert after paying 30 dollars for my ticket. Neither of the concerts were sold out, which could have been attributed to the high price. Many people felt that it was a ridiculous amount to pay, but I felt I got my money's worth.

The Jacksons have been an important factor in the music industry for close to 15 years. They started out as the "Jackson 5", performing together until some members decided to try it on their own.

The concert was filled with music from their early days, as well as music from brothers, Michael and Jermaine's solo careers. So for the price of 30 dollars you not only saw a dynamic group perform, but you also saw two class solo acts.

The stage was a masterpiece. Lights lit up the stage and firecrackers sounded off at the appropriate times during certain songs. This was showmanship characteristic of the Jacksons. Their outfits were sequined and flashy which made the show even more spectacular.

Michael Jackson was the center of attention. When singing his hits, "Beat It" and "Billy Jean", he performed the infamous "moon walk" and jumped up on his toes, which excited the crowd. Michael's dancing talents were what everyone waited for.

I was somewhat disappointed that Michael didn't perform "PYT" and "Thriller", and that the concert only lasted 1 hour and 45 minutes. Overall though, I must say that the concert exceeded my expectations.

Mountain Day Dance

Have you ever returned from Mountain Day feeling too restless or too wound up to return immediately to the books? If you are a freshman and have not experienced Mountain Day yet, you will probably find this to be so.

Well, the Dance Committee has planned an event to fill those restless hours after Mountain Day. They are sponsoring a Post Mountain Day Dance in South's Rebel Den from 7 to 11 p.m. Music will be provided by V103, and traditional beverages will be served. The cost for the dance will be only one dollar; tickets can be purchased at the door.

Scouting Club Reveals Identity

By Esther Compher

Lately people have been wondering about some of the clubs on campus. They hear a name in passing and wonder where these clubs are and what they are doing. Well, this should eliminate one question: "What is the Scouting Club?".

The Scouting Service Club was formed last year to replace a declining Order of the Arrow lodge. The once all male lodge was replaced by this co-ed club for all people interested in scouting either as a Boy or Girl Scout, an Explorer or just an interested bystander.

Although unknown to most of the Juniata population, the Scouting Service Club was a very active organization last year. The major project for the year was a list of names and addresses of people volunteered to help local Boy Scouts earn merit badges. The list includes many professors and townspeople who plan to help. Other projects included helping to arrange a "Career Day" for nearly 100 area Girl Scouts, which included a performance by a local Order of the Arrow Indian dance team on Detwiler Plaza. The club also entered a road rally sponsored by the local Explorer Post and won two trophies, second and third places. They also went snow camping and held a fund-raising party.

Wishing to remain active, the club has many activities planned, the least of which is printing the merit badge couselor list. A day hike to get new members involved with the group is scheduled and another road rally and a camping trip are in the planning stages. A major task slated for the near future is a clean-up day for the Cliffs. Scouting Service Club, with the aid of Conservation Club, Caving Club, and Laughing Bush, is sponsoring a "graffiti removal". Anyone interested in helping with this project is urged to contact one of the above organizations. The Scouting Service Club can be contacted by writing to P.O. Box 1041.

As an ongoing project, the club has sponsored an Explorer Post on campus. The main goal of the post is service.

All who are interested in scouting, scouts, or promoting the scouting spirit on campus and in the community are invited to join in on the meetings which are held every Tuesday night at nine o'clock in the Blue Room.

Additional expenses are limited to transportation and personal items (presents, souvenirs, socializing, etc.)

Brethren Colleges Abroad

This program is run by a twenty-year-old consortium of Brethren colleges and operates in France, Germany, Great Britain, and Spain. If your POE can't spare a full year away from JC you can leave for only a half year on BCA. Although you will be a member of the student body there will also be courses designed for BCA students. You do not have to be Brethren to participate and you will not even have to pay for transportation.

Independent Arrangements

These programs exist at two universities in England and periodically int he USSR. While the available majors are somewhat more limited this might be exactly what you want.

International Internships

A new option this year, it is available for this spring term in France, Germany, and Great Britain. Like the US internships you will have the opportunity to spend fifteen weeks in the real world test-driving your career plans for three units of credit. If this is for you, see Dr. Vocke immediately as schedule changes may be required.

If you are interested in any of these programs you can get more information from Dr. Vocke, Director of International Programs, Office of International Affairs, Founders.

Join JC's Rally

By Yvette Rotundo

Get ready for an exciting adventure with Juniata's very own Road Rally sponsored by the Auto Club. Imagine yourself behind the wheel, destination unknown, racing not for speed, but for time. The catch? "Sometines its easy to get lost, the directions can be confusing," says club leader Bob Terchak.

Planned with help from the Kiwanis Club, the course will remain unknown, even to the club's leaders, so don't get any ideas! Stopping at each check point, the driver must memorize a given set of directions, making sure to pay attention to minor details. Otherwise the unfortunate driver could find himself not only off track, but thrown in the "penalty box" for backtracking.

Participation in this challenging event costs members five dollars each and non-members eight dollars. The first five lucky winners will receive trophies and attend a party following the event.

Besides fun and games, the Auto Club will engage in some serious business, such as beginning a student car service. Anyone tired of getting ripped off by big name auto mechanics can get a first-hand approach. "People don't know who to trust," says club leader Ron Markey, "with this they can get two options." Crew members will service routine safety checks or give advice on major car problems. "This is something that is necesary," says Ron.

Other plans include a Spring Car Show. All students wishing to display their own or their parents' cars, any size, shape, or model, are invited to participate.

The club meets Thursday nights at 7:00 in A100. By the looks of last week's meeting there is a lot of student interest (male and female), but more people are needed. According to Ron, "We aren't chartered by the student government. We need as many people as we can get to get things done."

series of mimes in which the two battled to win chin up and drinking contests. Royer's face was then grease-painted by Arterberry, who concluded the enjoyable show by presenting Royer with a souvenir T-shirt emblazened with 'Honorary Fool' on the back.

The next in the 1984-85 Artist Series is the American Ballet Theater II on Monday, October 22.

"Bicycle Thief" will be this week's feature film sponsored by "The Language of Film" class. This 1949 Italian film is one of the most unforgettable Neorealist films which came out of Italy after W.W.II. It is sometines referred to as "Bicycle Thieves" because there is, ironically, a second thief. These films are shown at 7 p.m. every Tuesday in the Alumni Hall in the Brumbaugh Science Center. All Juniata Students and staff are invited to attend.

Annual Freeze Walk

Early registrations indicate a very good turn out for the second annual Huntingdon County Freeze Walk to be held on Saturday, October 13.

According to Debbie Justham of the Huntingdon County Campaign for a Nuclear Weapons Freeze, "The purpose of the walk is to demonstrate the support of the people of Huntingdon County for a verifiable nuclear weapons freeze between both the U.S. and the Soviet Union, and to raise funds to support that goal."

Walker registration will begin at 10 a.m. at the Huntingdon Area High School and finish on the lawn of the Stone Church of the Brethren, 17th and Moore Streets.

There will be a short rally and a prize drawing for pre-registered walkers a this time. A specially designed Freeze Walk T-shirt will be sent to all walkers who turn in $50 or more in pledges by November 15. A grand prize will be given to the walker with highest dollar amount in pledges.

People may pre-register and receive a sponsor pledge form by phoning Debbie Justham at 643-4774 or pick up the form at the Ellis Information Desk.

Dr. Livingston is an English teacher in Skokie, IL and sings professionally with the Chicago Symphony Orchestra Chorus. He has appeared at Juniata in a performance of "In Praise of God and Her Love," a sonnet sequence by Chad Walsh. His degrees include a B.A. in English from Juniata, an M.A. in music and a Ph.D. in interpretation from Northwestern University.

"This Man's Art" will include soliloquies and scenes from "Romeo and Juliet," "The Winter's Tale" and "A Midsummer Night's Dream." Dr. Livingston will sing songs from "The Tempest," "Cymbeline" and "Two Gentlemen of Verona." Mrs. Linton will play incidental music on piano and harpsichord and will be Dr. Livingston's accompanist.

The public is cordially invited to attend the Oct. 9 performance. There is no charge for admission.

I survived on little or no food and hardly any sleep. So how did I survive? Sangria! It is the best drink. The Spanish make it from cheap wine, fruit and other liquors. In Spain, I never drank the American favorites — coke or milk. Alcohol kept us happy for the duration of the ten-day trip.

Women's Cross Country Excels

by Sherri Reed

Women's Cross Country at Juniata has been off to a winning start for the fall 1984 season. Members have been practicing since August 30th when they arrived on campus for a week of pre-school year training camp, and their hard work has paid off in their numerous victories.

So far this season, the team of seven women has participated in one invitational and three meets. The invitational was held at Lebnon Valley where Juniata's lady runners placed fifth out of fifteen schools. The next two meets were just as successful with senior Terri Bollman taking first each time. Last Saturday Juniata ran against Swarthmore, Albright, and Franklin and Marshall, succumbing only to F and M. Scores were J.C. 19-Albright 42, J.C. 27-Swartmore 28, F and M 16-J.C. 47. F and M was predicted to be Juniata's most difficult opponent of the season. The team's next meet is October 6th at Dickinson where tough competition is also expected from a strong team. Four more meets will follow Dickinson, the next one at home is on October 17th against Lycoming. The season will be concluded with M.A.C.s at Annville, PA Saturday November 3rd.

Women runners this fall, under the direction of Coach Irene Chamberlain, are seniors Chris Schleiden and Terri Bollman, sophomores Sue Gill, Dee Gulden, and Kris Smith, and freshman Sue Gulla, Krista Jones, and Shelly Stepke. The team is expected to remain strong over the next few years, and Coach Chamberlain, now in her first year, is looking forward to retaining her position in the future.

I.M.'s Going Strong

By Farley Ferrante

The week of September 23 to September 30 witnessed an event-filled slate of intra-mural competitions. It saw the beginning of the softball and women's soccer competitions as well as the excitement of the A and B volleyball matches.

There were many thrilling games to behold in the Co-Rec Volleyball Division A with all twelve teams competing the past week. The results of these matches are: on September 23, "Red Herring" put away "Two-Thirds" 15-3, 15-11. "Edge of Night" edged out "South of Border" 9-15, 15-13, 11-8. "Laba Laba's" rained on "Arrowmen" 15-10, 15-3. "Sill's Studbuster" arrested "Vice Squad" 15-6, 15-17, 15-7 and "Contusions" gave fits to "South of Border" 15-9, 15-2. Play resumed on September 26 with "Edge of Night" again winning a close match, this time against "Sill's Studbuster" 15-12, 6-15, 15-11 and "Reverse Perspective" putting on the cuffs on "Vice Squad" 15-8, 15-3. Standings as of 9/30 in Co-Rec Volleyball Division A are: "Edge of Night", "Reverse Perspective", "Contusions", and "Red Herring" leading the pack with 2-0 records. "Arrowmen", "Laba Laba's", "Great Expectations", and "Sill's Studbuster" post 1-1 marks with "The Team to Beat", "Two-Thirds", "Vice Squad", and "South of Border" having 0-2 marks.

Even though Co-Rec Volleyball Division B has no overhand serving and no spiking, play is just as intense and exciting as Division A. This past week games testified to that fact with many thrilling, action packed matches contested.

On September 25 three matches were contested with "One More Time" rolling over "Crazy 8's" 15-6, 15-10. "Flash darted past "Merlin's Minstrels" 15-13, 15-2. "Druts" came from behind to stop "Southern Slammers" 13-15, 15-4, 15-5. Play continued on September 27 with four matches and on September 30

V-Ballers Shine In Chicago

By Joe Scialabba

The Juniata women's volleyball team finished another suceessful week with a 3-3 mark, raising their season record to 12-3.

The Indians, under Coach Larry Bock, made a very fine showing all week long, including a fine performance in the Illinois Benedictine tournament in Chicago on Friday and Saturday.

The tournament showcased some of the finest volleyball in the midwest, with our lady Indians one among many fine teams.

In pool play, the Indians knocked-off St. Xavier (Ill.) by scores of 15-2 and 15-6. Juniata then lost to Division I Marquette (Wis.) 14-16 and 8-15. The ladies then met the defending Division III national champs from Elmhurst (Ill.). Juniata responded with a come-from-behind win two games to one, 8-15, 16-14 and 15-13.

In the tourney quarter-finals the Indians met the hosts from Illinois Benedictine. Juniata lost two games to one to be eliminated. The game scores were 15-7; 1-15 and 15-17.

Juniata senior Ekanong Opanaykul was named to the all-tournament team.

Before the long trek to Chicago, the women had split two dual matches on Monday and Tuesday.

The Indians opened their home season with a win over Gettysburg on Monday evening. Juniata scored a 15-7, 7-15, 15-9 and 15-5 victory.

The next night the Indians traveled to Morgantown, WV to meet the Mountaineers of WVU. The Division I team was just too much for JC as the hosts won easily 2-15, 10-15 and 10-15.

The Indians now have this week to rest before hosting the Juniata Classic this Friday and Saturday.

Wing Lisa Dimarzio makes an offensive attack against Messiah. The Lady Indian lost Wednesday's game with a final score of 2-0.

Soccer Team Suffers 6-1 Defeat at York

By Maria Cavey

"Generally, we got abused, but made a good team effort," was Jon Gillette's comment on the Juniata soccer team's 6-1 loss at York College on Saturday, September 30. Down 2-1 at half-time, Tom Visosky scored the only goal for Juniata from an assist by Captain Sean Ruth. Mike Guifford as well had a nice game.

The first half went well both offensively and defensively. Said Dave Wright, "We controlled the first half but couldn't get anything going in the second." Indeed, it seemed that York was everywhere on the field, out-maneuvering the Juniata players.

Why did our players wear down so in the second half? Perhaps it was due to the loss of our sole upperclassmen sweeper.

Apparently, Barclay was struck by a Dickinson opponent and upon getting up from the ground discovered that both players had received red cards from the referees. Even more upsetting was the fact that these same refs were substitutes for the refs that had never arrived. Thus, the red cards penalized the Juniata soccer team not only for the remainder of that game but also for the following one, versus York.

Nevertheless, the soccer team invites the entire student body to enjoy a morning of soccer this Saturday when they play the Juniata Alumni at 10:30 am on the soccer field.

Full Back Kim Sutlef takes a free hit in the Messaih match. Unfortunately, the girls were unable to hold Messiah off.

Juniata V-Ball Classic Slated For This Weekend

The Fourth Annual Juniata College Volleyball Classic tournament will be held Oct. 5-6. Recognized as the top Division III tourney in the East, the Classic will feature 15 teams in the Friday-Saturday event.

All proceeds from the tournament will be donated to the American Cancer Society. The college has pledged $5,000 to this year's Huntingdon County cancer fund drive which is being chaired by Juniata President Dr. Frederick M. Binder.

The highly competitive field has been placed into three, five-team pools for preliminary play. Pool one consists of Millikin (IL), UNC-Greensboro, Cortland (NY) State, Shippenburg University, and Thiel. Pool two is comprised of Brockport (NY) State, Greensboro (NC) College, Grove City, Indiana Univeristy of Pennsylvania and Juniata. Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Nazareth (NY), Brooklyn (NY) College, Eastern Mennonite (VA) and Wilkes are in the pool three. All teams, except Shippensburg and I.U.P. which compete in Division II, are members of the NCAA Volleyball Division II.

Pool play begins Friday, Oct. 5 at 4:30 p.m. and continues at 10:00 a.m. Saturday, Oct. 6. The top four teams in each pool advance to the single-elimination playoffs which get underway at 3:15 p.m. The quarter-finals go at 4:30 p.m. with the semi-finals set for 6 p.m. the championship final match will be played in Memorial Gym at 7 p.m.

All tournament play will be held on four courts in Juniata's Kennedy Sports and Recreation Center.

Admission for the tournament is $5 for both days, $3 for one day. Admission for the final-only is $2 per person. Tickets will be available at the doors.

"Tussey" slammed "Southern Slammers" 15-4, 15-2. "Whipits" whipped up a win against "Drunken Slobs" 15-10, 12-15, 11-6. Standings as of September 30 for Division B are as follows: Posting 3-0 records are "Druts", "Something Good", and "Flash". Checking in at 2-1 are "Whipits" and "Comedy of Errors". Next at 1-2 are "Pass Auf" and "Drunken Slobs". At 1-1 can be found "Ball Busters", "Staff Infection", "Tussey", and "Last Round Up". Finally, having 0-3 marks are "Chug Board", "Southern Slammers", and "Merlin's Minstrels". "Acknee 1-2-3" and "Crazy 8's" round out the field with 0-2 marks.

Also gearing up into action this last week was men's softball. As expected, when it comes to softball, there were close games and there were some blowouts. Five games were contested this past week. LCFG's blasted Defenders 13-1, "Buster's" rebounded by squeezing "South" 13-11, LCGF's continued the winning way by edging out "Buster's" 11-8.

Second Half Blues Continue for Juniata Indians

By Joe Scialabba

Juniata's second-half blues continued last Saturday as Albright came back from a 10-0 halftime deficit to beat the Indians, 13-10 at College Field.

The Tribe lost their fourth straight contest and third consecutive Middle Atlantic Conference game. The Lions are 1-2 overall and in the MAC.

The visitors used freshman tailback Matt Pammer to the fullest as the MAC's leading rusher gained 109 yards on 28 carries. Pammer scored one 43-yard scamper in the third quarter and capped the winning 11-play, 86-yard TD drive on a 5-yard run with just :19 seconds left in the game.

Juniata was in position to clinch their first victory before Albright's game-winning match. The Indians, clinging to a 10-7 advantage, traveled from their own 20 yard line to the Lion 14 before Mike Culver's fourth-down pass missed Dave Murphy. The Tribe ran 19 plays and gained five first downs in the over eight-minute exodus but came-away empty with just under two minutes remaining.

"Albright made an outstanding drive to win the game," said Juniata Head Coach Rob Ash. "They worked for the score and were patient, mixing the run and pass well. The key play was the long pass on the first play."

Quarterback Stan Bergman hit Bob Wunsch with a 44-yard pass down the left sideline to start the Lions on their way. Despite good coverage, Wunsch came back to grab the floater and put Albright at the Indian 42.

The winners made three more first downs as Bergman completed two more passes and Pammer carried five times with the Lions working the sidelines to stop the clock. Pammer scored the game-winner on his fifth tote, taking the third-and-goal option pitch in from the five.

When asked about the Indians failure to convert after their long march Ash was very clear. "I thought we could punch-it in and win the game. If we had scored a touchdown it would've been over."

"On the fourth-down play (at the 14) we really just wanted to get the first down. The play was designed to have QB Culver sprint-out and hit Murphy, coming back towards the line of scrimmage after sprinting to the end zone. We wanted to get the first down and then try to run-out the clock, or score to win."

The Indians chose not to kick a field goal and possibly gain a 13-7 lead. "I had a strong feeling they (Albright) would play for win no matter if we made a field goal or not. So, either way a touchdown and extra point would have beaten us," explained Ash. "The fact we blocked their extra point isn't important. The only way we could have assured a win was by scoring a touchdown or running out the clock."

The Tribe did neither and Albright came back to win the game with their most impressive drive of the season.

"We didn't hold them on that last drive," responded Ash, "but we sure had plenty of opportunities to take advantage of the great game our defense played to that point. If we would've scored when we had the chance throughout the game that last drive would've been meaningless. We had good balance on offense but didn't score the points we shoud have."

Juniata had more than the final drive chance to score. The Indians were extremely impressive in the first half, outgaining Albright 226 to 33 yards, but could only cash-in for a Mike Schaffner 37-yard field goal in the first quarter and a Dave Bates 2-yard run just 22 seconds before halftime. Both scores followed 60-yard drives, in 13 and 6 plays, respectively.

The Indians hurt themselves with key penalties and three second-quarter turnovers on successive possessions.

First, it was second-and-goal at the AC 7 when an illegal motion flag pushed the Indians back five yards. On the next play Culver was intercepted on a tipped-pass in the end zone by Lion safety Bob Kimball.

The next possession had Juniata first-and-twenty, thanks to a holding penalty, at the Albright 44 yard line. A fumble ended this move into enemy territory with another interception by Kimball stopping the next Tribe series.

In the third quarter, Juniata had a 63-yard pass from Culver-to-Murphy called back due to another illegal motion penalty. The apparent touchdown just added to the Indian list of mistakes in the loss.

"We controlled the ball and did a lot of good things," noted Ash. "We just seem to find a new way to lose every week."

"I was very happy with the way Rick Bouch (a freshman) played at halfback and Bob Crossey and Lou Komer played a nice game for us on defense, both making their first start."

Bouch led the JC ground attack with 61 yards on 24 tries while Crossey had a team-high 11 tackles.

World News Update

by Cindy Duick

LOUISVILLE, Ky.—President Reagan and Walter F. Mondale are both claiming victory after Sunday night's first Presidential debate of 1984. The actual results will not be tallied for several days, according to campaign strategists. "The critical period is 72 to 96 hours after the debate" for assessing whether the contest has become closer, states Peter D. Hart, poll taker for Mr. Mondale. He also explains that despite Mr. Reagan's large advantage in the polls "movable voters," who are open to influence by broadcasts of the debates, account for about half of his support.

HOUSTON—The space shuttle Challenger crew is now "back in business" according to Houston flight director T. Cleon Lacefield. The crew successfully maneuvered a crippled communications antenna to point at a small satellite 22,000 miles overhead, saving hours of data from being lost. The maneuver was completed Sunday on the third day of the eight-day mission. With other minor, although "vexing", problems behind them the crew can now turn towards their observations of earth and its environment.

JERUSALEM—Israel will consider withdrawing its troops from Lebanon if the Syrians pledge in a "non-written" committment to maintain its forces positions and prevent Palestinian guerilla infiltration southward. These proposals were outlined in a new set of terms offered by the Israelis in which they no longer demand the Syrian withdrawal from Lebanon, a formal signed accord, or that they receive concessions from the Lebanese government. But instead they would insist on expanded deployment of United Nations forces in Southern Lebanon and a role for the South Lebanese Army, an Israeli-backed militia, in exchange for a pull-out.

Israeli officials explained the new attempt at accord Sunday, on the eve of Prime Minister Shimon Peres visit to Washington.

Student Leaders Confer on New Program Ideas

By Carol Connell

Designed to train students in authority positions, the Student Leadership Development Committee was formed this year. Through a variety of seminars, mixers, workshops and an exchange program, the organization seeks to encourage growth and offer new experiences to student leaders.

The Committee started its program on October 2, with the Monthly Leadership Module, dealing with Motivation. This aspect of the program, which will confront such issues as Assertiveness Training, Stress Management and Fund Raising, was developed to refine those skills deemed necessary to be a successful leader.

Continuing with a program addressing life in the residence halls, the Committee held a session entitles, "Team Building and Networking" on October 8. Students attending this set of meetings, which are held in the Faculty Lounge on Monday nights at 8 p.m., will be awarded with a Certificate of Achievement.

Also meeting this week was the Officer's Club branch of the Student Leadership Development Program. Planned for those holding specific titles within clubs, this group meets Wednesdays in Lesher's Carpeted Lounge at 3 p.m. Discussing how to conduct effective meetings, goal setting and evaluation as well as time management, the Officers' Club, which will meet through December, also awards the members with Certificates of Achievement.

The upcoming event in the Student Leadership Development Program, a Leadership Mixer, will be held in Shoemaker Galleries on Friday, October 12. This six part program is to give student leaders an opportunity to speak with campus administrators in a casual setting in order to discuss various aspects of the program.

Four additional programs slated to begin after the new year, include a special series on women in leadership roles. Also, a program for freshmen who wish to become leaders in the college community will be offered.

Winter Term also holds an opportunity for students to attend an all-day Motivational Leadership Training Session with Matt Weinstein, the leader of Playfair. Furthermore, the Student Leadership Development Committee is sponsoring a Leadership Exchange program planned for April 20. This program will allow a small number of J.C. student leaders to meet and share experiences with their counterparts at another college.

In addition, the Student Service Staff of the Leadership Development Program is offering individual leadership the chance to receive guidance throughout the year. This Consultation Service will help student leaders address the specific needs of their group that may not have been dealt with in another program.

The next meeting of the Student Leadership Development Committee will be for the Officers' Club on October 17 in Lesher's Carpeted lounge at 3 p.m.; the topic will be "How to Conduct Effective Meetings."

Binder's Grinders Return

By Ann Cameron

It's Back! Binder's Grinders has returned to Juniata College. Now you can have a freshly made hoagie delivered to your door.

Binder's Grinders was originally started by the Small Business Management class two years ago. Members of the class handled all aspects of the business and their operation was quite successful. This year Binder's Grinders is managed by JEC, the Juniata Executive Club. Operating a small business will provide an opportunity for JEC members to practice the business skills they learn in the classroom.

"We feel the practical experience will be invaluable," says JEC president Rob Yelnosky. JEC's finance and accounting committee will handle the accounting and bookkeeping. The marketing committee will promote Binder's Grinders, and the general management committee will manage the operation. Binder's Grinders will be staffed by JEC and Chem club members. Profits will be split between the two groups and will help finance field trips, speakers, and other club activities. The added income will enable the clubs to improve their programs.

One of the factors that contributed to the previous success of Binder's Grinders was the supplies used to make the subs. JEC hopes to duplicate that high quality and great taste by using the same materials. Lee's Distributors of Altoona is again providing the meat, cheese, rolls and stuffings.

Binder's Grinders is operating out of the Juniatian office in Ellis Hall. It will be open Sunday through Thursday from 8 p.m. until 11 p.m. Italian subs cost just $2.50 and Ham and Cheese subs are $2.25. Phone 643-4623 to order. On campus delivery is included. Why not sink your teeth into a Binder's Grinder tonight?

Juniata Campus: On the dark side. . .

Dim and sparse lighting on all sides of Juniata's Campus once again leaves students in the dark as they carry on their nightly social and study activities. From what the Juniatian can see, there is absolutely no excuse for this darkness.

There can be no dispute over the lighting on the path to East Houses: it's inadequate. From the dugout to the door of Miller tower, the path is dark and eerie, not to mention that it's overshadowed by trees and bushes. The two light posts that once stood by the bridge have been knocked down and never replaced. The path from Good Hall to South is not much better. Sure the lights around Founders' Hall are bright, but go much past that and you'll find that the path to Lesher and South is as dark as it could be. Furthermore, Pink Palace and Swigart Hall sidewalks are also scarcely lit up.

No doubt the Juniatian is also in the dark as to why this lighting shortage has to occur, particularly when such a large percentage of the campus is out at night. Again, this puts ths students in a dangerous position — a position that isn't necessary in the least.

There is more than enough means for lighting improvement on campus. Of course, the administration has the primary responsibility for student safety. However, the Student Affairs Council, the Student Concerns Committee, Student Government, and the Residential Life Committee all have the resources to improve the situation. The Juniatian believes they have the responsibility to correct it, too.

The Juniata campus has stood in the dark too long. It's about time somebody shed some light on the subject, before the already dangerous situation escalates.

Dear Editor

I would like to take this opportunity to comment on my own personal, as well as the entire Dance Committee's, concern over this past weekend's Homecoming Dance. First, the committee expresses its deepest regrets for the quality and performance of the band Tiffony and apologizes to those students and alumni who attended the dance. Secondly, the Dance Committe disclaims all responsibility for the booking of Tiffony for the Homecoming Dance. Our role in the dance was solely logistical.

I feel it is important that the Juniata campus understands that the Dance Committee was responsible only for the presentation of the dance. Selection of the band was made by the Homecoming Committee. It is my own persoanl feeling that this was done in a very irresponsible way by a committee that did not have the information or access to the information necessary to choose a quality band that fits the musical interests of this campus. It is my understanding that selection of the band was made on the basis of a recommendation from an alumni. This took place without seeing a play list, hearing a tape or actually seeing the band in person.

I feel that by not looking into these things the Homecoming Committe showed poor judgement and a lack of consideration for what type of music the students want to hear. Dance Committee feels this should be of prime importance in the choice of a band. We have access to the information necessary to fulfill these needs and it is our feeling that the choice of a band should have been left up to us. It is our feeling that some simple cooperation from the Homecoming Committee and some willingness to allow us to do our job properly would have prevented this situation.

As it occured, the Homecoming Committee acquired a band behind our backs and then expected Dance Committe to foot the bill and do the work of running the dance. I feel this was unfair to our members as well as the people who attended the dance. We were forced to advertise and promote a band that we knew nothing about. Again my apologies go out to anyone who was misled by advertising and especially to V-103 who stuck their neck out to advertise blindly. This should never have had to happen.

I hope that this unfortunate incident will not be perceived as a reflection on the Dance Committee and that students will not allow this to discourage them from attending future Dance Committee events. We have a fine committee and the ability to put on a good dance if allowed to do our job properly.

I have given my apologies and stated my concerns but as noted, I am apologizing for a situation that was out of my control. Let's hope that in future special events, special committees will cooperate with other committees on campus so that Juniata's students are given the best events possible. I also hope that we all receive an apology from where it really should come, the Homecoming Committee.

Sincerely,
Jeff Nicholas
(Dance Committee chairman)

Dear Editors,

I'm writing in response and disgust to the fact that, after the Homecoming Committee so graciously arranged for a band, using the Dance Committee's funds, only two of the members were present to help with such things as set-up, clean-up and monitoring duties.

I was given a list of names of Homecoming Committee members, including the name of the chairperson, whom I was told were to be put on the monitoring schedule. I used the names to fill in the schedule after the Dance Commit-

by Linda Ramsay

Muddy Run ("you know the one") by East Houses is deep and dark now. Last week it flowed by East, behind the baseball field and towards Weis Market pretty smoothly. Continuation of the fifth week of classes placed most Juniata students into the same flow as the stream, slow and continuous.

But then came Homecoming Weekend with a barage of new (for the freshmen) or some vaguely familiar faces and plenty of activity. A lot of old feet stomped over "the run" this past weekend, maybe it could even be said they "muddied" the run (but that's in the past).

Now, instead of old Chevy station wagons handed down from their parents, alumni invaded the campus in red Camaro's and Mercedes. I can't wait until next year when I cruise up through Huntingdon in my parents bomber (or on second thought, maybe I'll rent a real beauty and fool everyone but myself).

After graduating from prestigious Juniata College in the spring, what little else could I expect (or could be expected of me) than to land a $25,000 a year starting salary in business or continue my pre-professional education in the sciences at grad school. No low standards for Juniata graduates —nothing but the best. . .

But my program of emphasis isn't in business or science. Yes, an honest to goodness liberal arts major. I'll elaborate with a little expansion technique I picked up in one of my expressive writing courses and call it communications and government with a secondary emphasis in technical writing.

As I glanced through one of the many college catalogues I recieved as a prospective freshman, I noticed Juniata College particularly because of its program of

In terms of road trips, Raystown Lake is the singularly most significant land feature in Huntingdon County, or most of south-central Pennsylvania, for that matter. But with a lake that is 30 miles long, with something like 120 miles of shoreline and waters and lands totaling 29,000 acres, I must necessarily concentrate on small areas of the lake in a number of columns.

The three closest access routes to Raystown Lake should be familiar to the majority of the Juniata College student body, especially the upper-classmen. These three roads have provided an easy escape to Lake Raystown more times that I can count, on road trips taken in every weather condition, season, day of the week, or time of day or night. The roads, which are actually two roads which diverge off the main road leading to Raystown Dam, are accessible by taking the Fourth Street Bridge road out to Rt. 22, bearing left (east), and taking the first right a third of a mile down the road. The main points of interest here are Snyder's Run boat launch, Ridenour Overlook, and, of course, the dam itself.

Snyder's Run provides excellent access to the lake for fishing or recreation, provided you have a trailer and a boat, (of which I have neither). It is an interesting and attractive road, though strictly utilitarian.

The road to Ridenour Overlook can only be described as sheer fun, as it winds steeply up and over the stream-cut, gracefully sculptured hills of Allegripis Ridge. There is the inevitable reward at the top, not only on Ridenour Overlook, with its sweeping view of the whole dam and spillway project, but also Hawn's Overlook, reachable along a pleasant, flat trail adjacent to Ridenour and offering a magnificent full-blown view of the lake and the massive expanse of Terrace Mountain, over 1,800 feet high at the apex of the ridge.

The road to the dam follows the Raystown Branch of the Juniata River, and is an unmitigated pleasure to drive or cycle upon. The road first follows the river's floodplain, wedged up between the cornfields planted there or the river itself, and the precipitous, tilted rock outcrops of the base of Allegripis Ridge. At the point where the Raystown Branch joins the main river, there is a Pennsylvania Fish Commission Access Area, and the road turns abruptly to the right before becoming unpaved and beginning its sinuous journey along four wide meanders of the stream, finally arriving at the dam spillway. The dam speaks for itself; 225 feet high, 1,700 feet across, with a base of 1,550 feet, complete with a visitor's pavillion at the top, it attests further to the unquestionable building prowess of the Army Corps of Engineers.

The scenery along the tract of road leading to the dam is uncommonly alluring, with craggy, overgrown outcrops of rock interspersed with open, rolling fields. Something not to be missed if you have four-wheel drive.

emphasis idea and the opportunity to explore various majors. I followed the advice of the registrar and proved that you can come to Juniata with an exploratory POE, take every "intro" course available in your first two years at Juniata and still complete some sort of major program in order to graduate after four years. (There's definitely something to be said for small schools versus the biggies where it's all over for you in you're first year of college as far as graduating on time if you're not taking courses in your chosen field. Alternatives: hang tough through summer school or check in for a fifth year at the school.)

So now that I've come so close to making it through the system, I guess the real test comes a year from now at Homecoming. Stay tuned for my arrival on campus in my rented convertible Camaro and a case of Heineken Dark in the trunk.

tee members were all assigned. To my disappointment, none of those people showed up to monitor. However, two Homecoming Committee members not on the list were there. I was even told by a Dance Committee member that she thought that the Homecomoing chairperson had not informed these people that they were to monitor at the dance. I was under the impression that the Homecoming Committee was informed and willing to help.

In closing, I would like to say that because of this "misunderstanding," some of the Dance Committee members were required to take double and even triple monitoring shifts. I sincerely hope that the Homecoming Committee intends to formally apologize to the Dance Committee. It was a job well done despite these shortcomings. Thanks for nothing.

Sincerely,
Esther M. Compher
Chairman of Monitoring Staff
Centerboard Dance Committee

Dear Editor,

I realize that the Homecoming Dance this past Saturday night was a disappointment for many people. The band, as it turned out, was not an appropriate type of band to play on Juniata's campus. In my inexperience, I made the arrangements with the band "Tiffony" to play in the gym instead of allowing the Dance Committee to find a band which perhaps may have been more appreciated by the students. I would like to take this opportunity to apologize to all those who attended the dance for the inconvenience and to the Dance Committee for all the problems I have caused them, If anyone has any complaints about this past weekend's dance, I would appreciate it if they would please direct them to me rather than the Dance Committee. Thank you.

Respectfully Submitted,

The new album by Heaven 17, "How Men Are" is a new wave album in the order of Duran Duran. The lyrics are pieces of vague poetry that merely suggest what the songs are about. This may be a device to keep the pieces from being trite where they otherwise might be. Excepting for the words, most of the songs sound the same.

The first piece, "Five Minutes 'Till Midnight", was hard to make sense of the first time I heard it. It had a strong beat in a new wave manner.

"Sunset Now" shared the previous song's major characterisitcs. However, it did add some fairly nice use of harmony.

Behind its vagueness "This Is Mine" is merely a song about a man wanting his lover back (a pretty standard theme for pop music). This song had a trumpet solo, which added musical interest, and some good use of harmony.

The fourth cut from this album, "The Fuse", may be seen as a song about winning. This song shares the characteristic strong beat with all of the previous songs.

"Shame Is On The Rocks" offers sound advice. Low self-esteem or being ashamed, ruins you. People need "faith" in themselves. It too shares the aforesaid characteristic steady beat.

"The Skin I'm In", the first cut from the second side, had a philosophical and slightly disparaging tone. It told of the problem of being trapped inside one body, and having acquired a certain reputation that is inescapable.

"Flamedown" has a theme that is much the same as "This Is Mine". It tells of a man trying to rekindle a relationship. This piece is nice musically because of the trumpet solo, but still has the same steady beat as the rest of the songs.

The stupidity of consigning persons to certain reputations is pointed out along with the fact that we all have to deal with it and should help each other, in "Reputation".

"And That's No Lie" tells of a man having to deal with the truth that his girlfriend has left him. Musically this is one of the better pieces. It has a good accoustic guitar part and a good base line for part of the song. Towards the end of the song there's a piano part and some good use of harmony.

Heaven 17 as a whole are less creative than Duran Duran (whose style they copy), though there are good musical moments. They carried a sameness throughout their songs (such as their steady beat). The most uninspired thing about this record was Glen Gregory's vocal performance; he was just singing words. I personally would not put this album into my collection (though maybe you'd enjoy it) because I would get tired of it after a while.

by David Orth Moore

The world is dangerously close to protectionism. As such, we stand to lose much of the benefit of the open world trading system which this country has worked so hard to foster. At a time when unemployment is still relatively high, and the manufacturing industry is constantly making concessions to the service oriented industries, it is quite understandable that Americans are concerned about imports, and these effects in the immediate future. Indeed, partly due to the enormous budget deficit, America is finding it hard to export its many products because these goods are over-priced on the world-market. This is partially the result of our superficially strong currency abroad. We are, however, importing loads of foreign goods because these goods are cheap. This in effect heightens our budget deficit, and instills fears which cry for protectionism. But beware, protectionism breeds hostility over national interest; certainly part of the cause which exacerbated the 1930's depression and World War II.

Protectionism can be explained as a burden of hidden tax on the consumer. Furthermore, protectionism does not create a healthy economic climate for any country; The world's economies are, and will remain interdependent. And protectionism by way of subsidizing industries will not create success in the long term. Surely, then, most people agree that free trade is beneficial, and preferred over protectionism since it increases competition to improve quality, reduce inflation, increase production and create more jobs.

Free trade must be a two-way street. We cannot carp at foreign barriers while we intransigently ignore our own. Our objective should be one which lowers these barriers, and opens markets. The need for reciprocity should be high on the agenda despite a trade deficit with other nations.

Mr. Reagan has been anything but clear on his policy on trade. While Mr. Reagan has been a welcome bludgeon against unions, he has similarly asked for voluntary restraint on Japanese cars. Additionally, Mr. Reagan has supported the textile workers and their industry by issuing higher quotas on foreign imports.

To make matters worse, Mr. Reagan has pledged support to the agricultural sector of our economy. Yet, he rejected the steel industries cry for protection against lower cost Japanese steel. Instead of separating the government from the "free market system", as he said in his campaign promises of 1980, many argue that government has increased its role in the economy due to the insanely large budget deficits.

The Democratic Party has traditionally been a supporter of the large unions of this country. Indeed, Mr. Mondale has received much support from these voting blocks. However, it would be foolish to assume that such support means a shift back to the inflation riddled 1970's. Since their humiliating defeat in the 1980 election, the Democrats have changed their stance on many issues, and seem to be far more pragmatic than the current administration when matters such as the budget deficit arise.

If trends continue in our economy, with continued deficits and an ailing balance of trade, protectionist cries will grow louder. It is of crucial importance, then, that our next President take a long-term look at the troubles of modern capitalism, instead of relying on quick-fix solutions which glamorize our economic recovery despite a general worldwide recession.

Next week: Poverty in America.

On the Health Line. . .

Seatbelts and safety seats — they're a big issue right now. In 1978, Tennessee was the only state with any type of child restraint laws. Today, over two-thirds of the states have some type of safety seat belt laws for children.

Maybe as students at Juniata, the idea of "buckling up baby" isn't too crucial right now. But some day it will be. Someday most students will be parents; parents who make sure their children eat well, have all their shots and everything else they need to be safe and healthy. Everything except child restraint seats.

Consider these facts:

*A fifteen pound baby sitting in an adult's lap in a car traveling only 20 miles per hour will be thrown with a force of 300 pounds into the dashboard or windshield. If the parent is unrestrained, the child is in even greater danger, for he can be crushed by the parent.

*More children under five are killed in car accidents than from any other cause.

*Each year in this country, tens of thousands of children are injured and over a thousand die in traffic accidents.

*90 percent of all children are not properly "buckled up" when riding in a car.

*13 percent of adults use seat belts.

*Child restraints can reduce an infant's chances of being killed in a car wreck by over 90

Homecoming Highlights Captured

by Fran Wippel

This year's homecoming celebration began heartily on Friday afternoon with the Almost Anything Goes competition and continued to go strong until Saturday night.

The bizarre events of the competition between the dorms included a bat spin, caterpillar walk, and three-legged race. The team of Sherwood-South edged out Terrace to win the competition. Other attractions Friday included the Juniata Volleyball Classic, the well-attended pep ralley on Detwiler Plaza, and the Coffeehouse with the Jim Corr Irish band.

Saturday opened with the Homecoming parade welcoming the alumni back to Juniata. The junior class captured the award for the best float by building up the "Around the World" theme with "Athletes of the World Unite" accompanied by the Olympic insignia.

Peggy Evans was crowned Homecoming Queen at halftime of Saturday's football game in which Juniata defeated Western Maryland. Evans was joined by the Homecoming court of Lisa Baer and Mary Joe Sagan, freshmen; Jill Wineka, sophomore; Lisa Smoker, junior; and Sue Martin, senior.

The newly crowned Homecoming Queen helped the volleyball team to victory in the Juniata Classic by scoring 14 consecutive points in the deciding game of the finals against Shippensburg.

Saturday night's Homecoming Dance was not as successful as expected. Despite this disappointment, however, Homecoming '84 proved to be an enjoyable weekend.

CCT Program Addresses Leadership Development

by Steve Creps

Developing leadership skills and promoting personal growth are two of the goals of the Co-Curricular Transcript (CCT) program. In the first part of this series we briefly looked at the development, goals, and mechanics of the CCT. In this part we will take a closer look at goals 1-3 of the program, which deal with personal growth and leadership development.

The first of the goals is perhaps the most important of the six. (To approach co-curricular learning more systematically.) It is the basic goal of the CCT program. The rest of the goals are simply aimed at providing this systematic approach.

Students who participate in the program complete forms which describe the activities in which they have participated, and the responsibilities which they have fulfilled. There is also a space on the form for evaluation by a faculty or administration member. This provides better verification of student activities than a simple listing of activities.

The second goal deals with personal growth. (To offer more personal growth opportunities in residence halls.) This goal deals with many of the social problems which arise in the residence halls.

Arnold Tilden, Dean of Student Services, explains the reasoning behind this goal: "Students come to college and are put into situtations where they are sharing rooms and face many social adjustments. They have more freedom than ever to make choices in value-related situations. They make decisions on sex, alcohol, drugs, and assertiveness. They are growing...

"Lot's of things happen when you put 1100 people together. What we try to do is design programs to help students deal with situations. Programs are offered to the Residential Staff, which help students confront the changes they are facing... We want to help students understand social problems such as stress, study skills, suicide, alcohol and drug use, and relationships... By doing this, we hope to facilitate growth in residence halls."

Most of the residence hall programs are aimed at easing the problems which arise in the college student's life. Besides residence hall programs, seminars such as the alcohol-education fair, career planning, and placement seminars are included in this program.

Many students participate in these programs. This participation can be recorded and verified as a learning experience on the CCT. Many of these seminars may enhance placement with a corporation, or in a graduate or professional school.

Goal three deals with the development of leadership skills. (To offer greater opportunity for development of leadership skills outside the classroom.) "Leadership is a goal that students list as an important part of college learning," comments Dean Tilden. "Our mission is to prepare students for a useful occupational life, which precludes leaderhip abilities. We would also like our students to be prepared to assume leadership positions in their communities."

Although some learning always occurs when leading a group, Dean Tilden points out that the CCT program makes this learning more structured. He also adds, "These programs are not meant to be limited to officers and elected leaders. They are for anyone who is interested."

The fulfillment of the leadership development goal has been accomplished through a program developed by the Student Services staff and the Student Leadership Development Committee. There are a number of different components of the Leadership Development Program, as there is a diverse population of leaders.

The Monthly Leadership Modules are designed for the development of each student's leadership skills. These sessions are held monthly in South Carpeted Lounge at 7:30. Topics for this year are: Oct. 2 —Motivation; Nov. 6 — Delegation; Dec. 4 —Creative Fund Raising; Jan. 8 —Stress Management; Feb. 5 — Elements of Cooperative Group Work; March 5 — Assertiveness Training/Confrontation Skills; Apr. 2 — Situational Leadership; and May 7 — Knowing Oneself; Personality Inventory.

Throughout the year, the Student Leadership Development Committee will hold Leadership Mixers. These mixers, to be enjoyed by student leaders and campus administrators, have been organized to offer the opportunity for informal interaction and discussion of agenda items.

This winter there will be a Leadership Series for Women and a Motivational Leadership Training Seminar.

Juniata Introduces Exchange Students

by David Orth Moore

Juniata's Exchange Program is pleased to introduce the foreign students studying here on campus. Once again the college has engineered a fine exchange program to attract several European schools to participate in this outstanding program. The college not only would like to recognize and welcome the foreign students, but also congratulate those Juniatians who are studying abroad now. There are immense opportunities right here on our little campus; one of which is the chance to study in another country, and still maintain progress towards your degree at Juniata.

By introducing the foreign students in this article, Juniata students will hopefully approach these foreigners to pose questions, talk about cultural differences, and explore another aspect of mankind. In total, 17 students came from Britain, France, Germany, and Switzerland.

From England are Siân Biddyr (401 Flory), Jayne Richards (401 Flory), Simon Vaughan (117 Sherwood), Anne Gogarty (407 Miller), Alison MacNish (106 Lesher), William Thompson (405 Long), and Julia Thomson (307 Miller). From France are Sophie Delafosse (212 Lesher), Marie-Pierre Kajzowski (230 Tussey), and Gery Pourbaix (118 Sherwood). From Germany comes Annette Brieger (#9 Hess), Gabriele Stegers (202 South), Renate Kalthoff (319 Northwest), Roland Kratz (103 Cloister), Sibylle Muench (234 South), Manfred Schikore (315 Sherwood), and from Switzerland is Maria Burk (204 South).

Rocky Horror Picture Coming To Oller Hall

by Lauralee Snyder

This Friday, October 12, The Rocky Horror Picture Show will be shown in Oller Hall at 7:30 p.m.

The movie could be described as a "bizare musical." The story revolves around a couple, Brad and Janet, who accidently encounter alien transvestites living on earth. After encountering these aliens and socializing with them, they discover that their mission here on earth has been to build a man. The antic doesn't stop there. Brad and Janet find themselves faced with many crazy dilemmas throughout the film.

The popularity of this movie does not necessarily come from its plot and contents, but from the audience participation that is required by the film. It has been tradition for audiences from all over the country to come to the theatre in costume, mimmick the characters, answer questions asked by the narrator of the movie, throw various objects, dance in the aisles, and just all-around act crazy!

Rocky Horror is not just a movie that you go to the theater to watch — it's an experience.

Dear Editor,

In response to Mr. Tom Cancelmo's recent letter, the Computer Society did not "charge $2.00 fully knowing that the beverages were gone" at the lounge party held several weeks ago. Our fundraising "tactics" were perfectly legitimate and followed the "campus norm." No one was charged admission once the beverages were exhausted. It is unfortunate that some people may have payed immediately before the beverages were gone thus not receiving any. Instead of voicing his opinion to the Juniatian, why didn't Mr. Cancelmo return to the people manning the door and voice his opinion there? We would have gladly returned his money.

SS Staff Alterations Underway

by Avril Opinante

There will be a reorganization of the Student Services staff effective October 15. Mr. Jack Linetty, who is now the Director of Housing, will be promoted to replace Bill Quinlan as Director of the Physical Plant. Mr. Linetty will then be part of the Financial Affiars staff. The Security department will continue to report to Mr. Linetty. Ms. Julie Keehner, who is now Assistant Dean of Residential Life, will become Director of Residential Life, and will take charge of Mr. Linetty's former duties relating to housing.

Randy Deike, who was formerly with Africa Engineers, will become the Assistant to the Director of Residential Life. Under this new organization, Mr. Deike will report to Ms. Keehner, and Ms. Keehner will continue to report to Mr. Arnold Tilden, the Dean of Student Services. Dr. Tilden said that the staff is pleased with the promotions and is optimistic that they can provide the same high-quality program under different personnel.

Hartslog Festivities Announced

by Betsy Halsey

Tired of the same old Saturday activities? Looking for something different and exciting to do? Then you should join the Hartslog Heritage Museum at their annual harvest festival; Hartslog Day.

On this Saturday morning Main Street in Alexandria will be closed. Over 100 exhibits will be opening up, and old-time crafts and fresh home made food will be sold.

If you're an early riser you might want to make it down to the pancake and sausage breakfast at the Methodist Church between 9-11am. If that's too early for you, you can still get a good meal at the Juniata Valley Lions' Chicken Barbecue at the Fire Hall between 11 a.m.-4 p.m. (Advanced Ticket Sales are requested for this event and can be obtained from Elwood Hunter, 669-9448 or Jesse Shriner, 669-9117).

Highlights of the afternoon activities will include an Oktoberfest at the Tavern, an event Juniata students will not want to miss, and music all afternoon at the Museum Bandstand. There will be a harmonica and an accordian player as well as some Blue Grass and Gospel Music.

Evening entertainment will begin at five with the band "Whiskers and Lace" or "The Little German Band".

For a schedule of the days events stop by the bookstore for a pamphlet.

These facts and figures are tragic. Yet even more tragic is the fact that the deaths, the injuries, the pain could have been avoided with the use of safety belts.

These include the KISS (Keep Infants Safely Seated) program sponsored by the American Red Cross and the community-sponsored loan programs to provide safety seats on a temporary basis to new parents.

Father Dave Arsenault Added to J.C. Ministry

by Sherri Reed

The beginning of the 1984-85 school year brought an addition to Juniata's campus ministry, Father Dave Arsenault. Before coming to Juniata, Father Dave was the associate pastor of St. Joseph's Church in Renova, Pa. Here on campus, his main concern is meeting the needs of catholic students and all others who seek guidance. Father Dave is usually available for individual and group meetings on Tuesdays and Thursdays from 10 a.m. to 12 p.m. and 1 p.m. to 3 p.m. He also holds weekly Sunday evening masses at 6:30 in Ellis Ballroom.

Since arriving at Juniata, Father Dave has been working with Rev. Andrew Murray on several upcoming projects. A joint Parents' Weekend All Campus Worship service has been planned for 10:30 a.m. Sunday October 28th. A similar Christmas program is scheduled for December 16th, as is an Advent penance service for December 17th; this will be a chance to "go to confession for Christmas". Both December dates are tentative.

Father Dave believes Juniata possesses high quality students and is very pleased with the number of volunteers he has received for liturgical ministry, which includes ushering, scripture reading, and helping with communion during masses. A folk choir with pianists and guitarists has also been started. Anyone wishing to join is welcomed to attend rehearsals Tuesday evenings at 8:30 in Ellis Ballroom. Father Dave hopes to develop a better sense of community among Catholics at Juniata and to encourage catholic ideals so that the religion and its traditions become more clearly understood. With these future goals in mind, Father Dave is looking forward to a successful year at Juniata.

"Brother Sun Sister Moon," the next in the series of films presented by the Language of Film class, will be shown on Tuesday, October 16 at 7 p.m. in A100 (Alumni Hall). This Italian film, produced in 1973 by Franco Zefferelli, is a favorite of the Counter-Culture of the 70's. It is based on the lives of Francis of Assisi and Sister Clare and makes chastity and voluntary poverty exciting. All films are open to Juniata staff and students at no charge. The music is by Donovan. Everyone is welcome.

Tribe Shuts Out Western Maryland

by Joe Scialabba

Balance is what Juniata Head Coach Rob Ash has been looking for all season and on Homecoming Saturday his 1984 Indians distributed their weight well enough to level any scale.

The Tribe used a solid run-pass mix on offense with a rock-hard defensive effort to shutout Western Maryland 10-0 in a non-conference game.

The win was the first after four consecutive losses for Juniata. The Green Terrors fell to 1-3.

The Indians have been winning the statistics consistently this season but didn't make it work on the scoreboard until this past week.

"It was great for our kids," said Ash. "We needed a win and got what we've been hoping for all year. We really deserved to win. Our defense really came through for us."

While the Tribe offense was sufficient (272 yards) it was the defense that shined, holding the visitors to only 135 yards total offense and a mere 41 yards in the first half. The strong defensive effort in the first thirty minutes allowed the Juniata offense to get all the points it needed.

The Indians stopped WMC on the first possession of the game and an 18-yard punt set-up the offense at the Terror 38 yard line. An eight-play drive finished when Mike Schaffner hit a 20 yard field goal less than five minutes into the game. That was really all Juniata needed.

The Terrors entered Juniata territory only once in the first half as they reached the JC 22 before running out of downs late in the opening period.

The Indians, on the other hand, lived in WMC ground throughout the first half but had to drive late in the second quarter for their lone touchdown.

Moving 75 yards on 11 plays the Tribe made it 10-0 when QB Mike Culver rolled left and fell into the endzone for the touchdown. Schaffner hit the extra point with 16 seconds until halftime.

"We had the balance on offense we needed although we didn't put a lot of points on the board," noted Ash. "Mike Culver didn't throw as well as he has but he ran very well. Also, Rick Bouch and Joe Fagan played a solid game for us at halfback."

Culver hit on 9-of-23 passes for 110 yards and had one intercepted but scrambled his way to 48 yards rushing on 18 tries. Fagan (making his first varsity appearance) and Bouch, both freshmen, had 65 and 44 yards, on 15 and 14 rushes, respectively, as the Indians gained 167 yards on 52 attempts on the ground.

While flanker Dave Murphy had only three catches for 31 yards it was TE Carl Fekula that was in the limelight as the senior made five grabs for 72 yards including a couple of key receptions for first downs.

"Carl played another outstanding game," praised Ash. "He is our money player and is a big-play clutch receiver that will make the tough catch. I'm sure Carl is probably our best percentage receiver in terms of catches per attempts. If they double cover Murphy we can go to Carl to open things, up." Despite some offensive heroics it was the defense that gets most of the creidt for the victory.

As the JC offense stumbled slightly in the second half the defense stopped the Terrors cold, allowing the visitors into Indian territory only three times. Fourth quarter moves died at the 43 and 37, but it was the lone third quarter drive that decided the game.

Western Maryland used 13 plays to travel from their own 39 yard line to inside the Tribe ten. After two runs from the seven and five it was 3rd-and-goal at the JC 4. TB Wayne Pollock got caught in the backfield for a loss and then Mike Cline missed a 23-yard field goal on fourth down with one second to go in the period. It was all over.

"The key sequence was the goal line stand," concluded Ash. "In our other games we've given up points on long drives and crucial situations but not this time. The way our defense came through will really boost our confidence."

"The balance on offense is coming along plus we found the offense-defense balnce we can have. We got the win to get us started; now we go from here."

The Indians look for their first Middle Atlantic Conference win at Wilkes on Saturday. Juniata hosts Delaware Valley on October 20.

Runners Suffer Defeat

by Beth Gallagher

Despite the efforts of senior-captain, Mark Royer, the Harriers were defeated 20-39, by Dickinson College on Saturday. Royer led the way, capturing first place overall. Five Red Devils followed Royer across the finish line giving Dickinson the lopsided victory. Jim Gandy, Mark Kearns, Dave Dann and Ernie Aschenbach rounded out the top five finishers for the Indians. The Harriers host York College on Wednesday, with hopes of improving their 3-4 record.

The Lady Harriers dropped a disappointing 20-37 decision at Dickinson on Saturday. Senior, Terri Bollman added to her fine record by finishing first overall; unfortunately, the support from her teammates wasn't enough to conquer the Red Devils. Rounding out the top five finishers for the ladies were Kris Smith, Dee Gulden, Chris Schleiden and Sue Gill. The Harriers will put a 6-2 record on the line on Wednesday, when they face York College, here at home.

It was outstanding plays such as this spike that carried the ladies on to their 1st place victory in this past weekend's Fourth Annual Juniata Volleyball Classic.

Women Sweep Volleyball Classic

by Joe Scialabba

The Juniata College women's volleyball team played its best games of the season last weekend as they swept their way to the title of the Fourth Annual Juniata College Women's Volleyball Classic. Coach Larry Bock's ladies lost only one game, the first game of their pool play, before streaking by several opponents while winning 14 straight games.

The Indians faltered only in the opening against Brockport State, losing 6-15, but stormed back to beat the Golden Eagles, 15-8, 15-2 in the final two games. After the slow start, Juniata never looked back in coasting to a 4-0 pool play record with additional victories over Greensboro (NC) College, Grove City and I.U.P.

Juniata shut out Millikin (IL) in the quarter finals and then eliminated Nazareth (NY) by the same 2-0 score in the semi-finals to gain a finals berth on Saturday night.

With a large and loud partisan crowd behind them, Juniata played almost flawless volleyball, whipping Shippensburg University 2-0; 15-5 and 15-6. After a close start of game one the Indians pulled-away and continued to dominate the match. The champions led 14-0 at one point in the second game before the Raiderettes finally put points on the scoreboard. The Indians were too much for the tired runner-ups.

Juniata played outstanding team volleyball on both Friday and Saturday, although the ladies looked much sharper on the second day of the tourney.

Three Juniata players were chosen by the committee of coaches and officials as members of the all-tournament team. Seniors Tracey DeBlase, Peggy Evans and Ekanong Opanayikul were joined by Stephanie Burton of Brooklyn College, Elaine Penn of Greensboro College and Kim Bedford of Shippensburg.

The win in the Juniata Classic, recognized as one of the top Division III tournaments in the nation, will keep the Indians in the top four of the national NCAA rankings. The Indians fine record stood at 19-3 after the weekend with a home match against Messiah on Tuesday and an away trip to Susquehanna on Thursday.

Juniata will host Elizabethtown on October 18.

This past weekends tournament was an outstanding success all-around as all proceeds from the tourney were donated to the American Cancer Society.

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla., —The space shuttle Challenger completed its eight-day voyage with a "perfect" landing at 12:26p.m. Saturday, at the Kennedy Space Center. The mission is being praised as productive in light of the crew's shrewd problem-solving ability to overcome technical failures. Another plus for the mission was that it was only the second time in thirteen missions that a shuttle landed at its launching site. Touchdowns at the Florida launching site are considered crucial for the commerical success of the nation's space program, reducing cost and time required to prepare the shuttle for flying again.

MOSCOW — The Soviet Union began deploying long range cruise missles on strategic bombers and submarines, according the the Defense Ministry. The deployment was said to be in response to the United States deployment of similar weapons, such as the deployment of the first long range cruise missles, the Tomahawks, which the Pentagon announced in late June. The Soviet's statement reported Saturday, read: "The Soviet Union has warned on more than one occasion that it will not allow the existing equilibrium to be upset and will adopt adequate counter measures."

ROME — Pope John Paul II announced that he is willing to visit Cuba if invited, and that Roman Catholic bishops are seeking solutions to Central American guerrilla conflicts. "I am ready to go everywhere. In the case of Cuba the invitation is missing. We shall see." The Pope gave his comments to reporters aboard his plane as he returned home from a three day tour of Spain and the Caribbean commemorating Columbus' voyage.

American Ballet Theatre II To Perform At Juniata

The American Ballet Theatre II will perform in Juniata College's Oller Hall Monday, Oct. 22 at 8:15 p.m. as part of the college's 1984-85 Artist Series.

Formed in 1972 by Richard Englund in association with Ballet Theatre Foundation, Inc., ABT II is intended to provide quality dance in cities that can no longer accomodate the financial and technical requirements of the American Ballet Theatre. Since 1972, the company has performed in 218 cities in 42 states and eight foreign countries including Bermuda, Japan, and Greece.

A typical ABT II perfomance might include a 19th century Romantic ballet, a classical pas de deux, a modern dance work and a contemporary ballet specially choreographed for the company.

ABT II performs with 14-16 dancers. The company's compact size requires that each member be of soloist caliber. Many of ABT II's dancers gain their first professional experience with the company. "ABT II is proud to offer audiences a chance to see the stars of tomorrow today," a spokesman for the company said.

More than one-fourth of the current members of the American Ballet Theatre began their careers with ABT II. Other ABT II "alumni" now appear with the Houston Ballet, the Joffrey Balley, New York City Ballet, Geneva Ballet, London Festival Ballet and the Stuttgart Ballet.

Walter Terry of the "Saturday Review" wrote, "American Ballet Theatre... with its great senior troupe, American Ballet Theatre.. is a stunning group. Exuberant, vital and excellently trianed... the young dancers are among the best to be found anywhere in America."

"The dancers were excellent and lovely, and inspiration ot any choreographer... This is first quality American ballet professionalism..." wrote Clive Barnes of the "New York Post."

ABT II has participated in the National Endowment for the Arts' Dance Touring program and Artists in Schools program. The company's Lecture-Demonstration for schoolchildren, senior citizens and other audiences are recognized for increasing the demand for dance in the communities it visits.

The Oct. 22 performance is the second of five programs scheduled for Juniata College's 1984-85 Artist Series. The public is cordially invited to enjoy the quality dance of ABT II. Tickets are available at the information desk of the Ellis College Center (643-4310, Ext. 330) or at the door.

Alcohol Education Promoted

by Ginny Krall

Are you enraged by the millions of innocent men, women and children killed yearly by drunk drivers? So is CASE — the committee for Alcohol Studies and Education.

CASE, founded on Juniata's campus in 1977, is an organization working under the motto "If you choose to drink, then drink responsibly." The students and faculty that make up CASE are not promoting alcohol abstinence, for this is not their aim. Instead, CASE hopes to inform, educate and direct the Juniata drinking population toward alcohol awareness and responsibility.

The organizational format of CASE is designed to educate in several ways. CASE is broken into five subcommittess which perform individual tasks aimed at achieving its goals. The Program committee works toward building effective alcohol education programs. In recent years, CASE has offered major programs such as the "JC Spirit Fair" and "3-D Week: Don't Drive Drunk". Through these programs, CASE Involved local MADD chapters (Mothers Against Drunk Drivers) as well as AA (Alcoholics Anonymous) members. Also several thought-provoking films, which touched alcohol related topics, were presented. Juniata Programs such as these have received high acclaim from the national organization BACCUS (Boost Alcohol Conscienceness for College University Students).

The other large subcommittee on CASE is IBWI or the Irresponsible Behavior While Under the Influ-

Conserve energy and save money, too!

Energy conservation in the 1980's has not been a widespread concern for most Juniata students. However, considering the chronic increases in tuition, the Juniatian thinks students should focus upon it more than they currently do.

The Juniatian witnesses students wasting energy on this campus every day. We've seen people leave their TV on for entire weekends at a time. We've seen people turn their showers on and let them warm up for 5 minutes before entering them. And, we've watched people neglect to turn off the lights or the stereo when they leave a room.

Ironic as it may be, these energy wasters are much more energy conscious at home, probably because they have tangible proof of how expensive hot water, electric and fuel bills can be. Unfortunately, it's difficult for the college to provide each student with a breakdown of his energy consumption. Therefore, there's not much motivation for students to be thrifty.

In truth, energy bills account for this college's largest operating expenses, expenses that continue to increase faster than any other. In turn, tuition must increase to cover these expenses.

Like it or not, it's ignorant to think that wasting energy has no bearing on tuition rates. If energy costs could be contained, Juniatian students might witness a substantial reduction in tuition hikes, too.

The Juniatian is certain that most students would opt to see tuition remain as low as possible. For that to happen, all Juniata students must channel their energies into some effective conservation.

Dear Editor:

As a result of an October 1983 meeting regarding campus lighting with representatives from Student Government, Physical Plant and Student Services, eight sodium vapor lights were purchased at a total cost of $4,809. Based upon that campus tour and follow-up meeting, lighting was added to: the south end of Lesher; the south side of Ellis; the Long Tower of the East Houses illuminating the south bridge crossing Muddy Run; the area between the Flory-Kline and Long-Miller towers; and the East Houses parking lot. Following a similar survey in 1981, a total of $7,321 was spent on lights, fixtures and poles.

This information is shared to document the willingness of the administration to respond to perceived security problems relating to lighting. A copy of this letter is being sent to Student Government to invite appropriate representatives to participate in another analysis of the campus lighting situation. Security is an administrative priority.

Sincerely
Arnold J. Tilden, Jr.
Vice President and Dean of Student Services

Dear Editor,

I am concerned about the level of politeness or lack thereof being shown by many IM players during practices. Recently when my soccer team was practicing on one third of a large field several baseball players started to practice right beside us. Because they did not have the common courtesy to practice at the other end of the field I have a huge bruise from being hit by a fast ball. In the intramural gym, basketball players routinely shoot from the middle of an in-use volleyball court then grumble when they are hit by wild volleyballs. I feel that this behavior shows a great lack of maturity and that these problems could be avoided by showing a little common sense and courtesy.

Sincerely,
Mary E. Ritchey

Dear Editor,

I would like to take this opportunity to thank all of the wonderful people who helped me make the "Anything Goes" on Homecoming Weekend the success it was. These people included my committee members, the judges for the competition and my roommates. It was hard to get it off the ground but once we did, it turned out to be a fun and enjoyable afternoon for everyone involved.

I would especially like to thank the team members. We had teams representing Sherwood, Terrace,

Students Speak

Are you energy conscious on campus?

Susan B. Kipp — Junior: "Yes-because I always try to take Navy showers and I try to turn off the lights when I leave my room."

Jayne Stein — Junior: "Yes-somewhat. Recently I've become more energy conscious because an RA in one of my classes pointed out that neglecting to be energy conscious will only increase the tuition for next year."

Jeff Kaden — Senior: "No-because I'm paying for it directly. I don't worry about turning a light or my stereo off. I relaize it comes out of my tuition but since it doesn't come out of my or my roommate's pocket, I'm not as concerned."

Jeff Nicholas — Senior: "I am somewhat energy conscious. I turn off my stereo when I leave the room. I'm not more energy consious because we pay enough that we should be able to use as much energy as we want."

Road Trips

by Andrew G. Davis

The philosophy behind the road trip is that spontaneity takes precedence over any premeditated plan of action, and that getting there is half the fun (if not most) of arriving at a destination. Of the many people I've known dedicated to this philosophy, some stand out more than others. There is one in particular I can think of, whose real name I shall abstain from divulging in order to protect his reputation, if that's possible. For our purposes I shall call him by the name most people know him by, Buzz, a name whose connotations fit the man aptly. If ever there was a road trippers' Hall of Fame, Buzz would definitely be a contender.

Anybody who knew Buzz recognized him immediately as one of those misplaced souls who was born in the wrong century; we figured it to be approximately 100-150 years too late. For Buzz was, plain and simple, what one would call, for lack of a better term, a maniac, a wild man, a crazed individual. We knew that he should have been out on the trail with his trusty horse, hanging out on the edge of the Great Wilderness, a bordertown rowdy, a Boomtown Rat. Instead, he was transported to this century, only to grace us with his usually out-of-hand presence, and the services of his legendary Pea Green Nova.

The mystical aura that grew around Buzz and his legendary Pea Green Nova began early that freshman year, when Buzz was just establishing the reputation that now usually precedes him. When those post-midnight deathdog runs to Sheetz's began to mysteriously escalate into full-blown excursions, we, the passengers of the Pea Green, would suddenly find ourselves willing captives on a ride into the unknown. Cryptic names would fly by through the darkness... Marklesburg... Entriken... and that old Pea Green's engine would hum like it was alive. We realized then, whether we knew it or not, that here was a man who had grasped the true philosophical essence of the road trip, and, for a while it seemed, we became his disciples.

The most remarkable thing about Buzz was his natural predatory instinct, which would become unleashed on these road trips. Now Buzz had a hunting license, and probably a gun, too, though we never saw it. He had a different, rather unique method of hunting: he prefered to use his bare hands, or, at the most, his special wooden club which I believe belonged to a chair he had once broken. The extent to which Buzz was one with his car became evident on a night which would become legendary in talk among the mobile circles.

It was late one night in early December, somewhere north of Petersburg, Buzz at the wheel, Dire Straits blasting comfortably on the tape deck, when a small furry creature scuttled across the road and into the woods some distance ahead. We watched with astonishment as Buzz, with one graceful, perfectly choreographed movement, pulled off to the gravelled shoulder, jammed on the parking brake while simultaneously opening the door, letting the momentum of the vehicle carry it open. He tumbled out of the car and hurdled the guardrail, disappearing into the dark forest in the general direction of the animal. We sat for a moment, astounded and perplexed. By the time we hopped out and finally caught up with him, he was halfway up a young hemlock tree, apparently bent on procuring the startled, incredulous raccoon at the top. Flashlights in hand, we had no choice but to cheer him on.

"I'll shake him down, and you guys catch him when he falls," Buzz said. "Yeah, right!" we said. Well, Buzz shook the tree, and down the raccoon fell, bouncing off of Buzz's head before landing nimbly as a cat and proceeding to run probably faster than it ever had before. Buzz could never understand why we didn't immediately continue pursuit. It was getting late, I suppose, and it was warm in the car, the music was good, the moon was rising, and there were miles of deserted backroad just waiting for us. The raccoon? Well, he had his own tales to tell.

In addition, I would like to thank Bill Berrier, Nancy Latimore, Norm Gopsill and especially Wayne Justham for all of their help and support.

I hope in years to come the "Anything Goes" becomes a Homecoming tradition and that all of the people who participated will again next year. They were all a great bunch of people and I can't thank them enough.

Birth control pills? The Rhythm Method? Crossed fingers? No, none of these. You won't upset your hormonal balance, gain weight or be threatened with high blood pressure with this method of birth control. "Spontaneity Without Side Effects" proclaim the ads. No wonder the "Today Vaginal Contraceptive Sponge" has been in such demand since it went on the market in July, 1983.

Yet the sponge is not the perfect contraceptive device. Since its approval by the Food and Drug Administration (FDA) in April of 1983, both the effectiveness and safety of the sponge have been questioned. Although the manufacturers of the product, VLI Corporation, claim an effectivness rate of 89-91 percent, "clinical studies in the United States show that 16.8 out of 100 women will become pregnant each year using the sponge." Also under fire is the safety of the device, which is now a subject of controversy in Congressional hearings.

The "Today Sponge" is a "two inch round, white, polyurethane cushion, impregnated with the spermicidal nonoxydol-9." It fits over the cervix and prevents pregnancy by combining spermicidal barrier and absorptive action. The dispute over the safety of this new product stems from the presence of nonoxydol-9. The FDA classifies this spermicide as "generally regarded as safe" and has allowed its use in contraceptive jellies and foams for twenty years. Yet the FDA recognizes that nonoxydol-9 contains small concentrations of two carcinogens, 1,4-Dioxane and ethylene oxide. Additionally, a third carcinogen, 2,4-TDA, can be produced during the manufacture of the polyurethane of the sponge.

Due to the possible presence of these cancer-causing chemicals, Congressional hearings have been conducted question-

Guest Commentary

Dr. Jay Buchanan

In the last article, we examined the five steps in the self-management model. Let's review those steps and discuss how the model can be put into practice.

Again, the five steps are: (1) goal selection; (2) monitoring target behavior; (3) changing setting events; (4) establishing effective consequences; and (5) consolidating gains.

By way of a personal example, I decided about six years ago that an important goal for me would be to quit smoking. From the very beginning, my plan was to cut down gradually rather than to go the "cold turkey" route (the research is mixed as to which approach, gradual or total abstinence, is more effective and obviously depends on the individual).

In order to accomplish my goal, I began by monitoring the target behavior, that is, my smoking behavior. By recording when, where and under what circumstances my smoking took place, I was in a better position to alter those factors which seemed to support the habit. As a result of this self-monitoring, it became apparent that certain circumstances consistently triggered my smoking behavior.

This takes us to the third step in the model, changing setting events. I began to limit the number of cigarettes smoked per day as well as the places that smoking was permitted. Regarding the former, I would take only two or three home after work so that from 5:00 p.m. to 8:00 a.m. I would smoke just that many cigarettes.

Another strategy with reference in changing setting events was to limit where smoking was permitted. I stopped smoking in the house which meant standing outside in an uncomfortable environment to satisfy my habit. I would also leave my cigarettes in the office when going to lunch, thereby additionally limiting when and where smoking occurred.

The next step in the model, establishing effective consequences, is intended to help reinforce those actions the individual has taken to reach the desired goal. In other words, I needed to establish some type of reward system to help insure that I would continue toward cessation of the smoking habit.

The positive social reinforcement received from those important to me, as well as my own desire to quit, served as the necessary rewards for me.

Finally, the model poses the

ALONG MUDDY RUN

by Mark Royer

It was 10:30 Sunday night and this column was still unwritten. My deadline wasn't until Monday afternoon but I had a test to study for in the morning. I was having problems coming up with ideas. My creative spirit was elsewhere, crushed by academia. So I did the only logical thing. I took a nap.

For most students here at J.C. naps are an integral part of the college experience. A student comes to rely on this period of listlessness and can't function without it. Mind and body come to expect the nap and will revolt if it is missed. In the more serious cases of nap addiction an individual will go through withdrawal symptoms, some of which are easily observed: general nastiness, garbled speech, loss of appetite, and overall sluggish behavior.

While scheduled naps are beneficial to one's disposition and wellbeing, they can't begin to compare to the ever-popular spontaneous nap. Spontaneous naps, as the name implies, can occur at any time (after dinner, late at night, during Dr. Mitchell's chem lecture, etc.) and may strike without warning. Unfortunately this type of nap can be dangerous as it is highly contagious, especially among roommates.

While spontaneous naps can occur at any time, there are conditions under which they are more prevelant. The more work one has to do or the closer a deadline gets the more likely a "nap attack" will occur. Certain textbooks, when opened, also tend to bring on nap attacks.

Both scheduled naps and spontanous naps have their place in the lifestyle of today's college student. Anyone who indulges in only one variety should really make an effort to experience the other form. Maybe the administration should

by Avril Opinante

The Residential Life Committee, for those who are unfamiliar with it, is a subcommittee of student government and is in charge of the residence halls and student life. The committee is headed by Charon Arbor, and advised by Julie Keehner. It is composed of the vice presidents of all RHA's five student government senators, and students who were on the committee in the past.

The committee is planning three major projects for this year. The first project on their agenda is a dinner with the town merchants. There will be about three students to each merchant. The dinner will most likely be held at the end of the fall term. The purpose of this dinner will be for students to show merchants appreciation for their services and, more generally, to increase the rapport between students and the townspeople.

The second project planned by the committee is an energy conservation task force. A great deal of money is spent on electricity and heating each year. Less money would have to be spent on energy if students learned how to conserve it and were encouraged to do so. The task force, in conjunction with the electric company and Jack Linetty, will concentrate on raising student awareness on energy conservation. The task force will work through programs directed by the RHA's or RA's. The task force will also hold a demonstration in Ellis dealing with energy conservation.

The third and biggest project planned is a dinner club. The dinner club will provide an inexpensive alternative to cafeteria meals, as well as a place for on-campus dating. It will be more convenient and less expensive than eating in town. Students will have to make reservations in advance, because seating will be limited to about 50 students. All a student will have to do is give his/her meal ticket number and pay a fee tentatively set at $3.50. It will be set up like a restaurant in the Faculty Lounge. The atmosphere will be relaxed so that students won't feel rushed. The committee plans to have live entertainment provided by people on campus, and when they cannot do that, they plan to have dinner-type music piped in. There will be a set menu for students to choose from, and they will have to choose their meals in advance, when they make reservations. A survey will be sent to students so that this dinner club can be run the way students would like it to be. The dinner club will be open either once a week or once a month, depending upon its popularity. There will be a contest for the best name for the new dinner club. The dinner club will begin in January.

Grinders Encounter Success

by Amy Smith

Success is the key word for the Juniata Executive Club a week after putting "Binder's Grinders" into operation.

According to Darin McLean, chairman of JEC's Accounting and Finance Committee, an average of about 75 subs a night was sold the first five nights. There were some concerns as to whether OIP's lower-priced subs or Pizza Hut's new delivery service would hinder the sale of Binder's Grinders, but there has been no apparent negative affect on JEC's business. McLean attributes the prevalence of Binder's Grinders to the "quality of the product, the reasonable price, and the excellent service."

"Binder's Grinders" is the "greatest co-curricular undertaking that any organization has attempted in recent years," according to McLean. In addition to being a year long venture of the JEC Club, "Binder's Grinders" is also currently the impetus for a class project. The Information Systems for Control class, under the supervision of Professor Patricia Albertson, is in the process of analyzing JEC's present operation system and working to establish a system which can act as a standard for all future JEC clubs to use if they decide to pursue this business venture.

McLean mentioned no goal in terms of monetary success. Instead he stated that the overall goal for implementing this operation is to make JEC as prominent as it should be, given the number of business students attending Juniata. The JEC Club hopes that the success of this project will stimulate interest in membership.

The club is considering shortening its business hours to Sunday through Thursday from 9:30 - 11:30, since this is the peak ordering time. JEC encourages students to provide then with input on their satisfaction or dissatisfaction with the service. As of yet, there have been very few complaints, and JEC has made every effort to compensate for any errors.

realize how important naps are to college students and offer an introductory course. It would certainly go over better than Logic & Language, and it would be something the students could use for the rest of their lives.

The biggest obstacle to successful napping, besides the stereo down the hall, is overcoming any feelings of guilt which often accompany a good nap. Like many of life's simpler pleasures, napping is ofter frowned upon by society. Many people see napping as a waste of valuable time. This is sad, for napping can only truly be appreciated when there is something else one should be doing.

Peer Advising Program Councils New Students

by Wendy Williams

Last year, Juniata College began a program of peer advising, which involves freshman and upperclass student advisors. Groups of approximately five freshmen are assigned a student advisor who will council the new students on various aspects of college life.

Each spring, through a process of applications and interviews, volunteer advisors are chosen. They are assigned to freshman students with whom they will have about four meetings. Each meeting is designed to discuss questions and supply answers corresponding to the new student's needs.

The first phase, already held this year, focused on social and academic survival skills. Often for freshmen it is their first time away from home or the first time sharing a room. New faces, perhaps the dining hall experience, or the many parties cause social pressures. Also the lack of parental guidance causes a need for counseling on time management. It was with these experiences in mind that the peer advisor was created.

The second phase, yet to come, will focus on the Program of Emphasis; what it is and what the student must do to prepare for it. Other questions such as what is a registrar, how do you approach a professor, or when do you choose your advisors, are answered. The college has many different resources open for student use. What these are and where they are are also discussed.

In its second year, the program has and will go through a formal evaluation. Upon its first evaluation, it was found to be too prescriptive. The sessions weren't timed with the new student's needs. This year, attempts are being made to hold sessions when freshmen have questions concerning social and academic experiences.

Although this program exists elsewhere, Vice President and Dean of Student Services, Arnold Tilden, believes the program to be unique. "It's an effective and systematic approach of providing support for the new students. Its main goal is to let students know that someone cares. If they have questions or concerns they should feel free to ask." When asked about the program's success, Dean Tilden stated that only positive responses have been voiced.

Other staff members involved in the founding and selection of student advisors are Julie Keehner, Assistant Dean of Student Services for Residential Life, and counselor Jay Buchanan.

Nan Hoffman returned to Catharsis Lounge last night to play at a coffehouse. The proceeds went toward a nuclear freeze campaign.

Coffee House Review

by April Evans

It is easy to see why Nan Hoffman has obtained popularity within the folk music circuit. Nan is a talented musician who accompanies herself on guitar or auto harp. She often sings accapella without straying from pitch. Mrs. Hoffman has a sweet and easy to listen to soprano voice. However, it is much too soft to carry over the roar of wild Juniata students. Her songs exhibited the usual range of folk songs, from love songs to songs of protest.

The first song was called 'The Last Thing On My Mind'. It was a pretty love song in which Nan accompanied herself on the guitar.

The next song was an old Bob Dylan song called 'You Ain't Goin' Nowhere'. It was a lovely tune and was adequately performed.

The following song, 'Dig A Hole In The Ground', was a witty comment on what the Reagan administration proposed we do in case of nuclear attack. Nan Hoffman put more energy into this song because it's something she apparently feels strongly about.

For her next piece Mrs. Hoffman sang a song popularly recorded by Willie Nelson, called 'Poncho and Leftie'. The piece was the story of two bandits. Nan sounded better vocally than Willie Nelson, but had half the vitality. The seventh tune was 'Bobby McGee'. My familiarity with the Janis Joplin recording made Nan's performance seem anemic, though, basically she sang it well.

The next piece was called 'The Nuke Son', by Sali Rogers. It was an anti-nuke piece. Nan sang it accapella withoug missing a pitch, and with conviction.

Nan's next piece was a Joni Mitchell tune called 'Urge For Going'. It was a melodic song about someone wanting to leave with the change in seasons.

'This Old Man' was a criticism of past presidents, in particular President Reagan. Because this was something Mrs. Hoffman believed in she put more feeling into it.

Another song of political criticism written by Si Kahn was called 'Government On Horseback'. This was a comment on the Reagan administration. Nan sang 'Government On Horseback' with conviction

The next song was based on a phrase we've all come into contact with as children, 'I'm Gonna Tell'. It is about a bratty kid who is continually threatening to tell on a sibling.

'After The Gold Rush', a Neil Young song was sweetly sung by Mr. Hoffman. The following piece 'Four Strong Winds' is a lovely song about a seafarer. Nan effectively captured its sadness and tinged sweetness.

'The Mail Will Still Go Through' is a sardonic comment on the fact that the U.S. postal service has developed a way to deliver mail in the event of a nuclear strike.

The following song was written for a men's self-awareness group. It is titled 'It's Only A Wee Wee'. It was amusing, though I'm not sure how the male members of the audience felt.

'All Clear In Harrisburg' was a nearly vehement anti-nuke (specifically TMI) song. It was written on the premise that while Middletown residents were told they could safely return to their homes, a danger still existed. Mrs. Hoffman believed in what she was singing.

Mrs. Hoffman's final number was titled 'Waltzing With Bears'. It was based on a Dr. Suess song. 'Waltzing With Bears' had a nice tune and the usual Dr. Suess lyrics that have no real meaning.

Although Nan's stage presence is not magnetic, she is talented musically. It is a shame that so few students took the time to actually listen to Nan's music.

Shakespeare Brought to Life in Oller

by Carole Connell

The world of William Shakespeare was brought to life in Oller Hall on Tuesday night, October 9th, with the presentation, This Man's Art. Featuring Richard A. Livingston, Juniata alumni and singer with the Chicago Symphony Orchestra, Mary Ruth Linton, Chairperson of the Music Department and Esther M. Doyle, Professor Emeritus of Juaniata and former professor of English, the program offered a selection of sonnets, songs, soliloquies and scenes.

After an introduction of the performance by Dr. Hofelt, the presentation began with Mrs. Linton performing 'The Carmen's Whistle' on the harsichord. This composition, by William Byrd, was followed with a narration by Livingston explaining the next set of three songs. Livingston was then joined by Dr. Doyle for the next section of the performance, the reading of fifteen Shakespearean sonnets.

Following the readings, two songs by Franz Schubert were sung by Livingston, who was accompanied by Linton on the piano. The group also performed three scenes from Shakespeare's plays, the first of which presented Doyle playing two different roles at the same time. The scene, entitled 'Juliet and the Nurse', from Romeo and Juliet, displayed Doyle's talent as she was able to separate the two personaes convincingly. The second scene from Richard II was prefaced with an additional narration by Livingston. Speaking of the character, Livingston stated that he was neither a "great man nor effective king," but Shakespeare had interest in Richard for the "poet in him." The final scene in the trio 'Pyramus and Thisbe,' from A Midsummer Night's Dream, presented Livingston and Doyle acting together. Performing a humorous play within the scene, Livingston and Doyle amused the audience with the ludicrous plot.

A group of selected scenes from Macbeth, presented by Doyle and Livingston, rounded out the evening. Employing music as a transition between sections, the performers did a remarkable job creating the mood of the play without the aid of sets or costumes.

The appeal of this work, as well as all of Shakespeare's works, was expressed by Dr. Doyle in a narration. She stated, "Through this man's art we better come to understand ourselves and others."

Kvasir Literature Will Return to JC

by Sherri Reed

Kvasir returns this year as Juniata's literary magazine. Last year, due to organizational difficulties, no edition existed; however, a 1984-85 copy will be produced, hopefully by March. The magazine's editorial staff hopes to receive a wide variety of submissions including poems, essays, drawings, photographs, musical compositions, short stories, etc.

The name Kvasir itself possesses an interesting background. Legend had it Kvasir was a young man created by the gods and endowed with all knowledge. A band of dwarfs desiring his wisdom slew him. From his blood they created a drink, which made its taster a poet of great sweetness and charm. The dwarfs, however, did not partake of their inspiring drink; instead they continued their treachery and for one of their evil deeds, were forced to relinquish the wondrous drink to a terrible giant named Sutting in return for their lives. Soon Odin, wisest and greatest of the gods, learned of the poetic mead and plotted to take it. He cunningly made his way to the cave where Sutting's beautiful daughter guarded the drink and passionately wooed her until she let him sip the enchanting liquid. After consuming all of the drink, Odin fled from the cave and flew with great speed to the waiting gods. He then regurgitated the mead into prepared vessels, but so great was his hurry that a few drops fell to earth, there becoming the inspiration of all human rhymers and poetmasters. As for the rest of Ksavir's precious blood, only the gods and an occasional mortal may drink of its uplifting richness. Perhaps this year's edition of Kvasir will be fortunate enough to contain the works of some of these "occasional mortals."

Student submissions may be sent to the following boxes: 407, 221, 1094, and 1647. Works will be accepted until at least January. The goal of Kvasir is to represent different types of art created by Juniata's students; Kvasir is to be a reflection of us all.

Hartslog Day Celebrated in Alexandria

Square dancers strut outside the Hartslog Heritage Museum as spectators look on. The Museum is filled with history trivia and was the hub of Saturday's activities.

by Beth Gallagher

The main streets of Alexandria were transformed into a brilliant crafts festival on Saturday, Oct. 13, in celebration of Hartslog Day 1984.

Hartslog Day, an annual tradition for members of the Huntingdon area, dates back to the 1700's. A man named Hart watered his horses and traded with the Indians by a hollowed out log at the edge of his property. It later became a landmark in town and the Hartslog Museum now stands on the lot.

Hundreds of people turned out for the event which was bigger and better than ever. Booths lined the streets selling eveything from cotton candy, candy apples, brownines and hot dogs, to crocheted and knitted handiwork, needlepoint, quilting, leather goods and flower arrangements — all reasonably priced and of high quality. There were even the familiar faces of Juniata's own Dr. Woodrow and Dr. Crouch, who manned a wood carving booth and a maple syrup stand, respectively.

Around 2:00, the center of Main Street featured the sights and sounds of square dancers who did their best to get their audience dosey-doeing, too. In the meanwhile, there was a bustle of activity up at the Alexandria Fire Hall where some young boys had fun watching the dunking booth volunteers get soaked. Crowds were also feasting at the Chicken Barbeque in the hall.

By late afternoon, this reporter and her crew started dragging anchor. Not only had we assimilated about as much history as can be expected for a Saturday afternoon, but after taste-testing almost every type of food in the fair, we were ready to roll out of town. Little did we know that the best was yet to come — Oktoberfest at George's Tavern.

The Tavern was crowded with older townsfolk who seemed amused that college students would "crash" their Oktoberfest. The tension was eased soon enough with the help of the Little German Band and some traditional green ale; and, within 15 minutes, townsfolk and college students alike were doing the Polka to "Roll out the Barrel". By far, the perfect way to conclude the afternoon.

Hartslog Day, coupled with Saturday's sunny weather, was a uniquely entertaining way to spend a Saturday afternoon. Those who didn't make it this year might want to mark it on their calendars for next year as an event not to be missed.

One feature of Hartslog day was the traditional pumpkin pole standing in front of the Museum. The pole was made up of 18 decorated pumpkin faces and attracted a lot of attention.

by Secretary of State, George P. Shultz. Mr. Shultz said he has moved "to tighten up the chain of command tremendously" since the bombing of the United States embassy in Lebanon. The chain of command must be emphasized to see that decisions are completed and carried out, he said.

His plans include stronger security at embassies which have temporary defenses while they wait for permanent devices to be installed, a daily security meeting in Washington, and security such as tank-ditch barriers and steel barricades across garage ramps at headquarters in Washington. This work, part of a $2.6 million project to strengthen security measures and defenses against terroist attack, began last week.

LONDON — As the death toll reaches four, investigators at Scotland Yard specualte that the bomb which blasted the Grand Hotel in Brighton early last Friday, nearly killing Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, was probably a highly sophisticated time bomb planted weeks ago. Police sources suggest that the IRA (Irish Republican Army) which claimed responsibility for the explosion could have been aided by hotel staff or construction crew members. The four who died were high ranking government officials, members of Parliament, and the wife of such an official.

DAVENPORT, Iowa — Representative Geraldine Ferraro's campaign manager asked for an immediate apology from Vice President George Bush to Mrs. Ferraro saying that remarks made by Mr. Bush "have gone beyond decency." The statement by the campaign manager, John Sasso, referred to comments Mr. Bush has made, such as in a private conversation with a longshoreman while campaigning in Elizabeth, N.J.

Mr. Sasso called remarks by Mr. Bush, his staff, and others in his campaign, "very patronizing."

The Competence of the Candidates

by David Orth Moore

With a mere three weeks to go until the Presidential Election November 6, the major question confronting voters is split in two camps: Are you better off than four years ago, or will you be better off in four years? Despite the attractiveness to answer this question with an immediate yes or no, we should stop looking merely at our own affluence, and instead regard the position of those in America we care to know nothing about, the poor.

Students at Juniata College, along with administration and faculty have no concept of being poor in the 1980s, and the harsh realization that the American Dream no longer exists for those poverty stricken. We all recognize that government can not give money to those in society not willing to give something back to society. Such a course of action discourages cooperation and encourages self-pity. However, there exists in our society a significant percentage who are below the poverty level; 36.3 million to be exact.

It was Mr. Reagan's objective to decrease welfare in order to get people back to work, and off the backs of government. But since unemployment has risen by 2.4% from 1980, and the poverty rate has similarly risen by 5.2% (an addition of 6 million Americans) in this same period, where is the justification for all Mr. Reagan's cuts in social programs?

Poverty in America has reached its highest level in 18 years. A Congressional Reference Service study accentuates this dilemma by showing that through the Administration's budget cuts, 560,000 people have been pushed below the poverty line. A study from the General Accounting Office shows that from five cities, half the families cut from welfare since 1981 had run out of food after losing their benefits. So, despite the attempts to reduce some of the burden on government, Mr. Reagan is increasing the strain on society by "wishing away" those in poverty.

The Democrats are charging that this Republican administration has aided in the redistribution of income away from lower income families and individuals-particularly the poorest-and toward the most affluent. The tax cuts are proof of at least a shift in this direction since these cuts have in effect resulted in greater savings for high income groups rather than low income groups, along with greater reductions in their tax rates, thus widening the distribution of after-tax incomes.

The Democratic Platform proposes no programs which randomly doles out money to just anybody in society, but rather supports work programs and governemnt projects which increase meaningful employment. Furthermore, Mr. Mondale calls for a re-adjustment of the tax structure by taxing poor people less, thus creating more incentive to work, and more money to spend.

The plight of blacks has deteriorated most significantly in the past four years when compared with the poverty in other groups. Poverty amongst blacks has increased by 1.3 million people; the total listed as poor included 50% of all black children. Additionally, the black unemployment rate has increased by four percent since 1980, thus causing the median family income for blacks to drop more than five percent. Sociologists have become increasingly concerned with these statistics since they suggest a potential problem when children in these poverty families reach adulthood.

Despite the economic recovery which some of the country is experiencing, there are Americans whose plight has been needlessly worsened during the past four years. This trend is the first of its kind since the 1960s when President Johnson introduced social programs which cut the poverty rate from 22.2% to 12.0%. It had remained at that level until 1981, it's now 15.2% of the population. Whether this latest trend is by choice or by chance, it is in every Americans best interest to consider those poor in society who do not have the same opportunities we have.

Next Week: Blessed Are The Peacemakers.

Senate Planning Updated

by Ann Cameron

The Student Government Senate met for their 5th session on Tuesday, October 9, 1984. New and old business matters, as well as committee reports, were covered.

Bob Yankello was voted in to the Senate in a special election for an off-campus senator. Bob replaces the off-campus senator who did not return to Juniata this fall. Tom Trent was appointed assistant Treasurer. This position was created to alleviate Treasurer Peggy Evans' overload of budgeting responsibility. Peggy recommended Tom and the Senate approved his appointment. Jack Thomas also reported from the College Governance committee that Professor Kaminsky will replace Dr. Burroughs on the College Judicial Board.

Several committee chairpersons reported on the progress of their committees. Lisa Aurand mentioned that the Joint Lecture committee is contacting comedian Steve Landesburg about coming to Juniata in January. Landesburg is probably best known as a detective on ABC's "Barney Miller".

Student Concerns will conduct a survey concerning pool hours. The survey will determine if further action needs to be taken to alter the hours Binder Natatorium is open for lap and free swimming.

Peggy Evans reported a 12% cut in funds for club budgets. Money should be in the club accounts by October 15th. Peggy also reminded the Senate that any full-time Juniata student who would like to apply for a student government loan must fill out an application available in the student government office.

Finally, president Glen Bauder discussed revision of the Student Government Constitution. Senators will read and examine the present one and report back at the next meeting, which will be held Wednesday, October 24, at 9:00 p.m. Everyone is welcome to attend.

ence program. Students from CASE are trained by Dr. Jay Buchanan to work with referrals from Juniata's campus disciplinary system. There are five steps to the program which is designed to help offenders understand and alter their behaviour relating to alcolhol abuse.

Other subcommittees on CASE include membership and recruitment, periodic reminder, and the non-alcoholic cocktail committee. These three groups strive to involved the campus through membership, public service messages and alternative beverages at major college events and dances. Again the aim is not to condemn those who choose to drink, but to help everyone become more aware of the consequences of irresponsible behavior that sometimes accompanies alcohol usage.

This year CASE will again sponsor non-alcoholic beverages at the main events on campus. The group also is hoping to develop a program entitled "Punchbowl" which will be structured after TV quiz shows. The "Punchbowl" questions would be related to alcohol education, and dorm points would be awarded to the winning teams.

CASE is looking for new members to help in its efforts ot educate the Juniata campus. Anyone is welcome to become a CASE member, for it is only with students' time and support that CASE's goals can be met. If you are interested in becoming part of this group, please contact Student Services.

Have you seen this man? He recently has been posing as a Juniata College Administrator and ends up burglarizing students. If you have ANY information on the whereabouts of this man, please contact Housing immediately!

Reception to Honor Candidate

A reception for actress Nancy Kulp, the Democratic candidate for the U.S. House of Representatives, Ninth Congressional District, will be held Tuesday, Oct. 23, in the South Hall carpeted lounge beginning at 8:30 p.m.

Sponsored by the Juniata College Young Democrats, the reception is open to all students, faculty and staff. Kulp will be available for informal discussions on campaign issues.

A resident of Port Royal, Juniata County, Kulp is a native of the region she is seeking to represent in Congress. The Ninth Congressional District is comprised of 10 counties including Huntingdon, Blair, Bedford and Mifflin.

Kulp has been active in Democratic Party politics since the 1950s. She has appeared in hundreds of movies and television shows, but is best known for her role as Jane Hathaway in the hit series, "The Beverly Hillbillies."

In addition to the reception, Kulp will be campaigning in Huntingdon during the day.

question regarding the gains or payoffs. The fact that I was able to gain control over my problem was a major accomplishment. Economically I was able to save a considerable amount of money and use that money for something more worthwhile. Additionally, taking care of one problem area led me to feel confident of solving other potential problems.

Surely, there are aspects of your life you would like to altar or change. Perhaps its being a more successful student, managing your weight or controlling your alcohol consumption. What we need to remember is that we are in control and can make the necessary changes if they are important.

ing the safety of this new product. This dispute is unfounded. Not only does ethylene oxide lose its carcinogenicity during the production of the sponge, but 1,4-Dioxane has never ever been detected in the product. Furthermore, manufacturers of polyurethane now use a new process which does not produce carcinogenic 2,4-TDA. Charges of the questionable safety of the sponge can be further refuted by studies performed by Ortho Pharmaceuticals which show that spermicides are not absorbed through the vagina.

The linkage of the sponge to toxic shock syndrome (TSS) adds to the safety controversy. Two women who contracted TSS while using the sponge have received much publicity; however the cause of the illnesses has since been attributed to pre-existing vaginal infections. In fact, nonoxydal-9 has been found to retard the growth of the bacteria suspected of causing TSS.

The sponge is a safe alternative to other methods of contraception. Nonoxydal-9 does not display carcinogenic characteristics in this product, nor does the sponge contribute to toxic shock syndrome. The sponge is a convenient method of birth control if one is willing to accept the risks of a somewhat low effectiveness rate.

On October 23 "The Language of Film" class will sponsor this weeks feature film entitled "The Gospel According To St. Matthew".

This Italian 1964 film vividly tells of the Christ story based on only one gospel. It features non-professional actors, political implications and satisfying use of many kinds of music.

Juniata students are invited to attend this free event which will be shown at 7 p.m. in A100 in the Science Center.

Varsity Football Salvages A Tie

by Joe Scialabba

Juniata continued to miss scoring opportunities last Saturday as the Indians relied on defense to salvage a 14-14 tie with Wilkes at Ralston Field in Wilkes-Barre.

Both teams remain winless in the Middle Atlantic Conference. Juniata is 0-3-1 in the MAC and 1-4-1 overall. The Colonels are 0-4-1 for the season, all MAC games.

The Indians led 14-7 at halftime, but could have had a bigger lead if it weren't for two fumbles, an interception and a missed 33-yard field goal in the first thirty minutes.

Juniata did manage scores on their final two possessions of the first half as quarterback Mike Culver hit TE Carl Fekula from 31 yards away with 6:11 until halftime and running back Bill Stamp dove-over from a yard out with 1:20 remaining.

"The turnovers hurt us a lot," said Juniata Head Coach Rob Ash. "The key play was the interception early in the second half. They scored and tied us right away and changed the whole game."

Culver, who was intercepted four times in all, threw for receiver George Plesce on the third play of the second half when the tipped pass fell into the arms of strong safety Rick Macko, who returned the interception from midfield to the Juniata 25 yard line.

On the first play, quarterback Brad Scarborough pitched to receiver Bob Graziano who then threw an option pass to wide-open Ed Mann for the tying touchdown. There was still 13:27 left in the third period.

"We were pleased with how our defense adjusted," said Wilkes Coach Bill Unsworth. "We wanted to double-cover (Dave) Murphy and watch Juniata's first down running game and still get good pressure on the quarterback."

Wilkes had scored first when Mann caught a 27-yard pass from Scarborough with :51 left in the first quarter. The opening points followed a short Juniata punt after the Indians had held the hosts at the one yard line on the Colonels previous possession.

Like in the Western Maryland win, the Tribe defense once again came through when it had to. Along with the first quarter goal line stand, the Indians came up big with five minutes to go in the game to preserve the tie.

Wilkes had first-and-goal from the three and apparently scored on second down, but an illegal motion penalty moved it back to the seven. A pass completion made it third-and-three when DT Tom Yeager caught Dave Massi in the backfield to force a field goal attempt.

JoJo Mantione's 23-yard try never got past the line as cornerback Mark Dorner streaked from the outside to make the block. Dorner had intercepted a pass at the Juniata 10 yard line in the third quarter to stop another potential Colonel scoring drive.

"Mark's an outstanding athlete," praised Ash. "He made a couple very key plays for us."

Opposite Indian cornerman Larry Robb also came-up big himself. Early in the fourth quarter Graziano ran 60 yards with a Wilkes reverse before fumbling at the JC 3. Robb recovered to add another name, and play to the defensive scrapbook on Saturday.

Wilkes gained 216 yards in the second half but couldn't find a way to break the tie.

Juniata's Mike Schaffner missed a 43-yard field goal on the last play of the game. The desperate effort to avoid the tie was in vain, as it fell short.

The tie score carried to the total yardage statistics that finished 343-341 in favor of the Tribe.

Both teams remain tied for eighth in the MAC race. Juniata hosts Delaware Valley at College Field on Saturday in a conference contest.

Lady Spikers Roll On

by Joe Scialabba

The Juniata women's volleyball team continued to roll along with two victories last week.

The Indians, now 21-3 and ranked number one in the nation in Division Three, wiped-out visiting Messiah on Tuesday and then beat hosting Susquehanna on Thursday.

On Tuesday, the undefeated Falcons were no match for our ladies as coach Larry Bock's squad won three games to zero. Winning easily, 15-6, 15-5 and 15-11.

At Selinsgrove, the much-improved Crusaders made the Indians work hard for a 3-0 win. The game scores were 15-11, 15-11 and 15-4.

Juniata hosts Middle Atlantic Conference rival Elizabethtown tonight in Memorial Gym, Kennedy Sports & Rec Center.

This weekend the Indians travel to Williamantic, CT, to compete in the Eastern Connecticut State Invitational. Juniata will face tough competition from Brooklyn College, a part of the Juniata Classic field, as well as Ithaca and the host school. The eight-team tourney goes Friday and Saturday.

The Indian Spikers will once again be on the road for a match vs. Dickinson on Thursday night, October 25th.

Women's Field Hockey Rebuilds

by Scott Snyder

The Juniata women's field hockey team just couldn't seem to come out ahead last weekend as they tied Lycoming 1-1. Assisted by Sue Occiano, Polly Oliver made the single JC goal; her first of the season, the team's fifth. Leading the team in goals are Lisa DiMarzio and Sue Occiano with two apiece.

The team this year is young and small; mostly freshmen and sophomores and only 17 members, compared to last year's thirty. This doesn't leave much room for injury or reserves for the Lady Indians which is one of the contributing factors to their disappointing record. There are three more games remaining in the season that ends October 21 at home against Wilkes.

The team plans to boost their 1-8-2 record at home this Saturday at 2:00 PM as they face Gettysburg.

World News Update

by Cindy Duick

PEKING — Capitalist-style market forces and reduction of government control were announced Saturday by the Communist Party Central Committee as China's new plan of urban economy. The new economic structure has been called the most important decision since December 1978 when the Central Committee adopted a new incentive for China's 800 million peasants.

The economic changes will increase and encourage competition between a million more independent state owned enterprises. Government functions will be separated from economic functions which will be left to plant managers and operations guidelines. The changes will limit central planning, extensive consumer subsidies, and prices will be determined by supply and demand. The Chinese also hope to expand foreign trade, encourage more youthful Government technical experts, retire older managers and increase urban wages according to productivity.

LONDON — A mood of unease has been enveloping Britain throughout the normally politically calm month of October. The State Opening of Parliament is in two weeks time and yet Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's government is faced with national conflict and apprehension. The country is plagued by a violent miner's strike, a plunging stock market, the decreasing value of the pound, new Irish terrorist attacks and threats, and an all-encompassing uneasiness about unemployment.

Despite these facts Mrs. Thatcher holds her House of Commons majority, and public opinion polls show that her party retains the edge and she emerges as the most credible and eligible leader. A cabinet minister stated, "There is no doubt in my mind that we have

by Beth Gallagher

The second phase of Juniata College's $20 million Century II Campaign was launched Friday, Oct. 19, as President Frederick M. Binder and members of the college's Board of Trustees announced new goals for the campaign.

In kicking-off the new effort, Board Chairman Charles C. Ellis announced that funds raised in Phase Two "will be used to finance the growth of the college's endowment for academic programming, student scholarship needs, educational equipment and program enrichment.

"The Board of Trustees has set a course of action to ensure Juniata's well-being and excellence for many years to come," Ellis said at Friday afternoon's press conference in Juniata's Shoemaker Gallery. It was also announced Friday that Joseph R. Good, vice chairman of the Board of Trustess, will serve as General Chairman of the Phase Two campaign and Vincent

J.C. Anticipates Parent's Weekend

by Ginny Krall

This coming weekend Juniata pays tribute to the parents of its students with the 1984 Parents' Weekend entitled, "Growing Together Into the Future."

The Centerboard sponsored event hopes to strengthen the partnership in education that bonds students and their parents. In order to accomplish this goal, the weekend has been structured with funfilled and informative activities. This weekend's aim is to involve the Juniata parents in the total campus environment.

Friday night the activities will begin with a Juniata Band concert which will be presented in Oller Hall at 8:15 p.m. Following this performance, a special coffeehouse will take place in Ellis Ballroom at 10 p.m. Such faculty members as Andy Murray and Chris Peterson will join with several student acts to make this coffeehouse one not to be missed!

Highlights of Saturday's events include "Coffee With the Profs," a lecture by Dr. Ronald Cherry, computer game demonstrations by Dr. Dale Wampler, a chemical display by Dr. Paul Schettler, the President's Reception following the football game and the ever popular Artists On the Hill art-/craft fair. Parents will also be entertained Saturday night with the "Big Band Dance to be held in the Kennedy Sports & Recreation Center gym.

This special weekend will be topped off on Sunday morning with the annual Parents' Association breakfast and the Campus Ministry Board's All Campus Worship service.

The Parents' Weekend Committee is looking forward to a productive yet relaxing weekend. They are encouraging students and parents to attend these specially coordinated activities. Even if your parents are not coming for this event, the whole committee hopes students will participate.

All students are urged to help in the final preparations for this Centerboard event. Anyone interested in helping with the registration or decoration committees may attend the final meeting tonight in Tote at 8 p.m.

Energy Usage Checked

by Kathy Manzella

Energy use is something most of us seem to take for granted here at Juniata. The Energy Conservation Task Force is actively working to make us more aware of our energy usage.

The Energy Conservation Task Force was originally formed during Winter Term of last year. The purpose of the Task Force is to make students aware of energy use and abuse.

Chairperson Matt Seigel reported that this year's Energy Conservation Task Force is working on several different activities. One project they are working on is a presentation designed to make RHA members aware of this energy use and abuse. The RHA members will then be called upon to relay this information to the students in their respective dorms.

The Task Force is also in the process of composing a campus newsletter on the subject of energy conservation. In addition, they are

Mountain Day: Turn the Tables Again

Ever since the Mountain Day procedures were changed in 1979, the Juniatian has been questioning the efficiency of the planning system. Given the rainy weather and poor turnout of Mountain Day '84, the Juniatian finds it impossible to believe that the current system is working feasibly.

As it is, the system isn't fair to all students. Students doing internships or student teaching are unable to go to Mountain Day if they can't plan ahead. This particularly affects seniors who are unable to enjoy their last Mountain Day.

Faculty members are inconvenienced by the current Mountain Day system. Plans for tests and papers are inaccurate and unreliable. Furthermore, students who study for tests only to find out it's Mountian Day either skip Mountain Day or go through the frustration of studying all over agian that night for the test. Either way, their Mountain Days are spoiled.

Finally, current Mountin Day procedures do nothing to prevent partying – the orginal reason for changing the system in 1979. In reality, partying and opportunity for destruction exists to a greater extent. Instead of partying one night before a scheduled Mountain Day, many students party every night until Mountain Day arrives, (i.e. Mountain Week).

Inconvenience, inequity and frustration should not be the intent of Mountain Day. The Juniatian remains firm in its belief that the tables should be turned again: Mountain Day procedures should revert back to the original ways.

"KEEP IT SHORT... REMEMBER THAT'S A LOCAL CALL!"

Letters to the Editor

Dear Editor:

I am writing in response to the recent editorial which expressed concern regarding parking for student vehicles.

To date, 250 vehicles have been registered with Campus Security. Students are permitted to park anywhere on campus except Oller lot, Oneida lot,the Admissions lot, behind Good Hall and upper 18th Street.

There are an excess of 400 parking spaces available to students in addition to street parking on Scott, Oneida, lower 18th, Moore and areas in Shadyside. If one analyzes these figures, it appears as if more than adequate parking is available.

Guaranteed parking, i.e. decals for specific lot or individual spaces is not a viable alternative for a small campus. Even on a large campus, guaranteed parking is not without problems. One could be assigned to a lot or a space over a mile from his/her residence hall or classroom. Such is not the case at Juniata. On our campus, all parking lots are relatively near the college center, the residence halls, and the academic buildings.

The students survey (Students Speak) indicated that not all students are experiencing parking problems. A 50% pro/con response is about what one would expect on an issue of this nature.

I would be happy to further discuss parking on the Juniata College campus. Drop by my office any time.

Thank you,
John V. Linetty

Along Muddy Run

by Linda Ramsey

On the more serious side, "What will they remember us for?" and please don't answer with "Dancing on radiators or throwing food in the cafeteria." Of course, it's important to remember the time you raced kegs down Muddy Run, but is that what you want people to remember you by?

I only raise the question due to the political implications and importance of this election year. The final presidential candidates' debate this past Sunday brought out some important and throught-provoking points.

In president Reagan's four minute wrap-up, he captured the audience's attention (in only a way the "great communicator" can) by explaining his story of the capsule speech he wrote that wouldn't be opened for 100 years. The issue raised was whether or not decisions made today would be remembered as good or bad in retrospect. Reagan hopes re-election will be a positive rememberance in years to come.

Mondale, however, obviously feels that Reagan is just not a strong leader. He referred a number of times to the strength of a leader versus obtaining the knowledge necessary for strong leadership. "I will keep us strong," was Mondale's flat reply.

Does that show of domination include referring to a nation of people as "evil" and "ruthless' (Reagan and Mondale's terms respectively for the Soviet Union) as a single entity rather than a nation of individual people. It seems that both the President and former Vice-President believe that this use of chauvinism used to make us (the United States in this instance) feel stronger and belittle the other guy (or girl in most cases), is necessary. Just don't base your political decision on a 90-minute TV talk show.

On a lighter side, I felt that it was important to realize that President Reagan made a good point in saying that decisions we make today will stay with us and maybe even haunt our future. I know I'll always remember the decision I made about the previous two weeks concerning my study habits. Blowing off studying in anticipation of Mountain Day still haunts me as I try to make up overdue computer programs and speed-read through textbooks.

In restrospect, I'm not sure how others will evaluate my decision, but I'm kicking myself in the pants. But wasn't Mountain Day (when it finally arrived) fun?!? Traipsing out to Greenwood Furnace and enjoying the fresh, fall rain as a relief after the previous sunny days. If only the rain had been continuous throughout the senior women's tug-of-war against the freshmen women, maybe we wouldn't have lost, or at least we'd have an excuse, Embarrassment —NEVER!! Never show signs of defeat. Mondale doesn't, does he? Or were his eyes sunken into his head because he felt strong and knowledgeable. He certainly looked like a wise old owl Sunday night.

Whoever the winner, remember that the outcome depends on your decision. Yes, the future of America is resting on your response. I'm voting – I want to be remembered. November 6th!

The Competence of the Candidates

By David Orth Moore

On foreign policy, Reagan's re-election is dancing on water. The President was not long ago heard as calling the Soviets an "evil empire," and "the focus of evil in the world." Now though, Mr. Reagan has made overtures to these same villans for world peace. Quite a transmogrification (something changed to another form, especially one that is fantastic or bizarre) considering that it took Mr. Reagan almost his entire first term in office to even meet with a high level Soviet diplomat. It is dubious which side of Mr. Reagan will emerge if he is re-elected. Will it be the unpragmatic name-caller who has dominated the White House, and which as recently as September proposed to solve America's troubles by initiating a nuclear war on the Soviet Union? This statement may have been unintentional, but it revealed the president's true sentiment and attitude towards the Soviet Union, and more importantly, his lack of commitment to achieve an arms control agreement. Or will the election time peace-maker extraordinaire who, at the United Nations in September, proposed a 'road map' to ease U.S.-Soviet relations, again emerge as President after the elections?

Mr. Mondale is perceived by over-zealous conservatives as weak in dealing with the Soviet Union. He certainly realizes the troubles in dealing with the Soviets, and has proposed serious negotiations with the Russians on an equal basis of strength. Mr. Mondale wishes to shift the focus of defense spending away from expensive weapons which destabilize the status-quo, and instead beef-up our conventional forces and combat capabilities. Most importantly, however, Mr. Mondale shows the readiness, resolve, and responsibility to deal with the Soviets in seeking a solution to the dangerous nuclear arms race, as well as a verifiable treaty barring anti-satellite and anti-ballistic missile systems.

But the Middle East is the prime area where the administration's policies have consisted of a series of statements of intent with a bungled follow-up. Many Americans seem to forget the humiliation this country has endured during the past 18 months. There have been three successful terrorist bombings on our embassies, along with a long period in which our marines were set-out like 'sitting ducks' to preserve the peace. When it was finally foreseen that this objective was unrealistic (the vast majority of the Muslims wanted the U.S. out of the region), the marines were recalled. It is debatable that the first two attacks could have been prevented, but it is culpable that the third attack occurred; especially after repeated warnings, and reports from the defense intelligence agency that the annex was "highly vulnerable" to attack. Mr. Reagan continues to propose solutions to the conflict, but there are bound to be doubts about our prestige, and the resurrection of a policy that has continually been relegated to a public relations exercise.

Although not covered as widely, Mr. Reagan's policy in Central America has been equally reprehensible. His administration continues to view this area purely as an East-West confrontation. As such, his policy consists of inflaming wars through continued military aid. Cental Americans do not need more guns, they need peace through economic aid. While the administration talks of the human rights abuses in Nicaragua, it has intransigently dealt with the El Salvadorean rightist death squads and government security forces who have, in the past four years, been attributed with the murders of over 42,000 civilians, compared with 200 people murdered in Nicaragua by government forces.

A. Sarni, newly appointed chairman of the board and chief executive officer of PPG Industries in Pittsburgh, will serve as Honorary Chairman.

The Century II Campaign was launched in the fall of 1980 and will extend over a 10-year period. Phase One of the campaign included the construction of the new $4.9 million Kennedy Sports & Recreation Center, which was successfully completed by the time the structure opened for use in January, 1983. To date, the college has raised more than $10.5 million of the $20 million goal established for the Century II Campaign.

The Budgetary Committee reported that the 1984-85 proposed budget of $12.671 million was accepted. From the Executive Committee came a strong recommendation to switch back to a semester system.

The Building and Grounds Committee prioritized its goals for campus improvements.

As a final concern, an Ad Hoc committee was appointed to investigate attrition rates among Juniata students.

Stephenson Named As College Counsel

Juniata College President Frederick M. Binder has announced the appointment of Kay E. Stephenson as the college's new planned giving officer and college counsel.

A native of Tennessee, Miss Stephenson holds a B.A. degree cum laude in Russian and Classical languages and literature and an M.A. degree in Russian literature, both from Vanderbilt University. In addition she holds a J.D. degree from Vanderbilt's School of Law where she graduated in the top 15 percent of her class.

During her studies at Vanderbilt, Miss Stephenson served as associate research editor for the Vanderbilt Law Review. Her experiences in the legal field began in 1981 when she served as judicial law clerk for the Hon. Robert L. Kunzig of the U.S. Court of Claims. Since 1982 she has served as an associate with the Washington, D.C. law firm of Sherman, Fox, Meehan and Curtin, P.C., specializing in estate planning.

In her new position at Juniata, Miss Stephenson will be responsible for planning, implemtnting and maintaining a planned giving program for the college. This will include research, promotion and program development. She will also serve as a resident legal counselor for the college.

In addition, she will work with the Vice President for College Advancement in the planning and conduct of the college's development program, including the current Century II Campaign which is designed to finance the growth of endowment for academic programming, student scholarship needs, campus renovation, educational equipment and program enrichment.

A Taste Of England By An Englishman

By Simon Vaughan

On the wall in my room I have a poster with a picture of some English countryside. In the distance are grassy rolling hills with the occasional hawthorn bush sprouting from a rare sheltered spot. The slopes are split into a jigsaw of fields by numerous dry stone walls and in the valley is a tiny village with perhaps no more than four houses and a church, all made of the same cold, grey stone. A single track road winds past these houses and the isolated red phone box up towards the hills. This is typical of Yorkshire. In summer those hills are green, warm and relaxing. In winter they are cold, wind-swept and forbidding. They are the Yorkshire Moors and cover much of the county which stretches along the northeastern coast of England.

But Yorkshire is far from being all country side, for here also are towns and cities such as Leeds, Sheffield, Huddersfield and Rotheram. These are all names synonymous with industry, for here is the coal and steel center of England. In most there is high unemployment, none more so than Sheffield, whose once famed cutlery industry, upon which much of the town was founded, is now a shadow if its former self.

Across the border from Yorkshire, on the western side, is the great rival, Lancashire. In medieval times, the two fought out their rivalry on the battlefield, in the Wars of the Roses which ended in 1485 at the Battle of Bosworth Field. Today the battle field is of a more gentle kind; the cricket pitch. Men of both counties have worshiped the game for centuries and now fight it out at Old Trafford in Manchester and Headingley in Leeds.

Manchester is one of the main industrial towns in Lancashire, the other being Liverpool. In England, Liverpool is probably more famous for its football team which has won the English league seven times in the past nine years, in which time it has also won the European championship four times, the league cup four times and the F.A. cup once. It is undoubtedly the most successful team in England. In the U.S. however, the city is probably more famed for its music, for it was here that the most famous group of modern musicians originated—The Beatles. The club where they began, the Cavern, is now once again holding live performances of up-and-coming rock bands. Who knows, perhaps we might see another Beatles.

The real story of Liverpool though is a sad one. It is a tale of redundant docks and the resulting high unemployment and poor housing conditions. In what was called "the summer of discontent" three years ago, when a number of major towns in England suffered from riots, Liverpool witnessed some of What A Mountain Day!

By Scott Snyder

Mountain Day 1984 was held on Tuesday of last week to the dismay of many, not because it was Mountain Day but because it was rainy. Although many beautiful days were passed up before the final choice, all in all it was a good time.

The turnout for Mountain Day was not as large as previous years – probably due to the rain. Those who did make it out to Greenwood Furnace found the day's activities to be both spirited and fun-filled.

The first activity of the day was the Sherwood-Cloister football game. Cloister dorm, under the leadership of co-captians Mark Howanitz and John Kun, won the contest. The next game between North and East/Off-Campus turned into East versus Off-Campus as there were few North participants, another reminder of the rainy day.

After the football games it was time for lunch, which included Juniata's favorite outdoor food: Chicken-n-Ribs.

Next came the Tug-of-War. After a long and hard struggle seniors beat the freshman with strong crowd support. In the women's Tug-of-War the juniors beat the freshman.

The final traditional Mountain Day activity was the faculty-senior football game. This year the seniors provided two full teams, offense and defense, which alternated between series, whereas the faculty palyed with the same team throughout the entire game. The seniors, guys and girls, proved to be a tough match for the faculty. In the end the scoreboard read: Seniors 14 - Faculty 6. It was the first win for seniors in 5 years!

After the senior-faculty game was over the crowd began to head for home, but this proved not to be the end of Mountain Day '84. On the way home several faculty members and seniors stopped at a wayside bar call McMurtries. Here the good nature and "spirits" of Mountain Day continued as it will continue in the hearts of all those who attended Mountain Day '84.

Seniors Mark Kirkgasser and John Shields gave it all they had to carry the seniors onto victory. In the meanwhile, Linda Ramsay stays true to her men by cheering them on.

Despite the poor weather, spirits couldn't be dampened as students played volleyball and other sports throughout the day.

Cloister Residence Hall captured the first contest of the day by beating Sherwood in a rough football game.

Alumni Support Fund Campaign Underway

by Sherri Reed

Juniata's Annual Support Fund Phone Campaign has been going on since early October. Alumni, faculty, and students, all on a strictly volunteer basis, have been calling former Juniata graduates and asking them to support the college with some type of financial gift. The money raised by the phon-a-thon will be part of the $275,000 Annual Support Fund goal for this year. The deadline to reach this figure is June 30, 1985. Contributions will go towards scholarships and financial aid for students, educational materials for classrooms, student services, and other general expenses.

The phon-a-thon is held in the fall because volunteers have more time to call alumni, and Fund organizers have a better idea earlier of where they stand with their June goal. The calls will end this week; however, area alumni phone campaigns in Huntingdon, Altoona, State College, Pittsburgh, and Philadelphia are scheduled for later this term. Winter follow-up phoning and spring reminder letters are also planned.

The 1984-85 Annual Support Fund chairpersons are Hank and Edna Eisenhart of Millcreek, both class of '44 graduates. Their responsibility is to make alumni aware of the need to help current Juniata students, thereby investing in higher education. The phone campaign is a direct, effective approach to getting this point across and is expected to play a major role in achieving this year's fund raising goal.

JS Bach Featured At Organ Recital

A recital of organ music by Johann Sebastian Bach will be presented at Juniata College Tuesday, Oct. 30 at 8:15 p.m. in Oller Hall.

The Rev. John R. Rodland, a native of Altoona and minister of music at the West Side Presbyterian Church in Ridgewood, NJ, will be the featured performer. He holds Master of Sacred Music and Master of Divinity degrees from Union Theological Seminary in New York. While at Union, Rodland studied organ under Alec Wyton.

In addition, Rodland has studied organ in West Germany and has served as organist of St. Christopher's Church in Frankfurt. While at Juniata, Rodland was organist and choir master at the First Lutheran Church in Tyrone. He then served as minister of music at the First Presbyterian Church of Rutherford, NJ.

Along with his wife, Joanne Harris Rodland, Rodland is co-director of the multiple-choir program of eleven choirs, a chamber orchestra and a concert series at the West Side Presbyterian Church. The Rodlands are members of the American Guild of Organists, the Choristers Guild, the Presbyterian Association of Musicians and the American Guild of English Handbell Ringers. Rodland performed as guest organist with the Juniata College Concert Choir during one of its Christmas Concerts.

The first half of the Oct. 30 performance will be devoted to the organ works of Bach in celebration of the 300th anniversary of his birth. The remainder of the recital will feature various works by French and American organists including Jean Langlais, one of the greatest living French organists.

Rodland is an ordained minister in the United Presbyterian Church and a member of the Presbytery of the Palisades.

The recital is sponsored by Juniata's Visiting Artist and Scholars Committee and will be open to the public. There is no charge for admission.

the worst violence of all. It was in a region called Toxeth and many of the buildings were either destroyed or rendered useless. One year later, at a school in the same area, there was another riot, smaller this time, among a group of school children who all but destroyed their school. These are extreme cases but they demonstrate the unhappiness in Liverpool at the present time.

Partly due to this and partly due to the present political situation in Britain as a whole, the political scene in Liverpool has attracted much of the nation's attention in recent months. Here there is a Labor-controlled Council, where as the government is Conservative. Recently, the Council attempted to pass some new acts which the government refused to do. To blackmail the government into accepting these acts, the council threatened to pass a budget of massive public spending which would have the effect of bankrupting the city. To avoid this, the government was forced to allow the acts to pass. This was considered a huge victory for the Labour party but is typical of the battling which goes on in Britain today.

"The Seventh Seal" is this week's feature film sponsored by the "Language of Film" class. It will be shown at 7 p.m. in A100 on Tues. October 30. All Juniata students and staff are welcome to attend this free showing.

Cliff Cleaners Make Progress

by Esther Compher

If you've been up to the Cliffs since last Sunday, you've probably noticed that something is different. It may not be really obvious, but, take a second look. Yes, "Chris & Cindy" is faded, "Kemp" is almost gone and "Harold" is history.

Thanks to some twenty-five students from Scouting Service Club, Laughing Bush, and Caving Club, some of the graffiti has been removed and some has been drastically faded. It was a tough job, but with the use of some oven cleaner, muratic acid, wire brushes, and lots of water, in a couple of hours, the Cliffs were beginning to shape up.

Visitors to the worksites on Sunday were impressed with the project and offered words of praise and encouragement to the workers; this included students and townspeople alike. The two most frequently asked questions were "How are you doing this?" and "Is it working?" Well, the answers are oven cleaner and elbowgrease and yes!

It's coming along, but the Cliffs still need a lot of work.

Another "Cliff cleaning" is being tentatively planned. Anyone interested in helping is urged and invited to contact the Scouting Service Club, which can be reached at Box 1041.

Campus Ministry Board

The Campus Ministry Board is a fifteen-member organization whose purpose is to assess and meet any spiritual needs of the college community. At the end of each year, the present Campus Ministry Board members nominate and vote on potential future members, who then go through an interview process before joining the club.

Activities sponsored by the Campus Ministry Board include at least one coffeehouse per term, Sunday evening worship services open to all Juniata students, and special All-Campus worship services on Parents' Weekend, Chirstmas, and Easter. "Cotton Patch Gospel", the off-broadway musical which was presented in Oller Hall on September 23, was also a CMB sponsored event. In addition, the club has this year initiated Wednesday morning Celebration, a time for scripture reading and fellowship, every Wednesday at 8 a.m. in the Faculty Lounge. Everyone is invited to participate in this weekly event.

Social Service Club

The Social Service Club has a membership of about 45 students, and is designed to help those in the community, both young and old, who are less fortunate.

One of the biggest projects undertaken by the club is the Big Brother/Big Sister Program. This involves "adopting" a child from Huntingdon by doing different activities with them each week on a one-to-one basis. On Wednesday, October 24, the Social Service Club held a Halloween party for the Big Brother/Big Sister participants to give the students a chance to meet the children.

This year, about 50 people on campus are involved in this program. The club is also sponsoring an Adopt-A-Grandparent Program at the Huntingdon County Nursing Home located near J.C. Blair Hospital. Students from the college will go to the nursing home each week, where they will visit with their "grandparent", one of the home's residents. Anyone who is interested in participating in this program, should contact Karen Reap at 643-9904. Other Social Service Club activities include the Cystic Fibrosis Bowl-for-Breath, Special Olympics, volunteer services to local service agencies, donations to the Huntingdon Food Bank, and horseback riding for the handicapped.

RHA Happenings

by Wendy Williams

Tussey-Terrace RHA holds meetings for anyone interested every Monday at 8:15 p.m. Discussions include hot dog sales, movie night, upcoming lectures, and parties. Every Wednesday evening from 9-11 p.m. a film is shown rotating each week from violence to comedy to a serious nature. On Thursday evenings hot dogs are sold for 50¢. The RHA also has held two lectures, including Julie Keehner who gave a talk on sexual awareness, and Jay Buchanan who spoke on time management.

Finally, tutors will be available Thursday evening to give help to chemistry students for those with "hourlies" on Friday.

Editor's Note:

The Juniatan is starting a weekly update of all clubs and organizations. If you have information to contribute or an idea for a club update, please contact The Juniatan, Box 667.

Energy

planning a display for the Ellis lobby which will allow students to see first hand just how much energy is needed to power a single light bulb.

One of the key projects the Task Force is planning is a campus wide energy audit. This audit will be carried out with the help of Penn-Elect. The members of the Task Force in cooperation with the Residential Life Staff will be conducting these audits on a room by room basis in the various dorms.

The Energy Conservation Task Force is also discussing the idea of having a mandatory "lights out" hour possibly during dinner time. By doing this the Task Force hopes to cut down on the electric bills. Presently the electric bill for the fall and spring semesters is between $12,000 and $13,000. During the winter term this figure rises to roughly $18,000.

In addition Seigel added that students should be more aware of their energy use and abuse because it directly affects their tuition. Each year a certain part of our tuition is used for the electric bills. The more electricity that is wasted, the larger the amount that is taken from our tuition to foot the electric bill.

Anyone interested in working on the Task Force should contact Matt Seigel at Box 1589. Everyone is welcome to join.

reached the crunch - the crisis, if you will - in the life of this Government."

WASHINGTON — Congress has raised questions about how much the White House knew about possibly illegal CIA (Central Intelligence Agency) actions in Nicaragua after seeing disclosures on the subject Saturday. According to members of Congress and their aides, one of the disclosures, a classified Defense Agency report, said that as early as 1982 American-backed Nicaraguan guerillas were committing political assassinations. One report dated July 1982 says rebels' activities included, "attacks by small guerrilla bands on individual Sandanista soldiers and the assassination of minor government officials and a cuban advisor."

A director of the rebel Nicaraguan Democratic Force said in an interview Saturday, "We do believe in the assassination of tyrants. Some of the Sandinistas are tyrants in small villages."

DOHA, Qatar — Yasir Arafat announced to Palestinians last Friday that his PLO (Palestine Liberation Organization) will move closer to Egypt as Cairo moves away from the Camp David Accords set up between President Anwar el-Sadat of Egypt and Prime Minister Menachem Begin of Israel in September 1978. Arafat said, "Sooner or later the Egyptian people will destroy the accords."

ATLANTA — Federal Health officials predict that lung cancer will soon be the nation's leading cause of cancer deaths among women replacing the leading cause now, breast cancer. The centers say, "Approximately 85 percent of all lung cancer cases are contributed to cigarette smoking. The lung cancer epidemic is especially tragic because it is preventable."

WASHINGTON — William Penn and his wife Hannah were named honorary United States citizens Friday through a resolution passed by Congress and signed by President Reagan on the 303rd anniversary of the date King Charles II gave Penn a tract of land north of Maryland. The English Quaker couple were honored for their contributions to America and join only two other individuals to be given honorary citizenship: Sir Winston Churchill of Great Britain and Swedish diplomat Raoul Wallenberg, who saved thousands of Hungarian Jews from Nazi death camps.

V103 Ranks No. 1

by Dave Peters

More than 80 percent of Juniata's students prefer V103 to other area stations.

This was the result of WKVR-FM's music and listernership preference survey conducted last Wednesday, Oct. 10. WXLR followed in second place with 11.4%. WQWK and Q-94 rounded out the top four stations. This marks the seventh consecutive term that V103 has been the choice of a majority of the J.C. campus.

The once-a-term survey was first conducted in May 1981, showing that then WKVR-FM, V92 had 19.2% of the campus listenership. At that time a concentrated effort to make WKVR the Voice of Juniata College began, with V103's percentages rising steadily since that time. Program Director Shelly Guest commented that through the importance placed on daily requests along with the results of the survey, V103 has managed to maintain a dominate spot in the J.C. community radio market.

Billy Joel came out on top of the Juniata Top 35, replacing Michael Jackson. The popularity of The Cars, Prince and Bruce Springsteen was reflected in their position, rounding out the top four. Genesis, Madonna, Journey, Huey Lewis, Lionel Richie and Billy Idol finished the top 10.

Field Hockey Season Grinds to a Close

by Mark Royer

The Juniata women's field hockey season has come to an end.

The year ended with two defeats at home last week; a 3-0 loss to F&M on Wednesday and a 3-0 loss to Gettysburg on Saturday. The team managed only 5 goals during the season, en route to a 1-10-2 record.

Along with some tough competition within their division, the team's situation was compounded by a lack of numbers. Only 17 women were on this year's team compared to 30 on last year's squad.

The team will finish the year with a post-season tournament on November 3rd and 4th. Individuals will then be selected from the participating teams to continue in All-Star play. Hopefully some members from Juniata's team will be chosen for this honor and end their season on a positive note.

The Juniata women's volleyball team continued to play outstanding volleyball last week picking-up eight more victories. The Indians are now 29-3 on the season and remain ranked number one in the nation in the NCAA Division Three.

Juniata, under coach Larry Bock has not lost a match in the month of October and has lost only one 15-point game. The Indians last lost a match on September 29, at Illinois Benedictine.

The past week, the Indians white-washed Elizabethtown 3-0 in Memorial Gym, 15-7, 15-6 and 15-8.

Then, after the Thursday night match they left for Willimantic, CT, for the Eastern Connecticut State Invitational. It would prove to be the Indians' tournament.

On Friday night, Juniata swept past Brooklyn College, Rhode Island College and Salem State by identical 2-0 scores.

Saturday was much the same as the Indians put-away Central Conn. State, Ithaca, Eastern Conn. and Sacred Heart University all in two games apiece.

The seven straight wins gave the Indians a 7-0 sweep of the single round tournament. Eastern Connecticut finished in second place.

Juniata's Ekanong Opanayikul was named to the all-tournament team.

Tonight the ladies travel to Carlisle to meet Dickinson. Juniata hosts an invitational tournament on Saturday. The action begins Saturday morning at 9 a.m. in the Kennedy Sports-Rec Center.

Indians Balance Attack To Scalp Delaware Valley

by Joe Scialabba

Juniata played the spoiler role to perfection last Saturday as the Indians knocked Delaware Valley out of the Middle Atlantic Conference title race with a 24-17 victory. 1,500 fans cheered the Indians on at sun-drenched College Field.

The win stretched the Tribes' non-losing streak to three games and raised the Indian season record to 2-4-1 and 1-3-1 in the MAC. Del. Valley is 3-4 and 3-3 in the league.

Just how big was the win?

"It was our biggest win in two years," exclaimed Indian Coach Rob Ash. "It has been two years since we beat Delaware Valley, 12-10 here at home, and to beat them this time is just super. This was our first win over a contending team since 1982 and the victory is a crucial one. We've been close all year; now we have beaten a very good team and not just played well just to lose. We have proven we can once again compete with anyone in the conference."

The Indians earned the victory with a balanced offensive attack that gained 210 yards rushing and 166 in the air. It kept coming at the bigger Aggies all afternoon long and a late fourth-quarter drive decided the visitors' fate.

After Dave Dallmer nailed a 41-yard field goal to pull Delaware Valley into a 17-17 tie with 6:04 to go in the game, the Tribe marched 81-yards in 8-plays to win.

With the help of two Aggie penalties, including twelve men on the field on a third down incompletion, Juniata covered the ground with the running game. Running back Bill Stamp and fullback Ian Malee alternated carries until Malee broke free on a misdirection play to score on a 26-yard run.

Mike Schaffner booted his third extra point with just 1:34 left. Schaffner had given the Indians a 17-14 edge early in the forth period on a 27-yard field goal.

The Aggies moved to midfield in the final minute but ran out of downs at the Juniata 45 yard line. QB Gary Kemberling hit receiver Dan Glowatski twice for first downs, but the combo failed to pull it out. Juniata cornerback Mark Dorner, who covered the senior Glowatski one-on-one all day long, broke-up two passes.

The Aggie split end caught 11 passes for 132 yard — a performance that may overshadw Juniata's Dave Murphy, who, despite double-coverage still caught two passes, both for touchdowns.

Quarterback Mike Culver, who rushed for 71 yards and was 12-of-12 for 166 yards passing, hit Murphy with scoring tosses of 4 and 63 yards in the first half. Murphy has now set the Juniata record for career touchdown receptions with 21.

It was 14-14 at halftime as Del. Valley had a 1-yard run by Jim Wilson and a 15-yard scoring pass from Kemberling to RB Joe Bello in the second quarter.

In the second half the Tribe defense held the guests when they had to. Delaware Valley ran 13 plays on its first third-period possession but was stopped on fourth down and two at the Juniata 17 yard line. In the next series Dallmer missed a 30-yard field goal attempt that would have put the Aggies on top. The missed kick was followed by a 60-yard drive by the Indians that Schaffner capped with his 37-yard field goal.

Juniata hosts Lycoming on Saturday to conclude the home schedule. The Parent's weekend kickoff is 1:30 p.m.

Soccer Splits Week

By Lauralee Snyder

The men's soccer team continued its two game winning streak last Wednesday as they defeated Lebanon Valley at home, 2-0. The two goals were scored by freshman Jon Gillette in the first half and sophomore Nat Burnside in the second.

The kickers just couldn't keep the ball rolling, though, as they lost a close game to Albright on Saturday 5-4. The Juniata offense was going strong and managed to score four goals within the first twenty minutes, making the score 4-1. Unfortunately, the team couldn't keep up the pace throughout the game. With the score at 5-4 and twenty minutes left in the second half the team couldn't catch up.

Tom Visosky, the team' leading scorer with eight goals, had a terrific day scoring three out of the four goals. Sean Ruth, the team's captain with a season total of four goals, kicked in the fourth.

Overall, the team's record stands at 2-11 with three more games to go. Juniata hosts Shippensburg this Saturday, Parent's Weekend, at 2 p.m. The last game of the season will be played at home gainst Bloomsburg on Monday, October 29 at 3 p.m.

World News Update

by Cindy Duick

NEW YORK — American relief agency officials have been overwhelmed by the number of offers of help they have received to aid the famine victims in Ethiopia. Along with governments offering food, transport planes and other aid, in an International effort, donations are being offered by thousands of Americans.

"The telephones have been ringing constantly," said James Sheffield, president of the United States Committee for Unicef. From last Thursday to this Sunday there have been about 5,000 calls keeping staff members and volunteers working past midnight and over weekends. "Many of them are in tears when they call. They've seen the television footage and say it's horrible and something should be done, Sheffield adds. The donations run the gamut, from $5. in weekly allowances offered by two girls to $10,000. offered by a publisher.

Despite the aid, the situation in Ethiopia remains grim. Six-million Ethiopians are threatened by starvation and as many as 100 people die daily, according to the United States Agency for international Development. The Reagan Administration said it will provide $45 million in food aid, the 10-nation Common Market, $23.4 million in food and medicines, and the Dutch government, $3.8 in famine relief. The Ethiopian relief Commissioner was to come to the United Nations to plead for more aid.

WASHINGTON — Tougher policies on terrorists as advocated by Secretary of State Shultz is gaining support according to White House and State Department officials. Such policies could include sudden use of military force, although the officials acknowledged no certainty that the United States would be ready to take that kind of pre-emptive or retaliatory strikes pro-

J. C. Book Collection Examined

The rare book collection at Juniata College has long been considered one of the finest in the nation, but a research project now underway at the college is determining exactly how unique this collection is.

Dr. William T. Parsons, professor of history and director of Pennsylvania German studies at Ursinus College, is currently researching the contents of Juniata's 12,000 volume collection which includes almanacs, books, pamphlets, handwritten manuscripts and letters and several other publications of predominately Pennsylvania German origin. Considered a leading authority on Pennsylvania German cultural history, Parsons is developing a complete annotative bibliography of Juniata's collection.

"I hope to have the bibliography published as a two-volume reference manual with listings based on the language in which the rare books are written," Parsons said. The publication will include brief descriptions of each piece in the collection so researchers can decide if it will be valuable material for a specific project.

A large portion of the collection is comprised of books and other publications that belonged to Abraham Harley Cassel, a Pennsylvania German farmer who had a passion for literature and knowledge. "He collected things long before anybody thought they had any value. Like most of the Pennsylvania Germans, Cassel saved everything because he never knew when he might need it," Parsons said.

Cassel was one of the original students of the Brethren Free

Retention Committee Formed To Examine Attrition Rates

By Dave Peters

The recent rise in Juniata's attrition rate has been the focus of much attention this year. Varied effects are felt by everyone as a result of these changing figures. In an attempt to go beyond the customary negative effects of a higher than normal attrition rate, Juniata President Frederick M. Binder has set up a committee to study the situation on a local, state and national level.

Chaired by Dr. Arnold Tolden, Dean of Student Services, the Retention Committee is made up of administrative, faculty and student representatives. Julie Keehner, Dr. Constance Collins, Gayle Dreider, Prof. Ruth Reed, Prof. Ron Cherry, Prof. Jim Donaldson and student representative Carolyn Cleary are committee members, and a resource group to the committee consists of Jay Buchanan, Larry Bock, and Kevin McCullen.

Meeting for a day long session at the Patrick House on Oct. 23, the committee did some review work on the issue and looked at several proposals to remedy the situation. Demographic statistics for the area along with graduation rates at different institutes were studied. Also looked at were the characteristics of students who persist in college, those who drop out, and characteristics of colleges with high retention rates. Studies linking persistence to learning, orientation and advising, and to general education were reviewed along with studies directed specifically to Juniata College.

Depending on the studies reviewed, the graduation rate at Juniata would be expected to be between 58 and 66%. According to figures given by Dr. Tilden, Juniata has done a good job of staying in the higher end of this range. In 1980, 60% of the class graduated, with a steady increase in the next three years to 67% in 1983. In 1984 however the rate dropped off to 63% of the class. The Retention Committee is specifically looking into this drop. "The Committee is dealing with the interruption of the positive trend of retaining more students," stated Dr. Tilden. A report is due to be completed and presented to Dr. Binder by the end of the fall term, and will consist of three parts.

A statement of the problem in terms of data provides the following information: the number of college age students will diminish 37% between 1979 and 1995 in Pennsylvania; the population of high school students that go on to col-

Squelch the tension!

Juniata students have always been fortunate enough to enjoy a trusting rapport with the Huntingdon Police Department and Huntingdon community. However, recent events have stimulated enormous concern over the continuation of this relationship.

Friction between the two started with the new parking regulations and speed enforcement traps installed in September of this year. Since then, Huntingdon Police have been harassed on numerous occasions, the latest of which occurring on the night of the Pizza Hut delivery man robbery. Given these events, Huntingdon Police aren't looking too favorably at Juniata students right now.

Juniata students are now faced with a particularly dangerous situation that's partly self-induced. If we, as students, don't watch our step, we risk losing our unique social privileges. That's an exorbitant price to pay for a few pranks.

The Juniatian can't emphasize enough the importance of restoring good relations. Showing the Huntingdon Police a little respect and gratitude for the services they provide is step number one to that restoration. Abiding by Juniata regulations is step two.

It is imperative that all J.C. students do their part to help squelch the tension — before our social privileges are squelched.

Road Trips

by Andrew G. Davis

The absence of the Road Trips column from last week's edition of the Juniatian was a direct result of an unexpectedly extended weekend road trip, which preempted the writing of this article. Such are the ironies of life. The activities of the weekend did, however, serve to reunite me with an item most invaluable to the road trip, an item which I thought for a long time that perhaps I'd never see again. This item was my Geological Survey Map.

I should stress that this is a map with a capital "M," for it is not simply one Geological Survey map, but nine adjacent maps cut and taped together, a gift from my father several years ago, borrowed, lost, lent again, and, finally, returned to its place upon my wall. With the Huntingdon Quadrangle as the central map, a considerable amount of area is covered; as far as Mt. Union to the east, Williamsburg to the west, Cassville and Trough Creek to the south, and Saulsburg and Spruce Creek to the north, a large area, but not too expansive for the imagination to comprehend.

Maps are obviously an essential tool to anyone who spends any amount of time on the road, and the U.S. Geological Survey topographical maps are among the best made. Other topographical maps are published by such agencies as the Department of Defense, the Dept. of Agriculture, the Tennessee Valley Authority, and the U.S. Forest Service, though the major publisher remains the Geological Survey, working through the Dept. of the Interior. The Survey's standardized maps are called quadrangles, each one named after the most prominent feature (usually a town) on the map. Quadrangles are bordered on the top and bottom (north and south) by parallels of latitute, and on the right and left (east and west) by meridians of lontigude. The most common map size manufactured is the 7.5 minute series (each degree of latitude is divisible into 60 units called minutes). A quadrangle, then, covers an area of something like 5 miles by 10 miles.

Unlike road maps, topographical maps show vertical spacial relationship as well as horizontal area. By using various combina-

Binder Grinder Apologies

Dear Editor,

Last Tuesday and Thursday evening, Binder's Grinders took orders from students and did not fill them. This is inexcusable. As president of the Juniata Executive Club, I would like to take this opportunity to apologize to all of those students who did not receive their hoagies. We have made every effort to correct this problem and will ensure that this will not happen in the future. We will be closing operations for this term after this evening but will return to serve the campus the second week of next term.

Again, I would like to apologize and I hope that everyone will continue to support us in the future. If you have any suggestions for Binder's Grinders, please feel free to drop a note in my box, number 622. Thank you.

Quarantined -- No Vistors!!

Dear Editor,

Humans. God gave us the most unique gift possessed by any creature; the gift of companionship. We have the ability and necessity to hug, kiss, feel, touch, laugh, cry, and most importantly to love.

One of the basic assumptions at Juniata is that students learn best and most by doing; both in the classroom and out. We believe that the complete college experience offered at Juniata entails more than the passive digestion of knowledge... We believe that the student exists and functions as a 'whole' and cannot be divided into parts (i.e., intellectual for classroom and social for other college activities)."

Could you imagine painting a landscape picture on the wall of your dorm room and not being able to show anyone? Could you conceive buying a new album and wanting to listen to it with your best friend, on the stereo you worked all summer for, and not being permitted to? What if you were not allowed to relax in you dorm room with some friends to discuss the up-coming election?

Under some circumstances, entering a person's room could force the R.A. to write you up, as well as the person who lives there. Why? The administration has coined this policy as "room freeze." Every student at Juniata College has the right to choose not to have visitors in the room, twenty-four hours a day for the entire school year, provided he or she is also willing to give up this privilege. Under clause two of the Visitation Policy, in the Path-finder, the following statement reads, "Students are permitted to have visitors in their room only if their are no objections from their roommates."

So let this be a warning to every student residing on the Juniata College campus; make sure the person you choose to live with cares enough about you, never to put such a socially destructive restriction on your life. Likely, you will not live four more important or more exciting years in you life.

Sincerely,
Annette Molines

A Ridiculous Series?

Dear Editor,

I would like to take this opportunity to respond to Mr. David Orth Moore's ridiculous series of articles entitled "The Competence of the Candidates."

I found it quite offensive to read such biased and one-sided literature under the guise of such an objective sounding title. I suggest that if the author is going to support Mr. Mondale's Presidential candidacy that he openly do so, and entitle such a column appropriately.

Furthermore, I suggest that the Juniatian, which is funded by campus monies, either remain apolitical or at least objective. I refer in part to the political cartoons which have been featured so prominently next to the editorial each week. I am sure that "The Juniatian's" advisor, an active demorcrat, has had nothing to do with the use of "The Juniatian" as a cheap means to convey campaign messages in favor of the democratic candidate. I doubt that a majority of Juniata students are pleased, especially since it was found in a recent mock election conducted by South's R.H.A. that seventy-five percent of us support President Reagan.

Concerning the content of Mr. Moore's column, I found the distorted and narrow interpretation of facts to be quite alarming. While he is certainly correct in saying that a reduction of the budget deficit will be given top priority by this nation's next President, he is incorrect in saying that "it will ultimately become necessary to raise taxes in order to make a large dent in the budget deficit." That is one of a number of viable alternatives to a deficit reduction, and the one most often chosen by the democratic party. This method tends to be very short term in effectivenss because tax hikes curb consumption, thus slowing economic growth, and ultimately leading to less tax revenue but greater demand for government funded services by the citizens trapped in a sluggish, depressed economy. I prefer Mr. Reagan's plan which is to cut federal spending and stimulate the economy in order to reduce the deficit.

To address the religion issue, I applaud Mr. Reagan's comment that "religion and politics are necessarily related," and I would accuse anyone of being a simpleton if he were unable to see the relationship. With this nation's moral and legal codes based upon the Ten Commandments put forth in the Bible, and a majority of our citizens believing in the existence of a greater being, it is utter silliness to think a true separation exists between church and politics. Did the REVEREND Jesse Jackon not campaign for the Democratic Presidential nomination? Does the aforementioned not support the Democratic Party's selected candidate and also urge political and CHURCH constituency to do the same? Both parties clearly play the "religion game" of politics Mr. Moore.

Concerning the "American Dream," I would like to proclaim it alive an well for all Americans, including those less fortunate in our society. It exists for any citizen of this great country who is willing to work hard and to look for the path to success that is right for that person. Just ask any of our Olympic athletes, I'm sure they would agree. Our government owes no citizen the accomplishment of the "Dream," it simply owes us the right to achieve it on your own.

On the issue of foreign affairs, it is always easy to criticize the incumbent candidate for any unfortunate situations which may have occurred during his administration. I ask — Where is the strength of Mr. Mondale's proposed foreign policy, especially in regard to the Soviet Union? He has publicly stated that he would negotiate ONLY for a mutually verifiable freeze on nuclear weapons. No weapons system exists upon which both countries could reach a VERIFIABLE freeze agreement. I therefore assume that Mr. Mondale lacks a grasp of reality in this very important area.

Given the time and the opportunity for space in this paper, I would carefully refute Mr. Moore sentence by sentence. Mr. Mondale's plan contains so many weaknesses and shortcomings that I shudder to think of the condition this nation would be in under an administration headed by him. It is no wonder that less than fifty percent of democrats support him. Mr. Reagan has provided this nation with much needed strong and positive leadership for the last four years. We should be thankful that, according to most reliable sources of pre-election information, the voters of the United States will choose the right candidate in 1984.

Sincerely,
Darin J. McLean
Chairman, College Republicans

Pranksters, Please Grow Up!

Dear Editor,

As chairperson of Parents' Weekend and a member of Centerboard, I am writing to express a deep concern over the recent destruction of my committee's bulletin boards.

Thursday night, after my subcommittee spent hours creating a scheduling board for the weekend, it was ripped down. We also had several collages that hung around the mirror in Ellis Lobby destroyed. We were not the only group that experienced this problem. Laughing Bush and Centerboard also had their club bulletin boards torn down.

These boards were put up for the student body's benefit and I'd hate to think "mature" college students felt the need to destroy them. Maybe the people responsible for this destruction should take time to consider the time and effort put into the decorating of these areas of Ellis. These bulletin boards are not only informative, but add color to Ellis' otherwise dull walls.

Inconsiderate acts such as these are disrespectful to other's property not to mention childish. Hopefully in the future my college peers will not feel the necessity to again demolish club bulletin boards.

Sincerely,
Virginia Krall
Parents' Weekend Chairperson

Unannounced Mountain Day Is The Original Way

Dear Editor,

Your editorial on October 25 states that, "the Juniatian has been questioning the efficiency of the (Mountain Day) planning system" since it change, and it does seem to be a perennial topic for an editorial. The first one on October 23, 1980 (not 1979) was written without checking the facts, and the most recent one followed that pattern so I think it is time to write an editorial response to set the record straight.

In the first place, the "poor turnout" this year on a day that in spite of the weather forecasts to the contrary was rainy was at least 643 people. If you read the objective Mountain Day article from the October 23, 1980 Juniatian you would note that the planners thought they had set a record with over 500 people, because the prior record attendance had been only in the mid 400's. In fact, the attendance that year was 779. That landmark jump of over 300 was followed by 1981 with 840, 1982 with 848, and 1983 with 818. Certainly compared to recent years 1984 was a poor turnout, but compared to "announced Mountain Days" it still wins by 200.

You imply that students on internships and student teaching cannot attend Mountain Day because it is unannounced. A quick check of professors who have survived both types of Mountain Days reveals that attendance by these groups was never a given, and has in fact been the exception rather than the rule.

Your statement about students going "through the frustration of studying all over again" says very little for the value of studying they were doing and even less for the quality of learning that has taken place. If they had really learned anything during the course and the night before, they wouldn't forget it in one day, and would appreciate another day to brush up on the details.

"The original reason for changing the system" was not to prevent partying! Certainly a number of students who carried the partying to excesses the night before an announced Mountain Day knowing full well that it would have to be postponed because it was already pouring rain gave us cause to reconsider the whole philosophy of what Mountain Day was becoming. It was, in fact, becoming a day that everyone planned to do the things that they had been putting off –that paper that was due the next week, or the research at Penn State, or the shopping in Altoona. Quite frankly, the faculty were worse at this than the students, and the attendance figures before and after the change bears this out. The partying was simply another student manifestation of the same syndrome. The students (and faculty) who try to outguess the Committee are merely looking for an excuse for not doing the work they know they have to do, or for an excuse for partying they are going to do anyway, but it's nice to blame Mountain Day.

"Mountain Day procedures should revert back to the original ways". Those of you who have never experienced an announced Mountain Day (which includes all present students) should be aware that the "unannounced Mountain Days" is the original way.

Lastly, may I speak to the fact that people are "inconvenienced". It's true! Besides the ones you mention, the Hallmark Food Service, the bus company, and the Physical Plant crew are inconvenienced by having to be prepared on only about 18 hours notice. The committee is inconvenienced by planning an event, without knowing the date. The date selectors are inconvenienced by having to watch three or four weather forecasts a day from at least three different sources. If I may paraphrase the Reverend Dr. M. Andrew Murray, in this regimented world of ours isn't it worth the inconvenience to have this bit of serendipity in knowing that one day in the Fall all of the unpleasant things we have to do will be set aside for a few hours of fun and relaxation. No matter what day we choose whether announced or unannounced some people are going to have to miss it. Most administrators and support staff can only attend for a few hours and some never get to attend. Some students will always be on field trips or student teaching, or attending athletic events. Is that enough reason to do away with an experience that is completely unique to Juniata College, or even to change it back to the system where it becomes just another Saturday in the middle of the week.

Dear Vandals

Dear Editor,

I would like to comment on the destruction that took place this past week to the bulletin boards in Ellis.

Much time and effort goes into a bulletin board, whether it is just stapling poster board and pictures or whether it is something more elaborate.

The person or persons responsible for this act should have given some thought to this as well as to the purpose of a bulletin board. It

The Competence of the Candidates

by David Orth Moore

In these past weeks, this writer has attempted to broaden Juniata readers to some of the issues confronting the Presidential candidates. Believing that this election is perhaps most crucial for our nation's development, it has been of this writer's utmost concern to uncover the many fallacies and glamourizations of the current administration.

Undoubtedly the most dangerous and explosive of all the issues is our superficial feeling of content that leads to a nationalistic fervor which blinds our pragmatism. Mr. Reagan has been credited with America's new found patriotism. His election is solely centered on such flag waving and chanting rallies instead of dealing with the future, and its problems. Patriotism was a missing commodity during the late 1960s and 1970s, but its recent revival ignores many gruesome facts about our foreign and domestic policies, and worse yet, romanticizes our President's folly. Who else, but the "great communicator" could escape criticism for the lame four minute monologue of the last debate, or the "joke" about bombing the Soviets?

Mr. Mondale has consistently been attacked as liberal, and not representing America's best interests. America's interests do not lie in extremism, as is the current party platform of the Republicans, but in moderation. Mr. Mondale would like to keep America strong by making us internally, as well as externally, strong. He recognizes the dangers of the new moral right, the budget deficit, and our utter dependence on foreign loans to sustain our recovery. And he is wise enough to realize the need for increasing federal funds for education at all levels so to put the "smarts" back into Americans. Lastly, and most importantly, he understands the concepts of fairness and humanity to all our fellow man, and wishes to uphold the rights of those 36.3 million Americans in poverty.

Voters, beware the initial pangs of emotion which dismiss concerns of the future by glamourizing and illuminating the present. We have problems, right here in America: the budget deficit, the issue of religion and state, poverty, failing foreign policy and complacency.

Embrace the future by preparing for it, not ignoring it.

Some thoughts and observations on college life in general:

First I must correct an error from my previous column on napping. I gave as an example of a spontaneous nap one which occured in Dr. Mitchell's chem lecture. Dr. Mitchell was kind enought to point out that this is not spontaneous napping but actually another variation: induced napping. My apologies.

How about these Genesee commercials? "The great outdoors in a glass." Funny, when I think of Genesee I think of lounge parties; crowds, darkness, loud music and sticky floors.

Too bad human beings don't have digestive systems like cows. Then there would be no way they could stop us from smuggling food out of Baker Refectory.

Speaking of food, isn't it nice that

Restore the Happy Balance

by T. Glen Bonder

In the past, we as Juniata students have enjoyed an equitable relationship with the Huntingdon Community and the Huntingdon Police Department. This year, however, that balance appears to be in jeopardy.

There has been an increased amount of police harassment by students. This problem culminated when officers suffered verbal abuse when responding to the Pizza Hut Delivery man robbery last Wednesday. As a result of a few individuals' childish acts, the disposition toward Juniata students has moved to the unfavorable side.

As students, we need to be aware that the college is considered a large residence in the community. We are not immune to any of the laws of this community or state.

Any student should realize that it is not in our best interest as students to provoke or abuse the Police Department. These policeman work for this college's benefit as much as any individual in the community. We should be relieved to know they are available when needed and we should respect them in that regard.

It is unfortunate that this problem has come into existence but we must try hard to regain the happy balance we have enjoyed for so long. A situation such as this could jeopardize the entire social atmospehere of this campus. I urge you to prevent this from happening.

Here we are, fast approaching November - the usual bitter Huntigdon weather as yet unknown - the thermometer nearly busting 81°. Yes, the unseasonable weather, as well as the change in seasons, is a perfect time to pick up a cold that will last until the ides of March. And that's the last thing most of us want, especially those of us who suffered the trials of hay fever this summer.

Unfortunately, there is no cure for the common cold. Yet even though illness must run its course, there are many ways to relieve annoying symptoms and to make yourself feel a lot better-or at least comfortable. It seems that evryone has their personal cure for the common cold: plenty of liquids, chicken soup, hot tea, a vaporizer, Vic's Vapor Rub and saunas often top the list. Garlic, chili peppers and horseradish are also helpful, but less well known. (No wonder!) Because these hot foods make your nose run and eyes water, they may actually be more effective at breaking up a runny nose than a lot of the more popular remedies. By the way, you don't have to chomp on garlic cloves to get the medicinal benefits, it is still helpful as an ingredient in cooking or in capsule form.

Of course, the shelves of drug stores and supermarkets as well as the local Sheetz's are filled with medicinal aides to relieve cold symptoms. But sometimes the expectorants, antihistamines, 12-hour cures, nighttime pills and daytime drugs fade into a blur and you don't know quite what you need. The following explanation of cold cure categories may be helpful the next time you find yourself wheezing and sneezing your way to a drug counter.

- *Stuffy noses are cleared by Nasal Decongestants.
- Expectorants help sufferers cough more effectivly by loosening mucus in air passages.
- *Runny eyes and noses are dried up by Anticholinergics.
- *Sneezing and watering eyes are relieved by Antihistamines.
- Bronchodilators ease breathing by enlarging bronchial passages.

Now the next time you have a cold and are popping a handful of pills, at least you'll know what they're supposed to be doing!

Looking At Nuclear Freeze: A Viable Option

by Stephanie Swartz

The second annual Huntingdon County Freeze Walk took place on October 13th with approximately fifty participants and over $1,000 in pledges. Juniata students, professors and their children, together with residents of Huntingdon marched 5 kilometers in an effort to raise funds for the Pennsylvania Campaign for a Nuclear Weapons Freeze.

Evident among these types of marches is the growing concern American citizens have for the current administration's dismissal of past arms negotiations, and its ineptitude and disregard for achieving any meaningful arms talks, combined with U.S. military involvement in Central America.

From the beginning, the Reagan Administration displayed very little willingness to assume arms negotiations with the Soviets. President Reagan described Soviet leaders as "liars" and "cheats," and communism as "a sad, bizarre chapter in human history whose last pages are even now being written." Now in 1984, Reagan has begun urging for better relations with the Soviet Union, and previous public statements from top administration officials about "limited," "winnable," and "survivable" nuclear war would appear to have been forgotten. Still, administrative ineptitude, such as Reagan's unwitting blooper about bombing the Russians in five minutes, has done nothing toward advancing peaceful arms settlement.

In fact, current plans for increased military build-up would appear to indicate the very disregard with which the Reagan Administration views negotiation with the Soviets. They have undertaken a five-year program of military expansion costing $1.6 trillion.

This program includes: further development of the MX missile and the B-1 Bomber; research on the stealth bomber, Trident submarine with D5 missiles; deployment of intermediate range missles in Europe, thousands of cruise missiles on bombers and ships; a 600 ship navy and the production of nerve gas. In terms of reached agreements, the United States became again, in 1983, top arms supplier to the Third World. Extending beyond our own borders is the development and research of anti-satellite weapons. The five-year and $26 billion research program proposed by the Reagan Administration for providing a base to a long term network of anti-ballistic missiles, space lasers and battle stations has been treated skeptically by experts who question the program's effectiveness and practicality.

In the Pentagon's "Defense Guidance" publication for fiscal years 1984-1988, it is stated that, in case of a nuclear war, the U.S. strategic forces "must prevail and be able to force the Soviet Union to seek earliest possible termination of hostilities on terms favorable to the United States." In the midst of the administration's proceedings toward a "favorable" nuclear war, arms control negotiations would appear to have lost priority.

Intermediate Nuclear Forces and START negotiations began in 1981-'82 but reached no agreements. At these talks, the Administration proposed a "zero option," whereby the deployment of Pershing II and cruise missiles would be halted in exchange for Soviet dismantling of SS-20 missiles. This would have left British and French nuclear forces, together with nuclear-armed aircraft, in Western Europe. The Soviets rejected it.

Next, the Administration offered a "build-down" plan which would have scrapped given numbers of nuclear warheads and allowed still more accurate missiles with "hard-target capability" to be built and deployed. Ironically, it is exactly these "Euro-missiles" which have caused increased tension on both sides.

Upon the deployment of the U.S. Euro-missiles in 1983, the Soviets suspended all nuclear arms talks. In 1984, both sides suggested holding talks on space weapons. While the Soviets wanted to concentrate primarily on the banning of space weapons and their testing, the Americans wanted to discuss strategic arms, little about the space weapons and completely rejected a ban on testing. The talks never took place.

There has been no strategic arms treaty reached and ratified since 1972, and if talks do not resume before November, Ronald Reagan will be the first president since Eisenhower not to have achieved any nuclear arms agreement with the Soviets, and the first since Herbert Hoover not to have met with top Soviet leadership. Edward Rowney, chief strategic arms negotiator, has said, "We've tried in the Reagan Administration to get away, to distance ourselves, from making arms control the centerpiece of our foreign policy. To some extent, we've succeeded."

One implication of the U.S. military build-up is increased military intervention into other parts of the world. Rather than having pushed for peaceful settlement in Central America, U.S. intervention has turned Central American into a battleground for U.S.-Soviet conflict. Thursday, October 25th, marks the year anniversary of the U.S. invasion into Grenada. Together with Grenada, the United States has extended itself into the affairs of El Salvador, Guatemala, Chile, and Nicaragua. A proposed $261.9 million in military aid will be sent to Central America for 1985 (as opposed to $11 million in 1980). A permament military presence has been stationed in Honduras and Panama; U.S. military pilots participate in combat support reconnaissance flights for the Salvadoran army.

The premise is that peace can be won through military superiority and strength. It is evident, though, that the arms race and related intervention into other nations has brought both the Soviet Union and the United States further away from possible negotiations.

In the interim, they have begun to lose the respect to allied nations, and weakened internal conditions through the cost of military expenditures to the economy; as in, for example, the $170 billion budget deficit of the U.S.

Evidence shows too, that achieving peace through military superiority may not be viable in the future. Should our economy worsen and increased defense spending no longer be feasible, the United States would have no other alternative but to turn toward negotiations, its leverage reduced. There is one option which has not been forgotten and which is supported by a considerable number of the American population. That is, beginning arms negotiations with the Soviets now, and working toward a mutual, verifiable freeze, before we overextend ourselves economically, internationally, and even further reduce our chance for peace.

Caper Steals Pizza

By Betsy Halsey

An unknown individual stole Pizza Hut deliveries and insulated carriers valued at $60 after knocking down delivery man Jeffry McMasters outside of Tussey dorm last Wednesday evening.

Although there are no suspects at this point, police and Campus Security are still investigating the incident.

According to Jack Linnety, Director of the Physical Plant, the offending individual wore a Halloween mask and seemed interested only in the pizzas. He pointed out however that the incident is not just a theft, but a robbery which is a more serious offense.

Information concerning possible suspects should be directed to Campus Security or the Huntingdon Borough Police.

"The Camp David Peace Process: Problems and Prospects" was the topic of Ambassador Herman F. Eilts' lecture Tues. Oct. 23. This was part of the program of lectures given through the Baker Lecture series which is offered to the Juniata campus.

Ambassador Speaks On Peace Process

By Avril Opinante

Ambassador Hermann F. Eilts gave a lecture called "The Camp David Peace Process: Problems and Prospects" on Tuesday night, October 23, in the Faculty Lounge. This lecture, like the previous Baker lecture, was well-attended by the Juniata community.

In the course of his lecture Ambassador Eilts, though a Republican, criticized President Reagan for not continuing the peace process begun by President Carter. He said that after the three and a half year neglect of the Arab-Israeli peace process, the peace process will have to recover lost ground.

Mr. Eilts went on to say that it is necessary that we "shift signals," if the peace process is to be revived. We also must think not in terms of the Camp David autonomy talks but instead create an international conference similar to the Geneva conference, in which the "mischief-making capability of the Soviets would be minimized." Then they "would not be a part of the substantive negotiations but would be available when the parties reach impasses."

Duke Lab Program Explained

By Mary Beth Ritchey

Non-international off-campus study options are not pretty phrases, but this is the clearest way to describe the multitude of short, medium, and long term programs offered by various departments for Juniata students who are looking for something a little special on their POE. These programs are offered individually by each department and comprise everything from internships to splitting your college career between Juniata and another college. The first NIOCSO that I will cover is one near to my own heart; the Duke University Marine Laboratory program which I will be leaving for this spring.

There are actually two programs involving Duke's Marine Lab; a short term, 5-week program and a medium term, whole semester program. Both options offer a Juniata junior the opportunity to study in a totally different environment. The five-week program is a once over lightly romp through the marine sciences, which is valuable to any environmental science, zoology, botany, or even geology major. It is held during the spring term and is open to four to six students per year. One major advantage of this program is minimal disruption of your schedule; it is possible to spend the first half of spring term at Juniata, perhaps taking an independent study or credit by exam course.

The semester program is open to one student in the fall and one student in the spring. It involves taking an entire semester's course load; i.e. 5 courses over fifteen weeks, which unfortunately leaves you with 1.5 Juniata units to make up. The courses offered vary from year to year; this year's include Biological Oceanography, Geological Oceanography, Physiology of marine Animals, Chemical oceanography, and others.

Neither program carries additional tuition, the only added expense is transportation to North Carolina. In actuality, you pay two terms' tuition to Juniata to spend one semester at Duke. The five weeker is particularly popular, so interested students should visit Dr. Gooch as soon as possible for more information.

J.C. Club Corner

by Lisa Greiss

Laughing Bush

Have you ever wondered where the key fishing spots are or where the best place is to go on a day-long hike away from the J.C. campus? Laughing Bush, Juniata's outing club, may be able to provide the answers to these questions. In addition to giving advice to students concerning the outdoors, the main goal of this 40 member organization is to provide outing equipment for the campus community at reasonable rates. Equipment which may be rented includes: tents, canoes, backpacks, cookware, stoves, and cross-country skis.

The club also plans trips throughout the year which are open to all J.C. students. This coming weekend, some of the club members are going backpacking on the Mid-State Trail which is located about 15 minutes from campus. During the winter, Laughing Bush hopes to sponsor weekly cross-country ski trips, weather permitting, to the cliffs or the farm. In the springtime, the club is tentatively planning a whitewater rafting expedition on the Cheat River in West Virginia.

Anyone who enjoys the outdoors and is interested in joining Laughing Bush is invited to attend the meetings which are held evey other Wednesday at 7:00 p.m. The Laughing Bush office is located beside the bookstore on the bottom floor of Ellis College Center.

Circle K Club

Juniata's Circle K Club has about 30 members and is dedicated to helping those with mental and physical problems and the elderly in the community. Circle K performs essentially the same functions as Key Club, a high school service organizatin, only on the college level. The Kiwanis Club carries out the same services as Circle K beyond the college years, and provides support and assistance to the Circle K Club.

The Circle K Club performs various service activities in the community during the year. About two weeks ago, some club members visited the Pediatrics Ward at J.C. Blair Hospital to make Halloween decorations with some of the young patients. Around Christmastime, the group plans to travel back to the Pediatrics Ward and maybe visit some of the elderly at the nursing home. During this time, Circle K may also sponsor a raffle as a fundraiser and donate some of the profits to charity. The M.S. Marathon, which is probably the club's biggest project, will tentatively be held January 11-12. Participants in this event do various activities, such as playing volleyball, playing cards or board games, rocking, or dancing, for 24 hours to raise money for multiple sclerosis. Prizes are given away to those individuals who collect the most money from their sponsors.

Meetings are held about every other Monday night at 6:30 p.m. in the club office which is located next to Laughing Bush's office in Ellis College Center. Anyone is invited to join Circle K and help provide services to the community.

Linguists Convey Benefits

by Cindy Duick

Do you study a foreign language? Do you wish you had? Many of your colleagues here at Juniata do, and have sound reasons and positive ideas about foreign language study.

George Dolnikowski, Associate Professor of Russian and German, along with the help of other language professors, conducted a survey early in the term to find out why 113 Juniatians study French, German, Spanish or Russian presently offered here.

The most important reason cited by students for foreign language study is TRAVEL. A major factor in these students' decisions to take up or continue with a foreign language is the possibility to travel, to visit, or to study abroad.

The Juniatians' second ranked response corresponds with Professor Dolnikowski's statement "The foreign language study contributed to the broadening of the students intellectual horizons; it should therefore be undertaken freely and for its own sake." The students who study French, German, Spanish or Russian do so because they ENJOY it and because they want to IMPROVE their fluency in the language.

A third important factor for students here is that foreign language study will help in there CAREER. Fields such as Business, History, Natural Sciences, Political Science, Teaching, Public Relations and Pychology were cited. Knowledge of foreign languages can also be beneficial to students involved in search at either the undergraduate or graduate level. (Most graduate schools, by the way, require one foreign language for a master's degreee and two for a Ph.D.)

Putting together these student attitudes we uncover the real advantages of foreign language study. The advantages of studying a foreign language here or abroad are to have a better chance at being accepted into grad school or at finding suitable employment. The study abroad factor should not be played down, as Dolnikowski urges, "Students who go abroad always benefit from it."

A further point of high importance is culture awareness. This was a fourth reason that Juniata students noted. This is important for all of our futures, for as the world grows closer through events and media broadcasting it is vital that we broaden our views to learn to accept and to try to understand cultures which are different from our own. Narrowmindedness is a severe disadvantage to everyone's potential to understand more about the world in which we live, whether we are Chinese, Cuban, French, Russian or American. We could all get along so much better if we made more serious attempts at understanding one another. Unfortunately the indications of possible narrowmindedness are evident at Juniata where we have only about 130 students enrolled in the limited number of foreign language courses offered.

Finally, Juniata students find that they are learning more about English through their foreign language studies. Foreign languages provide students with opportunities to study their native language in more detail using analogy, comparison and analysis. As the German poet J. W. von Goethe said, "He who does not study foreign language does not know his own tongue."

JC Band Presents Concert

by Steve Creps

Last Friday and Saturday evening the Juniata Band presented its annual Parents Weekend Concerts. Under the direction of Associate Professor of Music, Ibrook Tower, the band appeared for the first time in complete uniform. The uniform consists of a navy blue blazer, a white shirt, a black bowtie, and gray pants.

The concert started with a march written by Pierre Leemans, "Marche Des Parachutistes Belges," which means March of the Belgium Parachuters. The march included an oboe solo played by Scott Chaffee and a piccolo duet by Patty Kreuzberg and Kathy Geurin.

The concert continued with a composition which is considered one of the greatest works ever written for concert band, "First Suite in E for Military Band." It was composed in 1921 by Gustav Holst. "First Suite. . ." consists of three movements, "Chaconne," "Intermezzo," and "March."

The next piece was "Pageant" by Vincent Persichetti. It was followed by a Robert Russell Bennett arrangement of Geroge Gershwin tunes, "Gershwin: A Medley." Songs included in the piece were "Rhapsody in Blue," "Strike Up The Band," "Wintergreen For President," "Embraceable You," "The Man I Love," "Liza," and "I Got Rhythm." The concert closed with the final movement from Berlioz's "Symphony," 'Apotheose.'

WARSAW — Three members of Poland's Interior Ministry were charged Saturday with the kidnapping, eight days earlier, of a pro-Solidarity priest, Rev. Jerzy Popieloszko. The Polish Interior Minister, General Czeslaw Kiszczak, announced that one of the officers confessed he had killed the priest, but this could not be confirmed. The priest's whereabouts are not known and the area where the abduction apparently occured has been searched but revealed nothing.

SAN BERNADINO, Calif. — A 15-Day-old baby girl, with a severe birth defect, was given a new chance at life last Friday when she received a baboon's heart in a 5-hour operation at the Luma Linda University Medical Center. Doctors performing and monitoring the operation, termed a "bold surgical effort," were pleased with the post-operative results although the baby remained in critical condition in the intensive care unit — standard procedure for any open heart surgery patient. The baby, known as Baby Fae, had been born with hypoplastic heart syndrome in which the left side of the heart is smaller than the right side. She almost died on her sixth day of life, and because of the lack of a suitable human donor, a heart of a baboon between four months and one year of age was used after extensive compatibility tests.

ALBANY — Joan Mondale told hundreds of cheering supporters that the polls which show that her husband, Walter Mondale trails President Reagan by at least 10 percentage points will be proven wrong on November 6.

JC's Young Republicans Prepare for Election

The Young Republicans, one of Juniata's newer organizations, has been busy increasing the political awareness of its members and preparing for the upcoming election.

On Thursday, October 25, Dr. Earl Kaylor spoke to the club about the history and development of the Republican party. He emphasized that the GOP has always stood for small federal government. Reagan's long term plan is to shrink the federal government's role in the daily lives of the American people. With the exception of the many reforms during Democrat Franklin D. Roosevelt's administration, most of the political reforms since Lincoln's administration have been instituted by Republicans.

The Young Republican club here on campus is affiliated with two national organizations and is actually two clubs in one: The Huntingdon County Young Republican Club and the Juniata Division of College Republicans. The College Republicans are the larger and more active organization. Darin McLean, president of the Young Republicans, also serves on the Pennsylvania State Executive Board of College Republicans. The executive board, which consists of 12 members representing colleges such as Bucknell, Swarthmore, Penn, Elizabethtown and Penn State, meets 3 or 4 times a year to discuss campaign strategies and determine the general direction of their campaign strategies and determine the general direction of their efforts.

Here at Juniata, the 40-member Young Republican club has been preparing for the November 6th election. Club members ordered "Fritz-buster" tee-shirts as well as Reagan-Bush buttons that light up and play the "Star-Spangled Banner." Darin McLean said the group's major project will be providing transportation for people who would otherwise be unable to get to the polls. Of course, this is a non-partisan project.

After the election, McLean says the Young Republican club will not cease to exist. They currently have tentative plans for an overnight trip to Washington, D.C. The club will continue to meet and will strive to remain aware of the elected officials actions. Anyone who is interested in joining the club is welcome to attend the next meeting or contact secretary Tracey Rosenberg.

American Ballet Performs at JC

by Carol Connell

The second program in the 1984-85 Artists Series was presented Monday, October 22, with a performance by the American Ballet Theatre II. This company, under the direction of its founder, Richard Englund with assistance by Jeremy Blanton, displayed a comprehensive look at classical, romantic and modern dance to a crowded Oller Hall.

Originally named the Ballet Repertory Company, the troupe, acting as a second company in the Ballet Theatre Foundation, was formed twelve years ago to represent the program material of its predecessor, the American Ballet Theatre. Performing with the A.B.T.'s style and quality, the ABT II also represents the Foundation in those cities that could not otherwise accomodate such a large dance company. In addition to specializing in educational programs to promote enthusiasm for dance, the ABT II also serves as an educational experience for its members, many of whom begin their professional careers in this troupe.

Opening the curtain on a still pose inspired by Bouvier's lithograph, 'Le Jugement de Paris,' the ABT II began the evening's performance with a piece entitled "Pas des Deesses." Featuring Susan Cummins, Monique Irish, Victoria Pasquale and Brent Phillips as the figures in the artwork, "Pas des Deesses," which was choreographed by Robert Joffrey, was comprised of a series of short sketches. The women, in traditional ballet costumes, displayed their talents in virtuosic sections, assisted by Phillips. While maintaining a feeling of formality, the dances also presented a gamut of emotions that were effectively complimented through the accompanying music by John Field. Following the showcase solo sections, the women and Phillips returned briefly to the opening pose and then moved into a closing still pose that ended the section.

The next section of the performance, preceded by an intermission, began with the piece entitled "Fragment," featuring the music of Igor Stravinsky. The first part of this three section work, Great Chorale, employed nine members of the ABT II, in a gymnastic style of modern interpretative dance. The following untitled section, using a collection of 'Clarinet Pieces,' demonstrated mime-like movements as performed by a solo woman. A mocking variation of this section by a solo male was then followed by a piece depicting three women and a man dancing in different tempos. "Allegro" closed the section with the full cast further displaying modern interpretation of this highly disjointed and polyphonic music.

Following a brief pause, "Diary" was performed, presenting the music of Judith Lander in a work featuring Susan Cummins and Patrick Corbin. This thought-provoking contemporary work offered expressive solos for both dancers and a final combined effort in a love song setting, displaying reverse sex roles.

A second intermission led into the final section of the performance entitled "Jigs 'N Reels." Employing primary colors to distinguish the three groups of dancers, the company displayed modern variation on folk dances. The accompanying music, occasionally reminiscent of Mussorgsky's Pictures At An Exhibition, provided an appropriate setting for these Celtic-inspired dances. A Maypole dance, contrasted by a display of a variety of styles and a lively jig, concluded the entertaining and pleasurable performance.

On January 17, the Ellis Humanities Series will present the next program in the 1984-85 Artist Series, the performance of the Alard Quartet.

"Marjoe," a 1972 film, will be shown as the last feature in the "Language Of Film" series. It is a true account of Marjoe Gortner, a young evangelist with a rock-style of preaching. In a documentary vein Marjoe also discusses his life as a con-man in the "religion business."

This film will be shown on Tues. Nov. 6 at 7 p.m. in the Science Center room A100. All films are free.

Rare Books

School and bequeathed one-third of his collection to Juniata College. The college was founded in 1876 by Brethren scholars. The rest of the Cassel collection went to an Illinois theological seminary and the Historical Society of Pennsylvania.

Other portions of the rare book collection came from Martin Grove Brumbaugh, former president of Juniata and governor of Pennsylvania during World War I. An avid collector of literature, Brumbaugh donated the collection's first volumes in 1899. He also coordinated the acquisition of Juniata's portion of the Cassel collection by personally choosing the volumes that are now in the college's collection.

W. Emmert Swigart of Huntingdon, also a noted benefactor of the college, donated many volumes and provided funds to house the rare books.

The value of the entire collection has not yet been assessed, but according to Parsons, it includes "the finest collection of letters and manuscripts by the founders of the Brethren church in America, to be found anywhere in the world." The most important part of the collection is the Sauer Bibles, the first American bibles to be printed in native European languages.

The project is in the second of three years it will take to complete. Parsons, who teaches a full course load at Ursinus, usually comes to Juniata every third week during the academic year and every week during the summer.

Parsons is the author of "The Pennsylvania Dutch" and numerous articles which regularly appear in such publications as "Pennsylvania Folklife," a monthly publication.

The research project is partially funded by the Friends of the juniata College Library, with other support from special funding.

Attrition

lege is decreasing — out of the 50 states, Pa. ranks a low 48th in the number of students that choose higher education; there is an increased rate in attrition as a general trend locally and nationally. An analysis of factors that the committee feel are contributing to Juniata's decreased retention rate follows, and the report ends with a series of proposals designed to promote and increase student persistance.

"The committee's work is not over with this proposal," stresses Dr. Tilden. Other questions are to be studied, with other proposals likely to be forthcoming.

Pulchritude does not exist below the surface of the derma.

JC's Nieto Conducts Courses

Both courses are part of the seminary's Latino Theoligical Studies Program and will be taught in Spanish. A member of the Juniata faculty since 1967 and a native of Spain, Nieto is a graduate of the University of Santiago de Compostela and the United Evangelical Seminary. He recieved his Th.M. and Ph.D. degrees from Princeton Theological Seminary and has studied at Presbyterian College in Northern Ireland and Pontifical University in Spain. Kheener Named Associate Dean Juniata College President Frederick M. Binder has announced the promotion of Julia A. Kheener to associate dean of student services and director of residential life. Miss Kheener has served as assistant dean of student services for residential life since joining the Juniata administration in June, 1982.

In her new role, Miss Kheener will be responsible for the college's total residential life structure, including programming and operational functions. She will continue to be responsible for student orientation, women's programming, health and food services.

Prior to joining the Juniata administration, Miss Kheener served as a residence coordinator at the University of North Carolina at Charlotte. She also served as conference coordinator and assistant residence hall director at Western Illinois University. She has an extensive amount of experience in the fields of residential life, human and leadership development and alcohol use and abuse.

"Since coming to Juniata, Miss Kheener has been a very effective administrator," Dr. Binder said. "This promotion is a reflection on her past accomplishments and a vote of confidence in her administrative abilities."

Student Votes in Favor of Reagan

Outside the Student Union at California State University at Northridge, Katrina Parker, a 22-year-old student, hands out ads for a speed reading course. She wears an aqua and pink spattered t-shirt, part of her own line of sportswear, which she also sells. She hopes to start an office cleaning service soon.

All those enterprises, however, meet only part of her tuition expenses. For the remainder, Parker, who comes from a black, Democratic middle-class background, relies on federal student aid.

And this prototypical Walter Mondale supporter plans to vote for Ronald Reagan.

"There's no way I could vote for Mondale," Parker says. "He's like a little wimp to me."

The president, on the other hand, is "of good character," a "strong leader," and "sincere."

Parker is part of a phenomenon that has emerged as one of the major stories of the '84 campaign-the tidal wave of popularity the 73-year old Reagan is riding among young voters, especially those under 25 years old.

Virtually all the major national polls show Reagan with a strong lead over Mondale among 18-to-29-year-old voters.

The president's advantage swells to overwhelming proportions in surveys of under-25-year-old voters. In some of the polls, they give Reagan his largest margin of support.

"The Democrats don't offer hope for the future like Reagan," explains James Bozajian, 18, a UCLA student. "My parents loved (John) Kennedy. I think Kennedy inspired young people much the same way Reagan does today."

Danny Hill, 20, a Los Angeles City College student, describes himself as "from a second-class background, trying to make it into first class." He thinks his chances of accomplishing that are better under Reagan than Mondale.

Since 1980, Reagan has abolished student Social Security benefits, proposed cutting other student aid programs by as much as 50 percent, tried to eliminate the U.S. Department of Education, supported tax breaks for segregationist colleges, presided over a 20 percent decline in student aid budgets, sought to limit laws prohibiting discriminatuion against campus women, and drastically reduced aid to college libraries and black colleges.

Nevertheless, "there has been a steady increase in the values of personal success as against wanting to contribute to social causes," notes Leonard Freedman, a UCLA political science professor and dean of the school's extension program.

Since the early seventies, the number of students calling "philosophy of life" an important goal has declined steadily, Astin said.

In the most recent survey, only 45 percent considered it an importanr value, while "being well off financially" was ranked as the top value by 70 percent.

"Making money has become a philosophy of life in itself for a lot of people," Astin observes.

Reagan's devotion to the entrepreneurial spirit fits neatly with the attitude shift among young voters, Freedman says.

"Reagan doesn't tell people we are in an era of limits. He says the Republican Party is the party of opportunity, and young people are responding to that," he says.

But UCLA's Astin believes students' support of Reagan is less a shift to conservatism, and more a shift away from liberalism.

EDUCATION IS AN END IN ITSELF

Major Bequests Applied

Two major bequests to Juniata College, totalling more than $20,000 have been applied to the college's $1 million program for new academic and administrative computer systems.

According to Juniata President Frederick M. Binder, the bequests from Mary Esther Simpson of Huntingdon for $10,000 and G. Edwin Brumbaugh of Gwynedd Valley for $10,500, will play important roles in the current computerization program. Miss Simpson, a 1912 Juniata graduate, died in January.

The son of former Juniata president and Pennsylvania Governor Martin G. Brumbaugh, Dr. Brumbaugh passed away in November, 1983. A well-known architect, Dr. Brumbaugh built The Cloister residence hall at Juniata and recieved an honorary Doctor of Humane Letters degree from the college in 1974.

"Everyone at Juniata is very grateful to these two generous individuals who were long-tome supporters of the college," Dr. Binder said. "By using these bequests for the computerization program, the funds will serve Juniata students for many years to come."

Juniata's computerization program is part of the ten-year Century II Campaign which is designed to finance the growth of endowment for academic programming, student scholarship needs, campus renovation, educational equipment and program enrichment.

Pizza Hut delivers now? I hear they had a special introductory offer: Order a free large pizza and get $60 in cash at no extra charge.

There's a bear in the woods, Ronald Reagan knows the bear is there. Now I understand why James Watt was the Secretary of the Interior. He was clearing away all our forests so the bear wouldn't have any place to hide.

Looking over the new menu I notice meals such as Chinese Pepper Steak, Hungarian Green Bean Casserole, Spanish Macaroni, and Italian Meatball Sandwiches. Is it really fair to blame other countries for these concoctions? How is it going to affect our foreign policy?

Does keeping Mountain Day a secret stop students from partying the night before? If it does then I have a proposal. Partying and destruction are also problems on weekend nights. Right? Well then, let's keep weekends a secret too. Each term can be scheduled as, say 70 consecutive days of classes. Each day when students wake up they can check with their RA's to see if they have class or not. Sometimes we could have eight or nine days of classes in a row, other times only three or four. Sounds logical to me. Let's hear it from the administration.

tions of such devices are color, shading, contour lines, the land surface, or relief, is represented three-dimensionally on a two-dimensional surface (except for raised-relief maps). U.S. Geological Survey maps employ contour lines, which are imaginary lines following the surface of the land at a series of accurately measured altitudes, usually at an interval of 20 feet of elevation apart from each other. Besides recording all natural features, Survey maps also include man-made features as well: highways, railroads, pipelines, quarries, mines, artificial lakes, houses, barns, and so forth.

I've relied on contour maps for such a long time now that I can't imagine not being able to read them. I suppose it's like someone who drives a standard-shift car for years and years and then can't remotely begin to explain how to use a clutch. These maps are not hard to understand, though as with most modes of learning, it's nearly impossible to describe without some visual understanding. The geology professors, any of the geology students, or the folks at Laughing Bush Outing Service are all people who could explain the finer points about reading topographical contour maps to those not understanding of the concepts involved.

I must personally confess to a profound addiction to map reading. When travelling long distances by car, I habitually must know precisely where I am the whole way, and if in the rare event that I find time at home to pleasure-read, I would often rather leaf through a road atlas than a book or magazine. I imagine it stems from some innate desire to orient your position in the universe, though this preoccupation tends to make me restless. Regardless, you can imagine my exultation upon finally being reunited with my giant Survey map. This event had a secondary ramification: as a strong advocate of function over form, I had a large expanse of empty wall that needed covering, and the map served this function perfectly.

A folder describing topographical maps and symbols is available on request by writing the U.S. Geological Survey, Washington, D.C., 20242.

Swivel Receives Language Prize

Lori Swivel, a senior language major at Juniata College, was the 1984 recipient of the Rebecca C. Barrick Language Prize.

Given annually, the $100 prize is awarded by the Juniata Women's League to a female language student.

The award was presented at the monthly women's league business meeting, held in Baker House last Thursday, where Lori was the guest of honor.

Miss Swivel, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Swivel of Carlisle, is majoring in Spanish and English. She is currently student teaching at Huntingdon Area High School.

Cocaine Use More Common

The teenage cocaine experimenter of the seventies has taken his cocaine habit to college, the experts say, and he may be in trouble.

Cocaine-once labeled the drug of the rich-is now becoming so popular on campuses around the country that researchers call its rapid growth the nation's number-one substance abuse problem.

"Obviously, cocaine use is growing on campuses," says Dr. Ronald Linder, UCLA health science professor. "And the problem is getting worse."

"There didn't used to be any problems with coke. Now there are lots," concurs Dr. John Jones, University of California-Davis senior student health physician. "Use has increased in the last two or three years for sure."

About 25 million people have tried coke, the annual U.S. Government Survey on Drug Abuse reports. Five-to-six million use it monthly, while one-to-three million are severely dependent on the drug.

Though few studies are done on college cocaine abuse, Jones believes the influx of cocaine abusers among college-age abusers similar to the national averages.

"Four years ago, there were none (cocaine abusers). Now 1 percent to 13 percent of our patients have cocaine problems," he reveals.

And a 15-year analysis of cocaine use at Arizona State University by ASU Professor Thomas Dezelsky shows the number of students who have tried cocaine once has rocketed from three percent in 1970 to 4 percent in 1984.

Coke's new popularity may stem from recent college-bound high school graduaters, claims Dr. Lloyd Johnston, University of Michigan researcher.

Along with its euphoric high cocaine users experience paranoia and irritability, often feel depressed, socially isolated and unable to deal with stress and pressure.

Fall Intramurals Are Still Going Strong

by Andy Hiscock

The Fall Intramural program is still going strong, with the regular season competition winding down. There are no clear dominating leaders in any of the four different leagues of play this fall, which should lead to an exciting round of play-offs for the champions to be determined. All four leagues were in action this past week.

Although the weather hasn't been cooperating this past week for the men's I.M. softball season (it was expected), they did manage to get in some games. On Wednesday, October 24th, "South" was able to blast past "The Defenders" (10-8) with 6 runs in the bottom of the last inning. On Thursday, October 25th, "Alvin & the Budmen" had a relatively easy victory over "L.G.C.F.'s" (7-3) with the help of a 6 run 3rd inning.

The I.M.'s women's soccer league was also in action, with a match between the "Spiders from Mars" and "Panique". The Spiders remained undefeated in the league with a lopsided (8-1) victory.

In Intramural Co-Rec Volleyball Division "A" on Wed., October 24th, "Contusions" picked up a victory over "The Team to Beat" (15-9),(13-15),(11-4) to remain only one game out of first place. "Great Expectations" defeated "Laba Laba's" (15-5) and (15-7). Also in action was "Reverse Perspective" picking up a win over "Two-Thirds" (15-9),(15-3) to remain undefeated in Division "A", as well as "Vice Squad" defeating "Red Herrins" (15-12),(15-12).

Division "B" Volleyball also had some matches on Thursday, October 25th. "Staff Infection" defeated "Southern Slammers" by forfeit. "Drunken Slob's" beat winless "Merlin's Minstrels" (15-2),(15-11) with the help of good serving from Kim Ross. And last but not least, "Something Good" defeated "Ball Busters" (15-5),(15-6).

Lady Spikers Take Tourney

by Joe Scialabba

The Juniata women's volleyball team coasted to eight more match wins last week. The Indians remained ranked number one in the nation in the NCAA Division Three poll and boast an outstanding 37-3 record.

Coach Larry Bock's ladies won their fourth tournament title of the year over the weekend when they swept the Juniata Invitational.

The Indians beat Western Maryland, King's, Elizabethtown, U.P.J. and Allegheny easily in two games each in the first round. E-town was again swept in the semi-finals, while Western Maryland was a two-game victim in the championship finals.

Juniata's unbeaten streak in October is still intact as they also defeated Dickinson in three straight games last Thursday in Carlisle.

The Indians have only one single-game loss this month and haven't lost a match since a 2-1 defeat at Illinois Benedectine on September 29.

Juniata hosts the Middle Atlantic Conference Championships tomorrow and Saturday. Ten teams will be playing in the tournament with Juniata as the defending champion, and the obvious favorite to repeat.

The Indians hosted Shippensburg University on Tuesday.

Indian Victory Slips Away

by Joe Scialabba

Juniata did everyting but win last Saturday as Lycoming came from behind to win a 29-28 heartbreaker before a Parent's Weekend crowd at College Field.

Coach Rob Ash's Indians fell to 2-5-1 overall and 1-4-1 in the Middle Atlantic Conference. Lycoming is 6-2 and 5-2 in the MAC.

The Tribe never trailed until the Warriors scored their game-winner with just 51 seconds left in the game. Fullback Joe Parsnik dived for the one-yard touchdown on a fourth down play. Rusty Fricke booted his third extra point to give Lycoming the win.

"It was a discouraging loss," said Ash. "Our defense did a nice job at the goal line on their last drive. We stopped three runs from inside the five yard line; it was almost a great stand."

Lycoming had traveled 76 yards in ten plays to win after the Indians missed on their third chance and put the game out of reach.

Leading 22-14 at halftime, Juniata dominated the third quarter and much of the fourth, but could only score two Mike Schaffner field goals from 30 and 25 yards away. Schaffner missed a 42-yard try before the Warriors winning drive.

"We just didn't have the knockout punch," relayed Ash. "Three times we had a chance to put them away but couldn't. We needed just one touchdown. The key may have been when Dave Murphy got tripped up on the long pass play. We could've broken their backs."

After punter Chris Howell put the Indians on their own two yard line to start their first second-half possession, Murphy caught that Mike Culver bomb for a 73-yard gain to the Lycoming 20, but it was inches away from a touchdown. A 29-14 bulge as Joe Harvey just barely caught an ankle to save the score. Juniata than settled for the first field goal four plays later.

The Tribe scored three first-half touchdowns as Culver ran 10 yards and threw a 28-yard pass to Morgan Johns in the first period for a 14-0 lead. After Lycoming tied with a 22-yard TD play from Larry Barretta to Jim O'Malley and a 3-yard run by Parsnik, Juniata gained their halftime advantage when Ian Malee ran 12 yards to cap a 5-play, 80-yard drive. Holder Rich Howey passed to Murphy on a fake kick for the two-point conversion and 22-14 lead.

After recovering a third Lycoming fumble, Juniata started its second third-quarter possession at its own 17 with a 25-14 lead. On second down, Culver threw across the middle for TE Carl Fekula but the receiver was bumped and knocked down, allowing Ryscavage to intercept and set-up Lycoming at the JC 22.

Two plays later Jeff Robbins had a one-yard TD run. SB Scott Middlekauff caught the two-point conversion pass as he was being hit at the end line. He was ruled inbounds and it was 25-22 with 5:54 left in the period.

"Our turnover in the third quarter was crucial," said Ash, "but it wasn't anyone's fault. Fekula got hit; I thought the ball was in the air, but the officials didn't. It was a costly sequence for us."

"Our offense played it's best game of the year, though. Culver was outstanding as was the offensive line."

The sophomore quarterback, Mike Culver, set new Juniata marks for season pass attempts, pass completions, passing yards and also total offense. His total offense broke that single-game record as well.

Mike Schaffner's two field goals also tied a single-game record.

The Indians travel to Selinsgrove to meet Susquehanna this Saturday.

World News Update

by Cindy Duick

NEW DELHI — Prime Minister Rajiv Gandi lit the funeral pyre of his mother, Indira Gandi, in a traditional Hindu ceremony, Saturday. The late Prime Minister, Mrs. Gandi, had been assassinated three days earlier by Sikh members of her own bodyguard. Tens of thousands observed the funeral ceremony including 100 foreign dignitaries.

Meanwhile, violence throughout India increased. With the death toll over 1,000 army and police forces continue to try to abate the riots and slaying. Upon returning from the cremation, Mr. Gandi instructed army and police authorities to employ "whatever force was needed to check the trouble in New Delhi."

NEW DELHI — Secretary of State, George P. Shultz, leading the American delegation at the ceremony for Indira Gandi, met with the new Prime Minister, Rajiv Gandi, later Saturday evening. Mr. Gandi raised the question of American Arms sales to Pakistan and Islamabad's nuclear program. Mr. Shultz expressed "the sympathy, respect, and support of the United States for the independence and integrity of India.

Mr. Shultz met with the Soviet Prime Minister, Nikolai A. Tikhonov. Mr. Shultz described it as a "good meeting" saying "We touched on a number of topics, including the desire of the United States for a consecutive relationship with the Soviet Union." The Soviet side "expressed similar sentiments."

Business Department Selected for Membership

The Middle Atlantic Association of Colleges of Business Administration has selected Juniata College for membership in the prestigious organization.

Membership in the Middle Atlantic Association, an organization of colleges and universities that have significant programs in business administration, is selective. The organization provides member institutions with a vehicle for exchanging valuable information regarding trends in business education.

Noting that membership in the association is an honor, Juniata President Frederick M. Binder said that the affiliation will benefit Juniata and its students. "Through our membership in the Middle Atlantic Assoication of Colleges of Business Administration, Juniata will be able to enhance academic programs in the business administration department by exchanging ideas and information with scholars throughout the country," Dr. Binder said. "By selecting Juniata for membership, the Middle Atlantic Association is expressing confidence in our business administration program."

Children Celebrate Halloween

by Scott Snyder

On the afternoon of Wednesday, October 31st the ghosts and goblins of the Huntingdon Alfarata Elementary School arrived at Juniata. It was time for the annual Halloween party sponsored by the Big Brothers-Little Sisters division of the Social Service Club.

Marie Olver and Kay Rockafellow organized the event. Kay felt that it was a real success. Fifteen kids showed up in costume and fun was had by all, including Kay and Marie. There were games, such as "break the balloon" and "bobbing for apples", and traditional Halloween treats were "munched down".

Kay feels that the Big Brother-Big Sister program is a success, but would like to see more Juniata students participate. To get involved contact Marie Olver or Kay Rockafellow, 643-4837. They could use your support as there is a Christmas party and roller skating party coming up in the near future.

A Welcome Change

As a result of careful consideration and strong recommendation by the Board of Trustees, the Juniata College administration has adopted plans to switch from a tri-mester system to a semester system. The Juniatian strongly favors this administrative decision as one that will have a positive impact on the Juniata community.

The motives behind the change are four-fold. By changing to semesters, the intense pace of a 10-week term is replaced by a 15 week period that allows students and faculty to adjust to courses. The change will also permit faculty to have more variety and depth in the courses they teach.

Financially, the switch to a semester system is a sound move. The intentions here are to reduce the increasing attrition rates which are affecting Juniata, like most other colleges across the nation.

A semester system will also lend itself to better start and finish dates for the calendar year. Students will return to school earlier at the same time every one else in the state returns to college. Finishing the semester before Christmas allows for a longer Christmas break so students can work or travel. Finally, students will have a competitive edge by entering the job market earlier in the spring, rather than three weeks after the rest of the college student job market.

Currently, Juniata is one of only 3 colleges in PA who have not yet made the switch to a semester system. The others also have plans to switch next year.

The Juniatian is pleased to see the switch is being planned for the 1986-87 academic year. In our eyes, the change is a bit overdue, but better late than never.

"...BECAUSE IF THE PUBLIC DOESN'T BUY IT, THEN WE'LL HAVE TO INCREASE IT AGAIN!"

ALONG MUDDY RUN

by Linda Ramsey

What better place to write for a column entitled "Along Muddy Run" than along muddy run? I've lived beside this drainage ditch for two years and have come to respect its tranquil qualities while also becoming excited after rainstorms. The stream is then transformed into challenging roaring rapids-if I were only four feet shorter. At two feet tall, the swift running water would seem ferocious as I clung to a floating beer can. Dodging styrofoam cups and Sheetz's hot dog wrappers, I would follow the "Snake River" under the walkway by East's parking lot and slither through the swampy grasslands between the bushes and the opposite bank. It's hard to tell if it's night or day in this neck of the woods along East; the large lights from overhead beam at me from the buildings like prison spotlights.

Past the second footbridge and around the outskirts of "Berrier's Baseball Field," I spot some round, white objects embedded in the stream below me, remnants of last spring and Dave Murphy's many home runs. I approach another bridge and realize I have left the campus. Or have I? Weis Market (along with Sheetz) has become an extension of Baker Refectory for many of us at Juniata.

It used to be clear sailing from this point on to the underground sewer system of downtown Huntingdon, until the appearance of the enterprising business strategy of Quality Beverage, with their new "drive thru" distribution center. I am now forced to continue my voyage under a couple of inches of macadem.

Back to reality, maybe I've never really experienced the rapids of Muddy Run - alias Cheat River. But living beside it has allowed me the opportunity to see what kinds of things HAVE followed its course.

I can remember the time Arnie Tilden's American Express gang (a.k.a. Apt 402 Animals) rode the rapids in inner tubes last year when Raft Regatta was postponed due to the heavy rains. All decked out in bathing trunks and tire tubes, the crazy eight challenged the roaring tide from bridge to bridge in front of East. More challenging, it seemed, was avoiding the bushes and branches that had overgrown since the fall.

One of the most ingenious uses of Muddy Run was the "floating keg" trick. One of the apartments farthest away from the parking lot

The music of Annabel Lamb in "The Flame," has the cynicism about love prevalent in so much of the music of current female performers. Most of the instrumental parts are similar in their steady beats and minor keys. Annabel Lamb's alto voice has the throatiness of Laura Branigan or Bonnie Tyler, and the same tough girl sensuality. Most of her songs deal with love in a sardonic fashion.

The first cut from the album, "Sacraments of Love", was a pessimistic view of love. It was about two people so wrapped up in each other that they are tearing each other apart. This piece had a strong beat, and melody was in a minor key.

"Hands of the Hunter" is a cynical piece about how loving too much turns to hatred. Again, the beat is steady and the key is minor.

The fourth cut from the album, "Dream Boy" is a softer, slightly dreamy piece about a young man fulfilling a girl's dreams. The trumpet part makes it sound like jazz music, which is refreshing.

"What the Eye Sees" begins with an eerie synthesizer part and progresses to a piece with a strong beat and an interesting acoustic guitar part. This song tells of blindness in love where senses are concerned.

The first cut from the flip side, "Things That I Fear," was a song of paranoia. This was a spoken piece that was intentionally deadpanned. It was an eerie song with a synthesizer background, acoustic guitar, and a strong beat.

The title piece, "The Flame," was more upbeat than the other songs. It was about lovers being each other's strength.

"So Lucky In Bed" was a song about a girl who was unhappy because she did not really love anyone although she had many men. The song has the characteristic strong beat and minor key.

"Inside of My Head" is a song about a girl wanting the guy back who has left her. This piece had a nice guitar part and a steady beat.

The final tune, "Talking To Me," is a song about the remembrance of love. It has a sweetly reminiscent tone. This song also had a nice melody.

I liked this album, although musically it was stagnant with the exception of a couple of songs. Lyrically, however, it was interesting. Annabel Lamb has potential for musicallity and originality. Perhaps she will become popular if she fills her potential.

Overeating May Cause Anxiety

Most students look forward to holiday vacations as a joyful time for reunions and large family meals; but, for people with eating disorders, these instead may be times for confrontations, lies, and painful anxiety. Bulimia, which is characterized by binge/purge behavior, and anorexia nervosa, a less common but related condition of self-starvation, are dangerous edpidemics affecting between 25-33% of college-aged women (also many men). Under ordinary circumstances, their lives are dominated by low self-esteem, generalized fear, and obsessive thoughts about food. During the holidays, however, these feelings are intensified. With a well-thought-out plan and plenty of motivation, these individuals can use this time off to start a program for recovery.

Although the underlying causes vary, eating disorders typically begin for psychological reasons and become addictive. Most cases are women with unrealistically high expectations of acheivement, especially concerning their own appearance and weight. The initial binges might be triggered by specific events, such as: moving away from home, rejections by a lover, or family pressures. The behavior often starts as a way of dieting or in reaction to a failed diet. It becomes a numbing, drug-like coping mechanism that provides instant relief for emotional pain or boredom. Bulimics often binge on several thousand calories after eating what they feel to be one bite too many at a meal. Since they have eaten more than they "should" anyway, they go ahead and binge, knowing that they will later force themselves to vomit or abuse laxatives. These purges confuse body signals causing extremely low blood levels, electrolyte imbalances, and cravings for more sugary foods. This cycle perpetuates itself, dangerously upsets normal digestion, and further complicates the original psycho-

Road Trips

by Andrew Davis

"I don't own
the clothes I'm wearing,
And the road
goes on forever,
And I've got one more silver dollar,
But I'm not gonna let 'em
catch me, no,
Not gonna let 'em catch the Midnight Rider."

— The Allman Brothers Band

"I can't take this anymore! I'm going crazy!" I was referring to an essay on which I had been working for entirely too long, with absolutely no satisfactory results. Five hours and two pots of coffee later, I was on the verge of total breakdown, tottering on the proverbial brink.

Skel recognized the symtoms immediately. "Hmmm, you don't look so good, man," he said, addressing the crumpled, immobile form half-on and half-off the couch in the corner. I responded with a despondent groan, more animal than human. "Looks to me like you could use a road trip." My ears perked up. My eyes popped open. "Road trip?" I said, as if in a trance. "Yes! Road Trip!" Skel replied, rolling me off the couch and on to the floor. "Where to?" I inquired from my new perspective. Skel said simply, "State." I couldn't help letting out a sound somewhere between a rebel yell and a banshee's scream as I hopped up and hurdled the coffee table. "We're there!"

Ever since Skel's sister had sold him the old V.W., which was to be known from then on as the "Skelmobile," the road trips came fast and furious, and impeccable in their timing. The vehicle suited our meager cash-flow as well as our need to hit the road. Once, in a particularly dire time, after depleting our small-change collections, we systematically rooted beneath the pillows and into the depths of every couch and comfy-chair we could gain access to, actually obtaining enough coins to put a few gallons of gas into the tank.

Many of these traditionally impromptu road trips would materialize into jaunts to State College. Barrelling into the main street of State College from the dusky, windswept moors of Nittany Valley is always a bit of a shocker. The change from the woodlined fields and cow-hills of the country side to the neon-lined pseudo-urban avenues choked with throngs of trendy fashion-mongers is so abrupt as to be downright bizarre. The experi-

On The Health Line

Remember that cherry-flavored cough syrup — the Mary Poppins variety — that tasted so good that you may have slurped a few extra spoonfuls when Mom wasn't looking? It was only logical, if a little bit was good for you, a lot was even better. Unfortunately, this childlike logic didn't fade away with Puff the Magic Dragon. Many adults still think "the more the better," as demonstrated by the current popularity of megadoses of vitamins. This trend caught on about the same time as the health food and fitness crazes of the early 1970's, making soybeans, Jim Fixx, BMR, vitamin C and U.S. RDA household words.

But what is the view of vitamin megadoses from a medical standpoint? Based on continuing research in the nutrition field, professional opposition to this practice is growing nearly as quickly as the dangerous trend of consuming greater and greater levels of vitamins.

In an effort to protect people from vitamin deficiency syndromes due to inadequate diets, the Food and Drug Administration set up a standard of Minimum Daily Requirements (MDR's). The charts commonly seen on food packages listing nutritional values use a Recommended Daily Allowance (RDA) standard which is two to six times higher than the MDR. Those people taking megadoes of vitamins are ingesting a minimum of ten or more times the levels of nutrients listed in the RDA. So at the minimum megadose level, a person can be ingesting 60 times the vitamin levels necessary to prevent a deficiency! Not even people suffering from vitamin deficiencies are prescribed such high dosages.

Yet the current megadosing craze has nothing to do with eliminating vitamin deficinciences. Many "vitamin-happy" fitness buffs use high levels of vitamins to maximize metabolic action by mass action.

Unfortunately, people don't realize that high levels of vitamins are dangerous. According to vitamin abuse expert Charles Marshall, the author of "Vitamins and Minerals: Help or Harm?", "a daily intake of more than five times the U.S. RDA of vitamins and minerals acts like a drug and in fact is a drug."

Contrary to popular belief, both fat-soluble and water-soluble vitamins can be harmful. Probably the vitamin most often used to excess is water-soluble vitamin C, which is said to prevent anything from colds to cancer. Recent studies reveal that high doses of this vitamin can disrupt copper metabolism. This failure to absorb copper subsequently prevents the release of iron from storage, resulting in iron deficiency anemia.

Other side effects of megadoses of vitamin C include kidney problems, adverse effects on bone growth, diarrhea, destruction of vitamin B^{12} and bleeding in pregnant women and subsequent problems in their infants.

Another water-soluble vitamin, Pyridoxine (vitamin B_6) has become increasingly popular and widely accepted as a supplement for body-building and as an aid in the relief of premenstrual syndrome. However, a recent study of this enzyme which is important in protein metabolims, reveal ataxia (failure of muscular coordination; irregularity of muscular acton) and acute sensory-nervous system dysfuction as a result of megadose levels of this vitamin.

Excessive doses of vitamin E, often mistakenly associated with heightened sexual drive, may cause blurred vision, headaches, fatigue, low blood sugar, chapped lips and — surprisingly — reduced sexual function. Additionally, in a recent report of the American Journal of Clinical Pathology, it was found that megadoses of vitamin E given to healthy young men actually increased LDL Choleserol, high levels of which have been positively associated with heart disease.

The bottom line, then, is that megadoses of vitamins can be very dangerous; people should view vitamins as they do drugs and should limit thir doses to the U.S. RDA. Better yet avoid the trouble, expense and questionable benefits of vitamins and practice proper eating habits that will ensure a safe, healthy means of obtaining the proper levels of necessary nutrients.

Guest Commentary

Dr. Jay Buchanan

On several occasions last year this column addressed the issue of suicide. Some researchers suggest that it is reaching epidemic proportions as evidenced by the tremendous increase in suicides over the past few years.

Sociologist and expert on suicide Dr. Steven Stack of Penn State indicates that 70 people per day commit suicide in the United States. Dr. Lewis Morgan of Villanova estimates the number of suicide attempts at nearly one million oer year.

Even closer to home, suicide is the second leading cause of death in the college population, with the leading cause being accidents (many of these "accidents" may well be suicides).

While college itself, which can be quite stress-producing, rarely causes a person to take his/her own life, there appear to be a number of reasons why suicide is so prevalent in the college-going population. The uncertain job market, the high cost of college education, pressure to succeed and troubled personal relationships seem to exacerbate the situation. It is not so much the environment itself but rather that which the student brings to the environment that well cause suicidal behavior. When students are distressed to begin with, that is, they bring unresolved conflicts such as troubled relationships and family problems with them to college, they are more vulnerable to suicidal behavior.

Last year Sherwood RHA mounted a campaign intended to increase students' awareness regarding suicide. They did this by dispelling many of the myths that surrounded suicide. Let's review just three of the these myths.

Myth #1 — A person who attempts or thinks about suicide is mentally ill. This is clearly not the case. While he/she may be desperate, they can be reached and helped. But if help is not provided, the individual may very well make another attempt at suicide.

Myth #2 — Talking about suicide will give an individual the idea. According to Dr. Stack, suggestion does not cause suicide. Just the reverse may be true; talking about it may help resolve the conflicts and prevent any possible attempt.

Myth #3 — Suicides happen without any warning. Warnings are present if we are able to tune into them. Clues such as talking about it (70-80 percent of suicides have been communicated in some manner prior to the attempts), prolonged depression and dramatic changes in behavior are just a few.

Individuals who think about and attempt suicide are generally those who have feelings of aloneness and isolation. On a small campus such as Juniata College, we should all try to make it our business to tune into those around us. It just might make a difference.

In our next column, we will examine some intervention strategies toward the prevention of suicide. Do well on your finals, have good break, and see you next term.

The annual Halloween Buffet brought some students to dinner in very unusual fashion last Wednesday night. Those who dressed in costume were evaluated by a panel of judges and prizes were awarded for the prettiest costume, the ugliest costume, the best group and the most creative costume. Second Lesher was selected the best group for their "Revenge of the Lesher Nerds" theme. Lori Swivel, who performed mime, was chosen as the one wearing the prettiest costume. Rob Boyer took the prize for the ugliest costume and Lisa Aurand, dressed as a Christmas tree, was tabbed as the most creative costume. As apparent by all those in costume for the buffet, Halloween is a popular event at Juniata College.

Administrators Blamed For Freeze Policy

To Whom It May Concern:

As residents of 3rd Northwest, we are in the midst of a distressing and totally unnecessary situation. As has already been mentioned in a letter to the editor, a room freeze has been placed on one of the rooms for the past few weeks. This has affected not only the two roommates with the problem, but the entire hall. Sides have been taken and the issue discussed and appealed to death, yet nothing constructive has been accomplished.

We feel that the room freeze should not have been allowed in the first place. Everyone we have talked to has agreed that the policy allowing the freeze is a mistake, and it is supposedly being changed for next year. This is not soon enough! The policy should never have been written to begin with, and certainly not implemented. Throughout the situation, no allowance has been made for the changes and extenuating circumstances that have arisen.

As a result of the blind implementation of a poor rule, the entire hall has suffered. At this point, it seems as though both people in the "frozen" room are considering leaving Juniata, neither happily. All in all, the room freeze has caused problems on the hall. People have taken sides in an issue that they should have never had to deal with.

This editorial has tried to point no finger of right or wrong at anyone or anything but the policy and the administrators that allowed this to happen.

Madrigal Festivities Announced

by Amy Smith

It's that time of year again - for thinking about the first snow, Christmas shopping, and the traditional Madrigal Dinner/Dance!

This year's festive occasion is scheduled for Friday, December 14th, beginning at 6:15 p.m. Students will dine in an atmosphere reflective of the holiday season. All classes will be involved in the decorating of Baker Refectory and Tote. The freshmen will be responsible for setting up, the sophomores for the center pieces, the juniors for the window painting, and the seniors for the decorating of the tree. The dinner will be served by Juniata faculty and entertainment will be provided by Juniata staff and students.

Because of the limited number of seats available, the reservations will be obtainable on a first come, first served basis. Sign-ups will take place in the ballroom at noon on Wednesday, December 5th. Meal sticker numbers are required for all students, with the exception of off-campus Juniata students, who will be charged $4.75 to attend.

Start planning now for this exclusive Juniata event. Get involved and help your class make this year's Madrigal a success. Signs will be posted after break with more information pertaining to this event.

Overeating

Lindsey Hall, who cured herself after nine years of bulimia has co-written three booklets on this subject, which are used in more than 500 colleges and universities. She writes in her first booklet, Eat Without Fear, "I binged up to four and five times a day after the third year. There were very few days without one. My vision often became blurry and I had intense headaches. What used to be passing dizziness and weaknesses after a binge had become walking into doorjams and exhaustion. My complexion was poor and I was often constipated. Large blood blisters appeared on the back of my mouth. My teeth were a mess." The research study on which her third booklet, Beating Bulimia, is based, documents other bulimics who were hospitalized, had miscarriages, and spent more than than 20 years struggling with food. Between 7-9% die due to cardiac arrest, kidney failure, or impaired metabolism.

Dr. Jean Rubel, president of Anorexia Nervosa and Related Eating Disorders (ANRED), a non-profit organization which serves as a national clearing-house of information and referrals, observes that college students commonly fall victim to food problems, "Students are vulnerable to a cycle of stress inherent in the structure of the school year. There is a separation from home and all that is familiar, anxiety resulting from having to make new friends and learn one's way around campus, plus classwork and studies which pile pressure on top of stress. All the while, women are being vigilant about presenting to the world an immaculate, thin appearance. Many students resort to disordered eating in efforts to gain some peace and release.

"That student returns home, perhaps still preoccupied with problems at school, to find a different set of pressures and expectations awaiting. To further complicate matters, holidays are traditionally times of feasting. For someone who is already terrified of weight gain, who is craving rich food after a period of dieting, the prospect of spending time around large amounts of easily available food is frightening indeed."

Students with food obsessions can use the holiday break from school to begin to get better, though recovery is rarely quick or easy. Dr. Rubel recommends that students be aware of the pressures awaiting them at home and make detailed plans for how to cope with them. They should set reasonable goals for themselves, such as planning non-food related activities, perhaps by setting a limit for weight gain, or avoiding specific incidents that may trigger binges. She adds, "If you do slip back into a food behavior, remind yourself it does not mean your plan is not effective. It merely shows you a place to make some revisions so you can more easily achieve your goals."

Most who are cured find that the commitment to getting better is made easier with the important first step of confiding in someone who can help you. Vacation time may provide the perfect setting for getting support from friends or family members, who are often understanding and compassionate, despite the sufferer's fears of rejection. However, even with the help of loved ones, overcoming bulimia or anorexia nervosa may require professional therapy and medical treatment. Without proper attention, the behavior does not suddenly end and can continue for a lifetime.

Lindsey's Hall's bulimia developed into a daily habit during her college years, and now she regularly speaks to students who are struggling with food. She emphasizes her success at overcoming bulimia rather than dwelling on her suffering, "I am now able to enjoy growing, touching, tasting, smelling, and eating food without the temptation to binge." Ms. Hall asserts, "The best Christmas present that people with eating disorders can give themselves is to make a devoted effort to end their food obsessions."

Road Trips

ence is invariably entertaining, though. We used to enjoy sitting on the Beaver Avenue wall, weather permitting, smoking cigarettes and hanging loose with the undercurrent crowd, pretending that we, too, had earned the right to be part of the wall-urchin scene. Having spent our last cents on gasoline, there was little else we could do.

In the event that we did have money, State College provided an unlimited source of invented excuses for a road trip. Besides the pragmatic reasons for going to State, such as to check out new albums or to buy some army-surplus clothing, the totally fabricated excuses resulted in the most enjoyable spontaneous excursions. A particular video-game, an egg roll, or a bottle of Guinness Stout have all furnished perfectly valid incentives, in Skel's mind, to undertake this most noble of pastimes, the Road Trip. Although the names, faces, and storefronts may change at State College, the place remains the same, which is the beauty of it: there is something for everyone, whether you're looking to buy something, or just pretending.

Academic Calendar Adjusted

by Betsy Halsey

Juniata's trimester system will be changed to a semester one for the 1986-87 school year.

This is planned for a variety of reasons according to Dean Donald T. Hartman. The change will relieve the intense pace of the term system Juniata currently is under. It allows students and faculty to have more variety in their work without affecting the amount of work that is done. The longer terms will give the student more time to adjust to courses. Hartman also points out that this change will be especially important to the freshmen and sophmores who are learning to adapt to the college environment.

It has not yet been determined if we will move to a new system of credit hours as opposed to the current system of units.

Deputation Fellowship

Juniata's Deputaion Fellowship serves as an outreach ministry group mostly to those in the community but also to the college campus. The name Deputation originates from the phrase, "deputies for Christ". There are approximately twenty members in this interdenominational group which adds a variety of ways of worship to the fellowship, and is the oldest existing organization on campus.

In the past, the outreach ministry service dealt mainly with sharing worship services at various congregations. Although they are still performing this service, the Deputation Fellowship is now expanding their services to include, visits with nursing home residents, working with a youth group downtown, and helping with the Huntingdon Food Bank. In the future, the group also hopes to be working with the prison fellowship. Through this diverse range of activities, Deputation Fellowship wants students to feel more comfortable in fellowship and to realize worship services are not the only way to show Christian service. Meetings are held every other Tuesday at 9:00 p.m. in the Faculty Lounge. All are welcome to join in this fellowship experience.

Juniata College United Methodist Fellowship

The Juniata College United Methodist Fellowship (JCUMF) is Juniata's most newly formed organization. The idea for this twenty-member group was initiated by Mike Derk, JCUMF president, and the club has now been in existence for two months. Patrick Walker, campus ministry intern, serves as the club's advisor. The purpose of the JCUMF is to inform students about the Methodist philosophy and provide services to the community.

Last Tuesday night, four local ministers attended the JCUMF meeting and discussed their particular congregation's activities and special programs. All JCUMF members were invited to attend worship services at these four area Methodist churches. In the future, the group hopes to begin holding discussions on controversial issues with the Methodist viewpoint in mind. They also plan on helping with the Huntingdon Food Bank and participating in other community services, as well as planning ideas for fundraisers. Meetings are held Wednesday evenings at 8:30 p.m. in the Blue Room. Any Juniata students who are interested in learning about the Methodist philosophy or serving the community are invited to join JCUMF.

Campaign Strategies Featured

The presidential campaign spirit came to Juniata College Wednesday, Oct. 31 as writer and TV commercial archivist Jim Hall presented his film and lecture featuring 50 years of political campaign commercials Entitled "Promise Them Anything," the 70-minute program in Oller Hall, featured rare and extraordinary footage from Hall's private collection which includes campaign spots ranging from FDR to Reagan. The presentation highlighted by footage from the Presidential election of 1908, the first known political film ever made.

Hall, who is the creator of NBC's hit show, "Television's Greatest Commercials," calls "Promise Them Anything" a definitive expose of the art of advertising in American politics. It included celebrity endorsements from John Wayne, Burt Lancaster, Chuck Connors and Janet Leigh.

Fifty years of U.S. history spanning the depression and today's nuclear issues were also incorporated into the presentation.

Organ Talents Displayed By Rev. Rodland In Oller

by Carol Connell

Oller Hall was the setting Tuesday October 30th, for the Visiting Artists/Scholars Committee's presentation of an organ recital by a Juniata alumni, the Rev. John R. Rodland. Performing favorite works by Bach as well as modern composers, Rohland exhibited his wonderful talents on the organ which he studied while a student at J.C.

Presently a minister of Music at the West Side Presbyterian Church in Ridgewood N.J., Rodland, a native of Altoona, opened the first half of the concert with a narration explaining the history of the works he was about to play. Dedicating this section to Bach, Rodland began the performance with a piece based on a concerto grosso by Vivaldi, entitled Concerto in D Minor. After this work, which pitted one part of the organ against another, Rodland presented Two Chorale Preludes, Nun fruet euch, lieben Christen, G'mein, and Nun komm, der Heiland. Calling on the audience to sing the hymms from which these pieces are based, the organist clearly expressed the "intimate and spiritual" nature of these sacred works. Rodland completed this presentation of Bach pieces with the first movement of the Trio Sonata in C Major, in which the hands and the feet have separate musical lines and the Fugue in E-flat, 'St. Anne,' which symbolizes the three personaes of God. In this way Rodland stated Bach's belief that music is a vehicle to express the word of God.

After a brief intermission, the second half of the performance began with Jean Langlais' Hymne D'Action de Grace Te Deum. Featuring a mixture of old melodies with new harmonies, this work, an example of 19th century French Romanticism, was followed by a piece based on a Scottish air. Written by a teacher of Rodland's, M. Searle Wright, the prelude was a beautiful medium for the softer ranges of the organ to be employed and experienced through the tones reminiscent of Celtic pipes.

Allegro Vivace by Louis Vierne also displayed a characteristic of the organ, which was restored several years ago. This Scherzo from the French organist's first symphony, used the three sets of flute stops in a lyrical and enjoyable work.

Rodland stated that he was happy to return to an instrument he always found satisfying to play, and closed the evening's performance with a two-part Sonata based on the Ninety-fourth Psalm. This reflective work, which Rodland learned while studying under Donald S. Johnson, Juniata Professor Emeritus of Music, was preceeded by Rodland's reflections on his education here and his homecoming performance of sharing music that he loves.

Muddy Run

was having a party that night and instead of bringing out the desk chair and strategically placing the keg on the seat and hauling it back to the apartment, the magician brought out an innertube and sent the keg, the innertube and himself downstream. It was quite a show for those of us who have dragged kegs across East's front lawn.

What have I gained from living beside the infamous "Run?" Well, maybe it's not so much what I learned from it, but just realizing that it is significant part of Juniata. As the old joke goes, "what do you get from eating at Baker Refectory?", you've got to experience Muddy Run to appreciate it.

Mr. Shultz also met with officials from Pakistan, Sri Lanka, Britain, and Japan.

LONDON — World Leaders are taking a less casual attitude towards their personal security in light of recent assassinations and assassination attempts. European officials used to say the United States Secret Service was too elaborate, "We used to laugh at the Secret Service. They reminded us of gangster films when they came over here with their arsenal of heavy weapons," said a reitred Scotland Yard official. "Now all of us are having to employ far more stringent methods than ever before." When Mrs. Thatcher attended the funeral of Indira Gandi, she was accompanied by two armed guards. In Paris the heavy green doors of the Elys'ee Palace, which used to be open permitting the public to watch official comings and goings at the presidential residence, are now chained closed at all times.

WARSAW — Poland's Rev. Jerzy Poplieluszko was proclaimed a martyr as 200,000 people gathered to pray at his funeral Saturday. The 37-year-old priest who spoke out for Solidarity was slain by three security policemen. Lech Walesa, the founder of Solidarity, gave a eulogy from the balcony of the parish church where the prayers and burial took place. Forbidden Solidarity banners were held high at factories, schools, and shops in all regions of Poland.

PAVIA, Italy — Pope John Paul II spoke to students and professors in his northern Italian University town Saturday, saying that science cannot be separated from faith. "There cannot be a future which rests of science estranged from faith, since science and faith meet in the vast problems which concern mankind," he stated.

Indians Outdistanced by Susquehanna Crusaders 34-20

by Joe Scialabba

Juniata quarterback Mike Culver threw three touchdown passes to flanker Dave Murphy on Saturday but the Indians couldn't match the powerful Susquehanna offense.

The Crusaders used 511 yards total offense, including 331 yards on the ground in taking a 34-20 Middle Atlantic Conference decision in Selinsgrove.

Susquehanna raised its record to 5-3 for the year and 4-3 in the MAC. Juniata fell to 2-6-1 and 1-5-1.

The Culver-to-Murphy connection first worked from 71 yards in the second quarter to get the Indians to within 14-8 with 3:31 until halftime, as Murphy also caught a two-point conversion pass from holder Rich Howey on a fake kick. Then in the second half, the pair worked for a 31-yard score and 23-yard TD play to get the Tribe back in the game, making the score 28-20 with 10:55 to play.

Both times, the Indians got closer only to have the hosts come right back. After following the first half JC score with six-play, 70-yard drive to make it 21-8 at halftime, as QB Jim Wisse threw a three-yard TD pass to Mike Leitzel, Susquehanna responded to Juniata's final touchdown with a six-play, 77-yard drive to clinch the game. Halfback Bob Shaara scored on a 33-yard run with 8:04 remaining.

Shaara, who rushed for 161 yards on the day, added earlier touchdown runs of 32 and 22 yards and a 21-yard option-pass to Leitzel to the delight of the Parent's Day crowd.

The way the Crusaders responded to the Indian comebacks was the key according to Juniata coach Rob Ash. "It was devastating," sighed Ash. "We got back in the game, but then just couldn't stop them. They came-up with good drives at very important times."

"The early lead was important," relayed Susquehanna's Bill Moll. "We really didn't want to get in a shoot-out, but we'll take it. Our offense wanted to control the football and we did a pretty good job. We ran well and threw for good yardage on several occasions."

After falling behind 14-0, things got tougher for Juniata when senior tight end Carl Fekula was injured on an incomplete pass play, on JC's third series. He dove for the ball and was hit hard by two defenders in the mid-air collision. Fortunatley, Fekula, who was called "the best receiving tight end in the league" by Moll, suffered only a sprained knee and some bruises, although he never returned to the game.

"We started out flat," said Ash. "And when Carl got hurt we really let down. I was happy we had enough to get back in the game, but they just had it go their way in the key sequences."

"They couldn't stop Murphy, although they did have a quick defense. We didn't run the ball nearly as well as we have been."

Juniata rushed for only 40 yards and threw for 261 with Culver hitting 14-of-28.

In the first half, Susquehanna ran 41 plays to 22 for the Indians on the way to a 270-87 total yardage advantage. The Crusaders had the ball 21 of the 30 first-half minutes and almost 38 minutes for the game.

The extra-point kicking was rough in the second half as Todd McCarthy missed after hitting four straight for Susquehanna. Juniata's Mike Schaffner also missed wide left on one try and had his second boot blocked.

The Tribe travels to Upsala this Saturday to finish the 1984 schedule. The kickoff in East Orange, NJ, is set for 1:30 p.m.

Women's X-Country Shines

On Saturday November 3rd, the Women's Cross Country team travelled to Annville to run in the Middle Atlantic Conference Championship. Our Lady Harriers had a great day, with several superb races, which gave them a 5th place finish overall out of 18 teams.

Individual honors went to senior Terri Bollman, who received a medal for her 6th place finish overall and to sophomore Kris Smith, who turned in a tremendous effort, capturing 11th place overall. The rest of the Ladies: Chris Schleiden, Sue Gill, Dee Gulden, Shelly Stepke, Krista Jones, and Sue Gulla, each ran fine races on Saturday.

The Lady Harriers finished their dual meet season with an impressive 8-4 record.

Lady Spikers Take MAC Crown Girls Look Towards Nationals

by Joe Scialabba

Juniata captured another Middle Atlantic Conference women's volleyball championship last weekend with a six-match sweep. The Indians are now 44-3 for the season and remain ranked number one in the NCAA Division Three.

Coach Larry Bock's ladies had little trouble with their MAC rivals as they did not lose a single game in the two-day event.

The champions capped a great performance in the tourney with a 3-0 white-wash of Gettysburg in the finals on Saturday afternoon, 15-6, 15-10 and 15-11.

The Bullets of Gettysburg had been the Indians toughest team to face in the championship tournament as in pool play on Friday night they played solid volleyball, only losing to JC 15-11, 15-13. Gettysburg also pulled a major surprise when they upset #11-ranked Western Maryland in the semifinals, 15-12 and 15-6.

Juniata beat Elizabethtown 15-5 and 15-2 in the semifinals. The Indians defeated Muhlenberg, Scranton and Susquehanna in addition to Gettysburg in pool play Friday.

Also last week, Juniata beat Shippensburg University 3-1 in Memorial Gym. The Indians did lose a 15-point game for only the second time in the month of October, but since then Juniata has won 32 straight matches. Throughout this amazing string, coach Larry Bock has used a delicate balance of both experienced and inexperienced players. This intermixing of players has allowed the newer members to gain valuable game play experience while inturn giving some of the other players some needed rest. One of the key features of a championship team is depth, and this years team has shown that we are not lacking in that department.

The Indians play in the Navy Invitational Tournament this weekend before beginning the NCAA Division Three tournament.

Judo

by Beth Gallagher

Juniata's Judo Club made a fine showing at the Johnstown Judo Tournament this weekend as Greg Kovesces and Will Thompson captured second and third places, respectively.

Eleven club members from Juniata went to the tournament where a total of 150 competitors participated. This weekend's tournament was the first of the season for Juniata, but team members hope to arrange for another in December.

Anyone interested in joining the Judo club may contact Will Thompson in 405 Long.

Well here we are, the last edition of the Juniatian for the fall of 1984. Look for a full Fall I.M. wrap-up when we return from break. All in all, I would have to say that Juniata had a successful Fall season on the whole. This all depends on how you define the word successful. Although the season for some teams may not have been as productive as they would have liked in the win/loss aspect, I didn't see any team fold under the pressure. The Indian Football 2-6-1 overall could easily be 6-3 if the breaks had gone their way, but we all know that they will be at Upsala this week to play. The Ladies' field hockey team had a tough season, with numbers problems, but next year they will be back with new blood.

The Women's X-Country team had a winning 8-4 season, and the men also had a good season with both teams making a good showing at the MAC's this past weekend. The Men's Soccer team pulled it together at the end of the season with three wins out of their last six games, and scored more goals in one season than any other Indian soccer team has in the school's history.

I can't say enough about the Women's Volleyball team (and I know I haven't). They are now MAC champions, with a record of 44 victories to only 3 losses. I know I am not alone when I wish them the best of luck in the weeks to come.

World News Update

by Cindy Duick

WASHINGTON — Serious concern about Chile turning into "another Nicaragua" was voiced by the Reagan administration, Saturday. The officials concluded that, because of the developments in Chile, the United States should make a maximum effort to prevent Chile from becoming "another Nicaragua." Distressing occurrences cited by officials included the state of seige declared on November 6 by President Augusto Pinochet.

After a month long review of the situation, officials are in agreement that an effort should be made to bring about mediation, perhaps by the Vatican, other Latin American countries, or the United States, to develop a transition towards democracy in Chile.

EDWARDS A.F. BASE, Calif. — A jet-crash test of fuel safety failed Saturday as the remote controlled Boeing 720 crashed into the desert floor in a red mass of flames.

The crash, a part of a $11.8 million project to discover ways to reduce casualties in survivable plane crashes, was testing a special fuel mixture designed to avoid a lethal fireball in the event of a crash.

The flames turned to black smoke after about seven seconds but, "Our hope was that this wouldn't happen" said a spokesman for the National Aeronautics and Space Administration.

Rodrigo Carazo Odio (center), the former President of Costa Rica from 1978-1982, visited Juniata this past week. Odio was the guest speaker at the Peace and Conflicts 10th Anniversary Dinner. He also gave a lecture on the current situation in Central America this past Monday.

Former President of Costa Rica Discusses Central American Crisis

by Scott Snyder

The former President of Costa Rica, Rodrigo Carazo Odio presented a lecture on the problems in Central America and Costa Rica's role in these problems. This presentation was a part of the continuing Baker lecture series.

President Carazo served the country of Costa Rica in the presidential capacity from 1978 to 1982. He is an expert in the field of economics and urban housing affairs, in which he played a major role in Costa Rica. He is presently serving as president of the United Nations University for Peace.

President Carazo pointed out that Costa Rica is a small country, about 30,000 square miles, in the midst of a troubled region, Central America. Revolution as a response to social and political injustice has produced many of these problems. President Carazo advocates peaceful methods to solving these injustices rather than the use of military force.

There has been a continuing struggle by foreign powers in the Central American region. Today this struggle mainly involves the United States and the USSR. President Carazo feels this intervention is a hindrance to peace in this region. Because of so many foreign alliances many Central American countries are unwilling to open a peaceful dialogue among themselves.

President Karazo also pointed out that Costa Rica has solved many of its own internal problems. It has developed an education system that accounts for thirty percent of the total budget. Costa Rica also has no army or arms system, rather they rest their national security on international solidarity.

In addition to delivering Monday night's lecture, Carazo examined Juniata's Peace and Conflict Studies Program. Juniata is one of only 88 colleges and universities in the country to offer such a program, and has received prior attention from the United Nations.

A reception for the President followed the lecture.

One Acts Performed By Students

"A Thurber Carnival," a medley of sketches based on the illustrations and stories of James Thurber (1895-1961), will be presented Dec. 6, 7 and 8 at 8 p.m. in Juniata College's Oller Hall.

The performance, presented by Theater Juniata, is a review of Thurber's total literary and artistic work, including slides of his cartoons. Story favorites such as "The Secret Life of Walter Mitty," "The Night the Bed Fell," "The Unicorn in the Garden," and "If Grant Had Been Drinking at Appomattox" are included in the presentation.

Thurber rose to prominence as a writer and editor of the "New Yorker" magazine in the 1920s and 30s. Dogs, women and his boyhood home of Columbus, Ohio were favorite subjects in his work. Despite blindness, which attacked him the prime of life, he remained active as a writer and cartoonist until his death.

A few of his collections are "Men, Women and Dogs," "The Middle-Aged Man on the Flying Trapeze," "The Seal in the Bedroom and Other Predicaments" and "Let Your Mind Alone!"

"A Thurber Carnival," which encompasses his life's work, is performed by a company of 12: Anne Gogarty, an exchange student from Kent, England; Julia Thomson, an exchange student from Cheltenham, England; Lisa Baer, a freshman from Perkasie; Cheryl Kimbrough, a junior from Lansing, IL; Margaret Goglewski, a freshman from New Cumberland; Molly Bagwell, a freshman from Catonsville, MD; Thomas Kochel, a freshman from Lancaster; John Petrovis, a freshman from Hookstown; Steve Meyer, a sophomore from Bethesda, MD; Rob Boyer, a sophomore from Greentown; Jonathan Hochberg, a Huntingdon High School student from Huntingdon; and Chris Carney, a freshman from Baldwin, MD.

The production is directed by Dr. Luise Van Keuren, assistant professor of English at Juniata, who is assisted by Scott Rhymer, a freshman from Easton. All of the performances are open to the public at no charge.

Murray to Attempt the 100-Plus Challenge

by Ginny Krall

The 100-Plus Swimming Challenge will be taken by campus minister Andy Murray to benefit the American Cancer Society. This swim-a-thon was explained by Murray in a recent interview.

Q: What exactly is the 100-Plus Challenge?
A: It is a swimming event in which I collect pledges for only the laps I swim over 100. In other words the first 100 laps are free, I only get pledge money for the extras!
Q: How far is 100 lengths?
A: One time across the pool is 25 meters. One hundred laps is a little over one and a half miles.
Q: Have you ever gone 100 lengths?
A: No, never that far. It's a trade secret how far I've ever gone.
Q: What are the rules to this challenge?
A: The swim must be completed between sun up and sun down of the same day. If I stop for more than 10 seconds I am finished. I get no breaks.
Q: Have you ever had a swimming lesson?
A: No, but I've been swimming on a regular basis for about one and a half years-two or three times a week over my lunch breaks.
Q: What's the tentative date for this challenge?
A: Well let me explain something first. I'm getting pledges for only the laps I swim over 100. We are collecting pledges now. When the pledges go over $5 per lap, I have one month to train. If I get over the $5 in pledges before the Christmas break, I'll swim without the training period. Hopefully I'll reach that $5 per extra length so I can go before Christmas.
Q: Why are you doing this? What's motivating you?
A: Just for the challenge. I want to see how far I can go. I got the idea last year when President Binder swam.
Q: But why the 100+ laps?
A: Well . . . if President Binder can go 100 laps, then I know I can do at least 101!!!
Q: How far do you hope to go?
A: No comment.

Pledges for Murray's 100-Plus Challenge will be collected in Ellis lobby at lunch and dinner by the Campus Ministry Board. Murray hopes each student will at least pledge one cent per extra length toward his goal of $10 per extra length. With everyone's support and generous pledges, Murray will easily attain this goal.

Join in! Pledge today and help Murray help others!

Yearbook Delay Is Explained

As many students have already noticed, the 1983-84 Alfarata has not come out yet.

The delay in the issuing of the yearbooks is due to the fact that the faculty section was not completed on schedule postponing the publication of the entire book.

The yearbooks are expected to be ready the second week in January. Business editor, Becky Woomer stated that due to their budget cuts the yearbook staff was unable to send notices to graduated students or parents who have purchased yearbooks explaining the delay. However, a note of apology will accompany the late yearbooks.

Next year's Alfarata is going well and will be highlighted by a color senior section.

A good example of this can be seen in Walter Mondale's campaign. Walter jumped on the "Where's the beef?" bandwagon a little too late. By the time he picked up the slogan most people were ready to wring Clara Pellar's little old neck. I don't think Fritz lost the election because he chose a woman for a running mate or because of his policies. Most Americans never really comprehend the complex issues anyway. I think what did Walter in was his insistence to use "Where's the beef?" when everyone else had merficully retired the phrase. Everybody but Walter seemed to catch on. But Walter, well, he was clueless.

Concert Choir gives Christmas Performance

by Esther Compher

The Juniata College Concert Choir will be giving its annual Christmas performance on Tuesday, December 18 at 8:30 pm in Oller Hall.

The choir will perform by itself for the first part of the program, presenting a variety of sacred and secular Christmas music. This program includes pieces by Distler, Berlioz, Manz and Holst, and pieces to be performed in English, Spanish, and Latin.

For the second half of the program, the choir will be joined by over fifty more students, faculty members, and townspeople in a performance of Antonio Vivaldi's "Gloria", a Baroque work for solo voices, chorus, and orchestra. The solos will be performed by five students from the Concert Choir.

The Christmas concert is an admission-free performance. All are welcome to attend; bring friends or family and enjoy an evening of beautiful music to celebrate the Yuletide season.

Juniata Students Await Madrigal

by Kathy Manzella

Since the memory of waiting in line for Madrigal tickets is still fresh in our minds, here's an idea of what will make it all worthwhile!

Keeping with tradition, the faculty and staff will once again serve the students. This year's menu will feature roasted chicken, shrimp scampi, and apple pie.

Students will be greeted by the concert choir upon entering Baker Refectory. In addition, Madrigal favorites Andy and Terry Murray will perform. The Brass Choir will also perform.

This year's Madrigal Dance will be held from 9:00 to 1:00 a.m. in the Memorial Gymnasium. Rogue, a State College based band will be performing at the event.

In order to make this year's Madrigal a success, your help is needed! Each class has been assigned a duty for the Madrigal. The Senior class is responsible for decorating the Christmas tree, the juniors are responsible for decorating the Baker Refectory window, the sophomores are responsible for making center pieces, and the freshmen are responsible for setting the dinner tables.

Signs will be posted throughout the week to let students know where and when the Madrigal meetings will be held. Please get involved and help make this Madrigal the best one ever!

Christmas Party Tips Suggested

by Ginny Krall

As another holiday season quickly approaches, CASE, the Committee for Alcohol Studies and Education would like you to keep these party tips in mind:

1) Provide plenty of food for your guests. Snacks help to slow the absorption of alcohol into the bloodstream.

2) Recognize a person's right not to drink by providing non-alcoholic beverages. Make them just as available as other drinks. Don't force a public statement by serving alcohol in one kind of glass and soft drinks in another.

3) Don't push drinks! Be a good host and friend. Ask your guests "What would you like to drink?" rather than "Come on, have a drink!"

4) Don't let your friends drive drunk! The legal definition of "Driving under the influence" is a blood alcohol level of .10%. But, scientific tests show that even professional drivers' abilities diminish sharply at levels as low as .03% to .05% or about three drinks. If you must, provide a place to sleep for those who have had too much to drink or drive them home yourself. A little inconvenience is worth a friend's life!

5) People get together to be together. Drinking alcohol can help some people have more fun — but it does not supply the fun!!

By remembering these simple party tips, your holiday festivities will be happier and safer. So if you choose to drink, drink responsibly!!

Hartman Announces Resignation

by Carol M. Cornell

Donald T. Hartman, Vice President, Dean of Academic Affairs and Professor of Philosophy, has announced his resignation. Leaving Juniata in January 1985, Hartman has accepted the office of Senior Vice President of Academic Affairs at the University of Charleston, South Carolina.

In Charleston, Dean Hartman will serve in a new administrative position recently established at the University. Hartman has already been included in the decision-making process, and he will be supervising the five colleges that comprise the institution.

Although Hartman has been made to feel "welcomed and wanted" at the University of Charleston, he has mixed emotions over his move from Juniata. Stating that as he has spent his "entire adult life" here, it will not be easy to leave the people and association that has been so important to him for the past sixteen years.

Club Update

by Lisa Greiss

Scalpel and Probe

The Scalpel and Probe Club is one of Juniata's science-oriented organizations, with approximately 125 members. The majority of these members are biology and chemistry majors, who would like to pursue a career in any of the health professions, including medicine, dentistry, occupational or physical therapy, or medical technology. The club's goals are to introduce club members to and keep them aware of advances in their respective fields, and to inform them of the admissions requirements at various schools.

During fall term, the club's major focus was on presenting lectures, including one on the emotional and psychological aspects of abortion. Students were also introduced to the Pittsburgh Dental School, Georgetown Dental School, and Pennsylvania College of Optometry and their prerequisites for admission. Scalpel and Probe also provided members the chance to prepare for MCAT's when a representative from Penn State presented an introduction to the Kapplan course, which is designed for this purpose.

This term the club plans to show films, including one about the State University of New York concerning the allied health professions.

Anyone interested in a health profession is invited to join this club.

There was a nice-sized crowd at the coffeehouse last Thursday night at Catharsis Lounge.

Entertainment consisted of an array of guitar ballads and folk songs performed by Dan Berg. The majority of the music was Dan's own material which the fullhouse at Sherwood seemed to enjoy.

Overall, the first party of the winter term turned out to be a success.

This Holiday Season:

★ Be considerate to those in the Huntingdon Area. Please don't steal live Christmas trees.

★ Avoid fire hazzards — don't decorate with live greens (it's against housing regulations).

★ Have your RD inspect any X-mas lights before using them.

Juniata Jumps to the Beat of Aerobics

by Amy Smith

"Let's get physical" seems to be the rage of much of today's population - and the crowd at Juniata is not excluded.

"It's motivating to me to be able to exercise with all these people. Not only do I get something out of it, they do too. People take it seriously, but have a great time," said sophomore Polly Oliver, referring to the recently organized aerobics program on campus. It's growing increasingly popular, attracting about 60 to 80 students per session.

Oliver, the program originator, began instructing aerobics classes last year for the purpose of conditioning athletes in the off-season. Inspired by the realization that not all students participate in athletics and that "intramural sports do not give students a consistent workout," she decided to open the program to the entire campus this winter.

Oliver and her three assistants, senior Sue Simpson and sophomores Jennifer Koslow and Melissa Gronert, have choreographed a variety of popular music - all for the participants' enjoyment and fitness. Oliver has patterned the structure of the program after that of the competitive health spa that she attends in her home town. However, she assures that the classes she offers are not so intense.

According to assistant instructor Sue Simpson, "The program allows people to work within their own limits and gives them a sense of accomplishment." Participants are free to work at their own pace - self-improvement is the key. The program is designed to challenge the individual, getting progressively more complex as the person improves.

Participant input is welcomed and the more confident students are encouraged to consider leading a routine themselves. Oliver emphasized the fact that it is possible to join in at any time and not feel far behind - everyone can benefit. All members of the Juniata campus are invited to get involved in this exciting new program of fun and fitness every Sunday through Thursday at 9:00 p.m. in the multi-purpose room of the Sports and Recreation Center!

If these were two paths in the woods, then the route around the mountain is definitely the path less travelled.

CCT Program Aids Students

by Steve Creps

In this series, the Co-Curricular Transcript (CCT) program will be used to introduce and briefly describe goals four and five, which deal with organization and student leader/advisor relationships, and goal six, the record keeping part of the program.

The fourth goal is to improve the functioning and effectiveness of campus clubs and organizations. To accomplish this goal, leadership modules have been set up for training leaders. A consultation service has also been developed.

One module is specially designed to aid organizations. The Officer's Club is a series which helps student officers to improve the functioning and effectiveness of their organizations.

A second program aimed at helping organizations is the Consultation Service. In this program, the Student Services staff is available to help organizations assess their needs, design training programs, provide networking and assist in identifying resources.

Thr fifth goal is to improve the student leader/advisor relationship by providing a greater degree of structure. This structure has been provided by the Co-Curricular Participation Form. These forms have been developed for use in student/advisor sessions when personal and organizational goals are mutually developed. On this form, which can be used for any activity, the student first describes his/her responsibilities and goals. Then the student comments on the skills developed and goals attained. There is also space for the resource person or advisor to comment on the skills attained and the manner in which they were attained.

The sixth goal (To reward students who have acquired skills through co-curricular experiences by maintaining a verified record in the Placement Office), is accomplished by filing the appropriate forms with the Student Services Office. The forms are kept there until the senior year, when they are transferred onto the final CCT, which is then maintained in the Placement Office.

Reactions from participating students have been quite encouraging. Prospective employers have also received the CCT favorably.

CCT Registration meetings will be held next Monday-Thursday Dec. 10-13 at 3:00 pm in Lesher Carpeted Lounge. The program

Men's V-Ball Club Debuts

Team proves successful in first tourney

by Joe Scialabba

The newly formed Juniata College Men's Volleyball Club participated in its first tournament Sunday, December 2, at Elizabethtown Collge. One of seven men's collegiate clubs at the Bluejay Invitational, the J.C.M.V.C. finished in a tie for third place with a record of five wins and seven losses.

Juniata's first opponent was DELCO I, the upper level team from Penn State's Delaware County Campus. This match got our team off to a good start with two wins, 15-13 and 15-11. Penn State's second team, DELCO II, became the second victim, 15-7 and 15-10. Spurred by their quick start in the early rounds, the Club defeated their third opponent King's College, in the first game 15-9, but mental lapses and fatigue were the biggest enemies in the second game as the Club fell to King's 10-15.

The competition got tougher in a hurry as the next opponent was Millersville State University, a long established team which plays in the second level of the USVBA. The Juniata squad fell 5-15 and 8-15. Millersville was subsequently disqualified for using an ineligible player. The fifth opponent was rival Messiah whose well-oiled offense took the two game match 9-15 and 4-15.

The Juniata Club faced its biggest test against arch-rival E-town in the last match of the day. The Bluejays had revenge in mind for losses suffered by their girls' team earlier in the year at Juniata. With the vocal support of their fans, the Bluejays were determined to close out the tournamnet with a big victory. The Indian club wanted to play the role of spoiler, for one win over E-town would have dropped the Bluejays to second spot. But the veteran team from E-town prevailed, 5-15 and 9-15. This forced a one game playoff in which E-town bested Messiah 15-13 for the championship of the Bluejay Invitational.

The Club's offense was sparked by the devastating spikes of Chris Hester and Mark Heinly. Mike Wojcik, Ray White, Keith Hall, Terry Seiple and Wes Harpold were strong on blocking, digs and defensive play as well as offense. Captain Tom Hunt lead the setting corps of Andy Rhinehart and Larry Hillman.

After the tournament Juniata coaches Jenny Kauffman and Jessica Fox agreed that the Club had performed very well in its first tournament, especially given that the Club only started practicing at the beginning of November.

Fall I.M. Playoff Wrap-Up

by Andy Hiscock

Well, the 1984 Fall Intramural season has gone into the record books, and the Winter activities are beginning to take shape. Since the Juniatian did not go to print the last week of the fall term, their was insufficient time to prepare an article covering the Fall Intramural play-offs. I would now like to take the time to give the teams who scratched their way to the championships of their respective I.M. sports the credit they deserve.

The Co-Rec Volleyball Division A (competitive) play-off began on November 5th, and consisted of a semi-final, quarter-final, and final round which was held on November 8th. The top eight teams made the play-offs, with no team receiving a "bye" from the semi-finals. "Great Expectations" defeated "Edge of Night", "Arrowmen" defeated "Contusions", "Laba Laba's" beat "Sill's Studbusters", and "Reverse Perspective" defeated "The Red Herrin's" to advance to the quarter-finals. In the quarter-finals, "Great Expectations" got by "Contusions" 8-15, 15-0, 15-7 to move into the finals while "Reverse Perspective" had their hands full with "Laba Laba's", barely squeaking to a 13-15, 21-19, 11-3 victory. Joe Scialaba (losing team) was quoted after the game as saying, "It was a war!" Well in the final match for the championship, "Reverse Perspective" may still have been feeling the effects of their quarter-final battle as they fell to "Great Expectations" 13-15, 15-5, 15-8. Good play at the net by Mike Wojcik and consistent serving by Lisa Hocker helped "Great Expectations" win the championship.

The play-offs in Co-Rec V-Ball Division B consisted of a 1st, semi-final, quarter-final, and final round. I will trace the paths of the two teams reaching the Final round. "Ball Busters" defeated "Last Round-up" 5-15, 15-7, 11-6; and defeated "The Flash" 15-5, 15-9 in the semi-finals to move into the quarter-finals. "Ackee 1-2-3" had a 1st round "bye" and went on to beat "One More Time" 15-6, 15-9 to reach the quarter-finals. "Ackee 1-2-3" was pushed to three games, but held on to beat "Tussey" 13-15, 15-8, 11-5 to gain a ticket to the championship match. "Ball Busters" also were victorious, defeating "Something Good" 13-15, 15-1, 11-3 to reach the final round. Although Kristen Kearns was 'setting' effectively for "Ball Busters", the efforts of "Ackee 1-2-3" team members Jill Krause and Mike Wasilus helped propel them to a 15-12, 15-12 championship victory.

Although there were no play-offs held in Women's I.M. Soccer, "The Spiders from Mars" (4-0) were declared champions because they had the best overall record at the end of regular season play.

The top four Men's Softball teams made the play-offs. These teams were "LGCF's" advance to the Championship game by defeating "South". With a solid all-around game from Scott Snyder and with the strong bat of Dave Musser, "LGCF's" were able to defeat "Alvin and the Budmen" to win the championship.

Slow Start For Men's Basketball

by Joe Scialabba

The Juniata men's basketball team started the 1984-85 season last week with good effort, but no victories.

The "new look" Indians, in their new, bright gold uniforms played with a great deal of excitement in three tough losses.

The season opener with Lycoming in Memorial Gym went down to the wire.

The Tribe, led by Mark Rucinski's 13 points and 15 rebounds, lost in the closing minute, 52-49.

The senior center, Rucinski reached the 1,000 career point mark on his final point of the night.

Junior transfer point guard Eric Lane added 10 points while freshman forward Carlton Rodgers contributed a dozen markers.

At Elizabethtown on Wednesday night, the Indians fell victim to a slow start, losing 60-54. Juniata did not score a field goal until almost midway through the first half.

Junior Dickie Moses caught fire in the second half, scoring 16 of his team-high 18 points. Rodgers had 12 points; Rucinski 10.

The Tribe trailed 31-24 at halftime, and made a solid comeback only to be hurt by its own turnovers, 24 in all.

Juniata had 23 turnovers against Lyco in the opener.

On Saturday, in New Jersey, FDU-Madison knocked-off the Indians, 62-58.

The Tribe, outscored by 12 points at the foul line at E-town, was defeated at the charity stripe, as the hosts made 14-of-16 to JC's 4-of-4.

Juniata once again had trouble with turnovers, losing a total of 18 at FDU.

Head Coach Dan Helm is hopeful that the losses of last week will lead to a better performance down the line. "We basically need to cut down our turnovers, and stop fouling so much," explained Helm. "We certainly have the capability to be a good basketball team.

Ladies Basketball Looks Good

The Juniata women's basketball team is off to a fast start with a record of 2-1.

The Indians only loss came at Elizabethtown, 62-60, last Wednesday.

Freshman Sue Grubb, a graduate of Elizabethtown High School, went home to score 21 points and grab 14 rebounds.

Senior standout Patti Ryan had 14 points and 14 bounds, while senior Holly Crable added 11 points.

The Tribe trailed 34-27 at halftime, but rallied to make it a very close finish. The difference was the foul line, where the Blue Jays made 10-of-16 to Juniata's 6-of-14.

The Tribe opened the season with a home victory over Lycoming, 66-41.

Ryan had 22 points as the Indians led from start to finish.

On Saturday, Juniata pounded Grove City, 72-54.

It was Grubb, once again, leading the Indians with 19 points. Freshman Karen Ramm had 13, Ryan 12 and sophomore Becky Hostetter 10 points in the victory.

The Tribe led 37-21 at the half, and never looked back in the second twenty minutes.

The Indians shot a fine 47.3 percent from the floor, but a dangerous 2-of-14 at the foul line.

Juniata hosted Franklin and Marshall on Tueday.

The women will travel with the men on Saturday to meet MAC opponent Messiah. The doubleheader in Grantham gets underway at 6 p.m.

Lady Indians Battle to the End

Ladies put together unbelievable comeback effort that just falls short

by Joe Scialabba

The try for a third Final Four berth in four seasons ended on Saturday night for our Lady Indians, as the Juniata women's volleyball team dropped a 3-2 decision to the Massachusetts Institute of Technology in the NCAA Division Three National Quarter-finals.

MIT, now 35-4, took control early, but had to hold off a spirited Juniata rally in front of a large and vocal crowd in Memorial Gym.

The Tribe showed the character of a top-ranked team, as the number-one seeded team in the national tournament fought back from a very flat start.

After losing the first two games, 15-8 and 15-8, Juniata began to get back in the match.

The Indians coasted to a 15-5 win in game three and then won a hard fought fourth game, 15-12.

In game four, after falling behind 4-1, 11-7 and 12-10, Juniata scored the final five points to force a fifth and final game. Senior Ekanong Opanayikul was a major contributor in the latter part of game four with several big kills.

Game five began with the momentum on a swing toward the Juniata side, and the home crowd in a frenzy.

Despite a great effort, the Indians just couldn't continue to fall behind and come back. MIT held off the Tribe, 15-11, to earn a semi-final match with Calvin (MICH) on Friday in Elmhurst, Ill. The deciding game was another see-saw affair. Juniata led 5-3 in the early going, as MIT lost hitter Lori Cantu with a cut above her left eye. Cantu, an All—American last season, was injured when diving for a ball in the beginning stage of game five.

Cantu returned, however, and began to take over again, as she had throughout the early part of the match. The Engineers scored nine unanswered points to lead 12-5.

Again the Indians didn't quit, as freshman Jodi Cox came off the bench to make a pair of spectacular spikes and lead Juniata back to only a 12-11 deficit.

Despite the heroic comeback, the match ended for the Tribe soon after as MIT followed the 12-11 sideout with three quick points to end Juniata's 1984 season.

The final match of this season once again showed why Juniata is considered one of the best Division Three women's volleyball teams in the country.

The Indians, under Coach Larry Bock and assistant Sue Barker, finished the year with an excellent 49-6 record, and despite a dreadful beginning on Saturday had enough character to turn the match around and put together a strong finish.

Juniata should feel nothing but pride for the accomplishments of this 1984 volleyball team, as well as the way we supported its efforts. It was a great season.

Larry Bock will have to try very hard to replace seniors Tracey DeBlase, Peggy Evans and Eing, but he has a strong group of underclassmen to work with.

Lori Bason, Jodi Cox, Dorene Duncan, Mariella Gacka, Diana Hauger, Brenda Heiland, Beth Hoppel, Cathy Miller, Carolyn Stambaugh and Robin Urban are all names that will carry on the Juniata women's volleyball tradition.

This year's team was truly a team, with no one outstanding player. It was solid from top-to-bottom. It was a team that will be followed by other teams, but a team that will never be replaced.

Unbelievable!! I can only respond to the feelings that I have about our Ladies' Volleyball team and their efforts this past weekend as a fan caught up in the action. The crowd tried to help rally the ladies through the first two games, and then we began to lose our spirit, but our ladies built a lead in games #3 and pulled the crowd up rather than us pulling them up. When we lost the deciding game, our initial feeling was one of despair, but we soon realized that our girls had a very successful season, and never gave up. I know I am not alone when I congratulate the girls, and thank them for the effort that they gave this past weekend and throughout the whole season. I wish them luck in the years to come.

World News Update

by Cindy Duick

NEW YORK — "One of the most amazing stories of heroism of our time" is being played out at this moment in Iran, stated U.S. Ambasador Richard Schifter. A religious group, the Baha'i of Iran are being tempted to renounce their faith by the Iranian government. The government uses pressure of torture and possible execution against the Baha'is, of whom 750 were imprisoned and more than 170 had died or been executed in Iranian prisons as of November.

Ambassador Schifter explained the Baha'is situation to a United Nations Committee discussing Religious Intolerance on Nov. 27. He said the Baha'i are a "friendly, kind-hearted and totally peaceful group" whose religion "teaches them not to involve themselves in politics, but to accept whatever laws and rules a government might lay down." But in Iran persecution is not a result of political or religious activity, persecution results simply from religious belief.

The United Nations Commission on Human Rights named a special representative to investigate the conditions in Iran. The representative will report his findings to the Human Rights Commission during their February 1985 session.

The Baha'i Faith is a worldwide religion, with communities in over 100 countries. There are 100,000 members in the United States, 7,500 of whom fled Iran after the 1979 revolution. In Iran the Baha'i are the largest religious minority and have not been recognized in Iranian constitutions in 78 years.

Dinner Club Awaits Official Opening

by Ann Cameron

Saturday evening, December 8, 1984, members of the Residential Life Committee and special guests attended a trial run of Juniata's new dinner club restaurant. The diners enjoyed an evening of fine food in a relaxing atmosphere.

The purpose of the dinner club is to provide students with a place to go on campus for a special evening out. Because of the overwhelming success of Saturday's trial run, the dinner club restaurant will officially open on January 19, 1985 and be offered every third Saturday evening. The Residential Life Committee with the help of Norm Gopsill and Hallmark Food Services will be operating this new restaurant project. Sharon Arber, chairman of Residential Life, says, "The idea is to make the dinner club as much like a real restaurant as possible."

Students wishing to attend the dinner club on a given Saturday will register at the information desk in Ellis Hall. Upon registering, you must indicate the size of your party and each person must select one of seven main entrees: Shrimp Scampi, New York Strip Steak, Prime Rib, Stuffed Pork Chops, Veal Parmesan, Stuffed Chicken Breast and Chicken Cordon Bleu. Diners will register for one of three sittings, 6:00 p.m., 6:20 p.m., 6:40 p.m.; however, unlimited time will be permitted for enjoying the fine food, soothing atmosphere and good company. Dress code, as chosen by survey responses, will be slacks and sweaters. The price for the dinner club will be $3.50 with a meal sticker. Guests and students who are not on the meal plan are welcome. The price for their dinners is as yet undetermined. A name for the club also has not yet been chosen. Live entertainment or piped-in dinner music will enhance the dinner club's candlelit atmosphere.

Members of the committee were especially pleased with the excellent full course meals. The top quality food was prepared by Hallmark Food Services but was not the ordinary cafeteria entrees. Everyone left the table satisfied and several were too full to choose one of the five delicious dessert selections. The Residential Life Committee is excited and encouraged by their project's success and invites you to join them for an evening of fine dining in the faculty lounge at Juniata's new dinner club restaurant.

Choir to Perform

by Lauralee Snyder

The Juniata College Concert Choir will be performing their annual Christmas concert this Tuesday, December 18, at 8:30 p.m. in Oller Hall.

With Dr. Joseph Figg as choral director, this year's concert looks to be one of the finest.

Selections from various composers such as Victoria, Willan, and Distler will be performed. An array of many traditional Christmas carols from around the world are also included in the program.

The first half of the program will be sung acapella by the Concert Choir. Christmas favorites such as "Carol of the Bells," "I wonder as I Wander" and "Deck the Halls" will be performed.

The second half of the program features the "Gloria" by Antonio Vivaldi, sung by the Choral Union with full orchestration.

First performed in Venice around 1725 as the second section of the Roman Mass, the "Gloria" is one of the few vocal works of Vivaldi still performed today. It is written in twelve sections for chorus orchestra and soprano and alto soloists.

Many additional Juniata students and Huntingdon townspeople who have been attending choir practices once a week for the past few months will be on hand to join in the singing of the "Gloria."

The choir also plans to perform some of their selections at the Madrigal Dinner tomorrow.

This year's concert plans to be very diversified in music, but still beholding the excellence the Juniata Concert Choir is so renowned for.

Madrigal Procedures Are Destined to Change

Tis the season to be jolly, but for those who waited in line to reserve tables for the Madrigal Dinner, the wait was far from enjoyable.

This year's Madrigal sign-ups were a fiasco, as students camped over night to reserve a place in line. Were it not for the quick thinking on the part of students and residential staff members, the out-side camp out could have been a disaster, particularly when considering the cold temperatures.

Last week's outcome provokes thought about the future of Madrigal sign-ups. How many days or weeks in advance of the sign-ups will students wait for next year's dinner? The Juniatian is certain that the sign-up procedure has to change.

Yet, there seems to be resistance to change among the programming staff and Centerboard members. The resistance is primarily due to a lack of feasible alternatives generated through discussions.

The Juniatian isn't advocating any specific alternative. We do, however, support the idea of surveying students to generate suggestions. After compiling the different suggestions, all students could then be given the chance to vote on the "best" choice. In essence, what the majority says, goes.

The Juniatian recognizes that not every one can be happy with any one decision. However, the system must be changed, and we feel that a student body poll is the most logical approach.

ALONG MUDDY RUN

by Linda Ramsay

Tradition. "Fiddler on the Roof" sang a song about it, Mom and Dad live by it and as Madrigal Weekend approaches, we all look forward to it. After a traditional Thanksgiving break, dominated by turkey and football, I returned to Juniata for four weeks of celebrating before Christmas. During Fall term I anticipated these four weeks (instead of three) as an extension of the traditionally biggest blow-off period during the entire year. However, reality has hit hard and for some reason, that extra week of classes has added academic pressure to the seasonal excitement.

But enough about the need to study. This is Madrigal Week. A majority of the canpus is still trying to recuperate after sitting up all night in front of Ellis in order to get prime seats for Madrigal. In honor of the season and in the traditional spirit of the Ramsay household, I'd like to offer my rendition of the Night Before Christmas:

'Twas the night before Madrigal
And all througth the dorm,
My friends were all celebrating
And in very rare form.

Dresses and suits
Hung in the shower
In hopes that they'd be steam-pressed
In an hour.

The pre-party celebration
At the Brass Rail
Was our special toast
To the Wassail.

Betty Ann in her kerchief
And Doc in his cap
Had just served the hen
Right into my lap.

When out from the alcoves
The singing began
The Twelve Days of Christmas
As is always planned.

And what to my wondering ears
Did I hear,
The music of Andy Murray
That I love so dear.

In retrospect
Of the three-hour event,
I wondered if camping in front of Ellis
Made sense?

So, next year, to get your entr'ee
Of lobster and steak
Be prepared to sign-up

I'd like to acknowledge Clement C. Moore and a variety of other contributors, too many to mention here. I guess I've made my point clear. I hope the sign-up procedure doesn't become a tradition. No matter what anyone says, waiting in lines is not a lifelong ambition.

Do you think there should be a change in the way we sign up for Madrigal Dinner tables and if so, how?

Rob Boyer — Sophomore:
"Yes. I think it should be done like a room draw, with seniors getting priority. I was here at 3 a.m. and started off at number 23 and ended at number 31 — it's not fair."

Suzanne Hickle — Senior:
"Definitely, seniors should get first choice."

Kevin Welch — Senior:
" I think it should be done in an order of seniority. The older you get the harder it gets to get up so early and wait."

Cheryl Reynolds — Senior:
"Yes I do, since I waited in line, in the freezing cold, this past Wednesday just for a table. We should either choose numbers like a lottery or maybe have it in a place where everyone at Juniata can attend."

As the situation continually worsens in Central America, it behooves the Reagan administration to change its plan of action, else the region faces a calamity of grave proportions. Due to decades of neglect and myopic handling of the political, historical and social facts of the area, America is perilously close to instituting a regional war which threatens our national security and the rights of Central Americans to live in peace. Our insistency to control the destiny of the region, in a guise of moralism and legitimacy, has promulgated a fear in Washington which allows intervention to stop the regions needed socioeconomic transformation, from exploitation by the developed world, to the right of equality with it.

Central America is a history of injustice where a very few are extremely wealthy, and the vast

If we seek to exclude the Soviets from the region, we should start by removing our support for repressive governments, and push for a democratic settlement of the problems. Peasants seeking freedom from right-wing domination surely do not wish to replace it with a left-wing domination. Soviet policy in Central America is primarily based on taking advantage of existing social unrest to further their expansion in the Western Hemisphere. To prevent such an occurance, it will take vision from Americans to release their economic hegemony over the region. The botton line is are we willing to sacrifice our business interests, (which do little for the peasants but a lot for Americans) for the rights of others

Why is it than some people seem to be able to do so much more than others? And, why do some people appear more organized than others? Both of these questions suggest that a key to success and to getting things accomplished has to do with how well one manages time.

A quote by Ben Walton, editor and publisher of "Effective Time Management", expressess it quite well. According to Walton, "Time is equitable: it respects no one. Everyone receives 24 hours a day, 168 hours a week, regardless of origin, position in life, or particular circumstance." The oft-used phrase, "I am too busy", is no excuse for not getting things done. What we are really saying is that we choose to [illegible]

Semesters to go in effect 1986-87

Dear Editor,

As you have heard by now, the College will be switching from the term to the semester sytem beginning with the 1986-87 academic year. The change will thus affect current Freshman and Sophomores. For these students, course credits will be translated into the new system in such a way as to insure that no student is disadvantaged by the change. The Academic Standards Committee, which as student representatives, is charged with making recommendations on these translations.

The College believes there are [illegible] the current daily structure. It is likely that most will find a semester system to be less stressful. Second, with a longer calendar unit, students will have more time to adjust to course demands, thus enhancing their ability to succeed in those courses. Third, many faculty are aware that it is difficult to cover the requisite course material on a term system; yet, more academic credit is actually given for a unit. Moving to semesters will rectify this matter. Fourth, at the present time, absence from class for any reason — field or athletic trips or illness — causes the loss of a large percentage of class time, which is hard to make up. Such absences are much less severe on the semester system.

There are associated benefits in addition to the day-to-day academic considerations. The changeover

Juniata Performs Thurber

by Carol M. Connell

The presentation of A Thurber Carnival on December 6, 7 and 8 in Oller Hall was an enjoyable event as Juniata students were offered a glimpse into the work of James Thurber. The twelve member cast performed under the direction of assistant professor of English, Dr. Louise Van Keuren with assistance by student director Scott Rhymer.

The play, a collection of scenes, encompassed many topics and theatrical techniques. Varying the number of performers in the sketches enabled the audience to view the wide range of Thurber's writing.

The use of slides of Thurber's cartoons aided the audience's appreciation of the humor and the early jazz music between the scenes helped establish the setting of Thurber's writing.

Backed by the essential behind-the-scenes crew, the cast did a wonderful job displaying Thurber's work as well as their own talent. The six men and six women of the cast were: Lisa Baer, Molly Bagwell, Rob Boyer, Chris Carney, Anne Gogarty, Margaret Gonlewski, Jonathan Hochberg, Cheryl E. Kinbrough, Thomas A. Kochel, Stephen B. Q. Meyer, John Pretrovic and Julia Thomson.

Union Carbide has informed its plants in West Virginia, Georgia, Brazil, and France to use up their stock of the chemical, methyl isocynate, as rapidly as possible.

According to the spokesman, Stephen K. Galpin, Jr., until 1978 a process which did not require the poisonous chemical was used, but this process was changed to involve methyl isocynate because it was more efficient and produced fewer waste products that required treatment.

BHOPAL, India — "The worst is over," said the superintendent of Hamidia Hospital, Saturday, of the poisonous gas leakage from the Union Carbide plant here Monday Dec. 3. The number of deaths is decreasing and the overall medical consequences for survivors might not be as devastating and widespread as originally predicted.

However, the death toll in what is considered "the worst, single acute environmental poisoning in history" was estimated at 2,250 as of Saturday

WASHINGTON — A public review of United States' foreign policy is planned for January by the new chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. Sen. Richard G. Mr. Lugar ascertained that he did not intend the study as criticism of the current Administration, but rather as an effort to educate Congress and the public on the United States' foreign policy position and also to close the gaps widened between Republican and Democratic policy, as a result of the Presidential election.

Sexually Transmitted Diseases Spreading

What are STDS? They are a class of diseases which are usually spread during sexual activity. Because immunity cannot be built up and there is no vaccination against them, they can be recurrent and have serious and permanent consequences. STDS are spreading rapidly because sexual activity is increasing, especially among young people. Often there is no awareness of the diseases, so symptoms are ignored, partners are not informed, and the diseases are spread. Eighty-five per cent of the cases involve people between the ages of 15 and 30, and more than ten million Americans are infected each year.

Gonorrhea is the most commonly reported STDS. It is caused by the Neisseria Gonorrheae bacteria and is transmitted during sexual contact. It cannot be picked up from toilet seats, towels, etc. Symptoms do not always occur. If they do, they appear three days to three weeks after contact with the infected partner. In males and females, symptoms may include pain and burning during urination, and discharge. Diagnosis requires a physical examination as well as laboratory examination of secretions. Antibiotics are safe and effective.

Syphilis is one of the most dangerous STDS. It is caused by the Treponema Pallidum microscopic organism and is almost always transmitted by sexual contact. However, it can also be spread by skin contact if skin is broken or cut. Symptoms eventually disappear but serious consequences can result if untreated. In the first stage, one to twelve weeks after contact, a reddish bump (chancre sore) forms where the organism enterd the body. It lasts one to five weeks and is painless. One to six months after contact, second stage, a rash on chest, back, arms and legs may appear with lymph gland enlargemnt, fever and sore throat. In the third stage, three or more years after contact, there may be ulcers on the skin, arthritis, pain and disability due to damage of heart, blood vessels, and/or brain and spinal cord. Diagnosis includes a physical examination and laboratory examination of blood samples and exudate from chancre sores. Penicillin therapy is effective and has practically eradicated syphilis.

Herpes is any of several diseases that are caused by viruses. Five types of herpes viris can affect humans, including those causing chicken pox, infectious mononucleosis, fever blisters and shingles. However, the major herpes problem today is caused by the Herpes Simplex virus of which there are two types. Type I, called oral herpes, which affects the lips, mouth and occasionally the eyes. The other type is Type II, or genital herpes. Both types cause sores in the affected area. Even after the sores subside, the virus stays in the ganglia (group of nerve cells) near the brain (Type I), or near the base of the spine (Type II). Genital herpes is almost always transmitted by sexual contact, but there is some evidence that the herpes viruses can live for many hours on toilet seats, towels and clothing. However, it is not believed that the transmission of herpes in this manner is likely. Symptoms for Herpes II include painful, blister-like, itching sores in two to twenty days after time of infection and lasting two to three weeks. Also present may be swollen glands, muscular aches, fever, pain and burning on urination, and headache. Diagnosis is made by examination of genital lesions and may be confirmed by laboratory studies. The average frequency of episodes is three or four times a year. However, many people never have another episode, some have them regularly, and others rarely. It is not known what triggers an episode, but some of the possibilities are stress, illness, lack of sleep, poor diet, too much sun or wind,

Foundation Gives Juniata Grant for Book Project

A $10,000 grant from the Arcadia Foundation of Norristown has been awarded to Juniata College for a research project that is developing a bibliography of the college's rare book collection housed in the L.A. Beeghly Library.

Dr. William T. Parsons, professor of history and director of Pennsylvania German studies at Ursinus College, is currently researching the contents of the 12,000 volume collection which includes almanacs, books, pamphlets, handwritten manuscripts and letters and several other publications of Pennsylvnia German origin.

The object of Dr. Parson's research is to publish an annotative bibliography with listings based on the language in which the rare books are written, and brief descriptions of each piece in the Juniata collection. Most of the items in the collection came from Abraham Harley Cassel, a Pennsylvania German farmer; Martin Grove Brumbaugh, former president of Juniata and governor of Pennsylvania during World War I; and W. Emmert Swigart, a prominent Huntingdon resident and noted benefactor of the college.

The Arcadia Foundation supports a wide variety of projects undertaken by organizations and institutions in Pennsylvania. It is particularly interested in projects relating to Pennsylvania history and Pennsylvania German culture.

"We are very grateful to the Arcadia Foundation for their generous grant," said Juniata President Frederick M. Binder. "Juniata has one of the finest collections of Pennsylvania German publications. As a result of Dr. Parson's research and the support from the Arcadia Foundation, we will be able to share the contents of this collection with historians throughout the country."

sexual relations, and irritation from wearing tight jeans.

Herpes II is not life threatening, and it will not interfere with most of your usual activity; but it is imperative that medical advice be obtained if herpes is suspected. Information on how to care for yourself and avoid infecting others is the major concern. Treatment using a glucose derivative is now being tested, but there is no proven cure.

There are many other STDS, some more serious than others, but all require medical attention. Almost all can be cured. If you suspect you have an STDS, get help immediately! Health professionals respect your confidentiality and want to help. Your personal physician, STD clinic, community health agencies, hospitals and school health services are all available to you. There is also a national hotline (800-227-8922). If you have a diagnosed STD, tell your partner(s) and follow physicians' instructions. The ultimate answer to the STD problem is PREVENTION! Protection is possible through use of contraceptives that form a mechanical barrier, limited sexual contacts, good personal hygiene and by learning the facts. STDS CAN BE CONTROLLED.

Lacrosse

Juniata's Lacrosse Club consists of 44 members, 24 women and 20 men. Because of its club status, the lacrosse team is responsible for financing their transportation to away games. However, the college is providing the team with two new nets this year.

The lacrosse team has already raised some money and plans on sponsoring a dance on January 19. The following club officers have been elected: Todd Balantyne and Sue Simpson — co-captains, Phil Schlegel — treasurer, and Polly Oliver — secretary. Brad Small acts as the club's advisor and schedules all games. To date, the men's and women's teams each have two games scheduled, and the men have one tentative game. Beginning January 13, the lacrosse team will have one-hour; student-run practices on Sunday afternoons. No experience is necessary to join the club, and interested persons should contact one of the club's officers.

Scholarship Established At Juniata

A $10,000 bequest from the late Bertha Negley Bergum of Hagerstown, Md. will be used to establish a scholarship at Juniata College.

To be known as the Bertha Negley Bergum Scholarship, funds will be awarded annually to a Juniata student demonstrating unusual confidence and good citizenship. Preference will be given to women students who are members of the Church of the Brethren of Hagerstown.

A long-time Juniata supporter, Mrs. Bergum was a 1918 Juniata graduate and active in the college's Waynesboro/Hagerstown Alumni Club. She died Feb. 27, 1984.

"This scholarship is a fitting tribute to a woman who has always been interested in the welfare of Juniata students," said President Frederick M. Binder in announcing the bequest. "Mr. Bergum's generous support is an example of how Juniata's alumni and friends can make a lasting contribution to the future of the college and its students."

Juniata Receives Bequest

Juniata College has received a $35,500 bequest from the estate of the late Florence H. Roetheli of Hollidaysburg who died in December, 1982.

In keeping with Mrs. Roetheli's wishes, the funds will be used to establish a schoiarship for Juniata students majoring in the health sciences. To be known as the Florence H. Roetheli Scholarship, funds will be awarded annually to a senior at Juniata who intends to pursue a career in the health services field.

A long-time supporter of Juniata College, Mrs. Roetheli was a member of the President's Development Council at Juniata.

"Everyone at Juniata is very grateful to Mrs. Roetheli for her generosity, said Dr. Frederick M. Binder, Juniata's president. "This scholarship will make it possible for Mrs. Roetheli's support to continue for years to come, serving future generations of Juniata students."

Holiday Service Planned

Juniata's Christmas tradition continues on Sunday, December 16 with the annual All-Campus Christmas Service.

The service, planned by the Special Services Committee of the Campus Ministry Board, will preceed the two regular Sunday services. Catholic Mass will be held in the Ellis Ballroom at 6:30 p.m. Andy Murray will lead the Sunday Evening Worship Service at 6:30 in the Stone Church, where Holy Communion will be shared.

At the completion of these two services, everyone is invited to meet on Detwiler Plaza to begin the candlelight processional to Oller Hall. Dr. Figg and the concert choir will open the service of song and praise with their performance of two hymns. Scripture readings will be presented by Campus Ministry Board members. A solo by Lori Swivel, "I Wonder As I Wander," will also be included.

Concert choir members will draw the service in Oller to a close by initiating the "passing of the light" and leading a candlelight processional out into the lawn of Oller, where all will sing Christmas carols together.

CASE Urges Students to Recognize Own Limits

by Ginny Krall

Juniata's biggest holiday weekend is almost here, with semi-formals and cocktail parties filling our agendas. During this festive season, CASE, the Committee for Alcohol Studies and Education, urges you to recognize your alcohol limits.

The same amount of alcohol can affect different people in different ways. Here are some basic factors that determine how alcohol will effect you:

1) How fast you drink. If you sip a drink and do not have more than one drink per hour, the alcohol will not have a chance to build up in the bloodstream.

2) What type of beverage you drink. Diluting alcohol with water will slow absorption into the circulatory system.

3) How much you weigh. The same amount of alcohol has a greater effect on a smaller person than it [illegible]

There are no cures for hangovers either. Coffee, raw eggs and the ever popluar aspirin before going to bed, do not prevent hangovers. What works is time — along with lots of rest.

This weekend, before you begin your party schedule, remember these important alcohol facts. But most importantly, if you choose to drink, drink responsibly!

Social Service Club

Love Becomes Fund Director

Majorie J. Love has been named director of annual fund at Juniata College, according to an announcement made by college president, Dr. Frederick M. Binder. Miss Love will continue to serve the college as assistant director of alumni relations, a post she has held since joining the Juniata administration in October, 1983.

As director of annual fund, Miss Lowe will be in charge of the college's Annual Support Fund (ASF), this year set at $275,000. This will include directing the class fund agents and other ASF volunteers. In addition, she will contintue to assist with alumni club activities, the alumni admissions program and other alumni functions.

Miss Love, a native of Shirleysburg, received her B.S. degree in business administration/marketing management from Juniata in 1980.

Winter Intramural Program to Begin

by Andy Hiscock

The 1984-85 Winter Intramural program will begin on December 12th. This Winter there is an expanded number of men, women, and Co-Recreational sports offered. As has been the tradition of I.M.'s offered at Juniata in the past, I am expecting a large number of people to participate in the various sports, and the quality of competition to be high.

Among the sports offered for Men only, Women only, and Co-Recreational this Winter will be Basketball, Volleyball, Water Polo, and Indoor Soccer. There will also be Team Handball and Individual Handball leagues for both Men only, and Women only. Anyone wishing to write an article for the Juniatian covering one of these sports is welcome. No experience is necessary, just attend our staff meeting oat 7:30 p.m. on Tuesday at our office in the basement of Ellis Hall (across from V103). I wish everyone participating in the Winter I.M. program a successful season.

represents an opportunity to reconsider the general education and graduation requirements. Second, it will enable the College to reduce the costs associated with registration and billing. Third, vacations and breaks will be distributed more evenly throughout the year. Fourth, the schedule will end classes earlier in the spring, which will enable students to seek summer employment at a more opportune time. Last, the change puts us squarely in line with the calendar used by a majority of colleges in the country. This will make it easier to schedule athletic contests for example.

In addition to these questions to be addressed by the Academic Standards Committee, there are also questions to be considered by other committees and groups. Students are generally represented in these areas.

The period of the next two years is an opportunity to look at all aspects of the Juniata experience to make them even better; broad student participation is essential, and will provide many opportunities to develop additional skills useful to you throughout your lives. Change can be perceived as threatening, or as an opportunity to explore new ideas. We encourage you to join with us in this exciting new venture.

Indians celebrated their first victory of the 1984-85 season. The Indians defeated Gettsyburg 67-64 this last Thursday in Memorial Gym.

There's only one sure way to avoid rape.

Avoid the rapist.

The only way to confront a rapist is on the safe side of a locked door.

- If you live alone, be sure your door has a deadbolt lock, and a peephole.
- Never let a stranger talk his way in. Demand identification.
- When you change addresses, change the lock on every outside door.
- Stay clear of deserted laundromats, apartment laundry rooms and out of the way parking lots...especially at night.
- Never put your first name on the mailbox or in the phone book...just your first initial.

Remember, the rapist is a dangerous, unpredictable person. He's not to be reasoned with . . . just avoided.

Men Conquer First Victory of Season

by Joe Scialabba

The Juniata men's basketball team got victory number one of the 1984-85 season last week, but lost two other contests to fall to 1-5.

The Indians picked-up their first "W" of the year with a 67-64 decision over visiting Gettysburg.

Freshman guard Wayne Paul was the hero as he canned a short jumper and four free throws in the final 35 seconds to give the Tribe the victory.

Junior Dickie Moses had 18 points to lead Juniata, while senior Mark Rucinski scored 15 points to go with 14 rebounds. Paul added 10 points.

Before beating the Bullets on Wednesday, the Indians lost a 71-53 battle with Washington and Jefferson Monday night.

Trailing only 54-53 with just over four minutes left, the Indians watched the Presidents parade to the foul line and score the game's final 17 points.

On Saturday night, Juniata took a ten-point lead in the first half but hosting Messiah stormed back to take a 72-65 Middle Atlantic Conference victory.

Juniata senior flanker Dave Murphy was honored All-MAC and Co-League Player of the Year.

Junior noseguard Gino Perri was first team All-League while senior offensive lineman Greg Lomax was honorable mention.

Senior setter Peggy Evans was All-MAC in volleyball for a second time.

Also, junior Sue Occiano was selected as All-MAC in field hockey.

Ladies Off To A Great Start

by Joe Scialabba

The big story of this 1984-85 basketball season on College Hill has been the great start of the women's basketball team.

Juniata, under coach Nancy Latimore, is off to a 4-1 record and has played some very competitive basketball along the way.

Last week, the Indians got big wins over visiting Franklin and Marshall on Tuesday, and at Messiah on Saturday.

It took a great team effort for the Tribe to nip F & M, 59-58.

Sophomore Janet Robison hit a shot at the buzzer to give JC the win.

the Indians, who shot a cold 36 percent from the floor, made 11-of-18 free throws to help recover from a 24-19 halftime deficit.

Freshman Sue Grubb had 16 points to lead Juniata. Patti Ryan scored 15 points and grabbed 14 rebounds while Robison added 14 points.

In Grantham, the Tribe shot a sizzling 61 percent from the field in the first half and 51 percent on the night in holding-off Messiah, 80-76.

The final field goal percentage was a new Juniata record.

After building a 46-32 half-time advantage, the Indians let the hosts back in the game, only to recover and take home the Middle Atlantic Conference win.

Senior Holly Crable led the Indians with 22 points off the bench, hitting 8-of-12 from the floor.

Ryan added 18 points, Karen Fonner 10. Grubb grabbed 10 rebounds.

The Indians played at Susquehanna last night.

Grapplers Fare Well

by Michael Culver

Despite a disappointing season opener last weekend at Lebanon Valley, the Juniata wrestlers fought back and came out on top of Baptist Bible at a tri-meet held at Susquehanna on Saturday.

The 1-1 Indians have five returning lettermen this year — Dave Cooper (150), Randy Smith (177), Steve Feltenberger (161), Paul Bernhart (118), and Rick Knoll — all of whom recorded victories in the team's win except Knoll who is injured.

Also scoring wins against Baptist Bible were Matt Eggleston with a pin at heavy weight, Greg Hughes with a pin at 158, and Chris Ernst with a fall at 142.

Juniata's victory was accomplished by overcoming two forfeits at 126 (Knoll's weight) and 190. Randy Smith dropped from his original 190 pound spot to fill the 177 due to an injury to sophomore Bill Hinchman. Juniata's effort to make up for these two forfeits (total of 12 points) against Susquehanna fell short. However, Greg Hughes did pick up his second fall of the afternoon for Juniata.

Coach Berrier's team does not hit the mats again until January 14th, when Juniata hosts their tournament. Although the team is low in numbers with just 12 wrestlers on the roster, they are tough competitors. As Berrier continues to drill them and the injury problem is resolved, the Indians expect a successful season.

INSTITUTE, W.Va. — Tons of cancer-causing chemicals are reportedly spewn into the air each day from Union Carbide's Institute plant according to a government scientist. The plant, which is the only United States producer of the chemical involved in the Bhopal India disaster, emits 2,000 tons of some 60 chemicals which are known as cancer-causing agents from process vents, said Dr. Peter Infante, an Occuaptional Safety and Health Administration scientist, at a congressional hearing.

Conservation Task Force Meets to Plan Audit

by Beth Gallagher

Reducing campus wide energy consumption was the primary focus of last week's Energy Conservation Task Force meeting.

The Energy Conservation Task Force, chaired by Matt Siegel, was formed to investigate and make recommendations regarding energy consumption on Juniata's campus. Affiliated with the Residential Life Committee, the task force consists of approximately 15 students who are concerned about the trends in energy consumption. Matt encourages any students with ideas or interest to contact them and join the task force.

Last week's discussion featured input from Mr. Larry Irwing, a representative from Penelec, the electric company which serves Juniata and the surrounding area. Mr. Irwing explained the peak hours for energy comsumption for Juniata College in relation to peak hours for the region. Irwing particularly emphasized the idea of "energy management". Energy management is the concept of shifting energy consumption away from the peak hours to avoid power shortages and higher energy costs for both Penelec and Juniata.

Mr. Irwing also discussed the cost savings which might be appreciated by switching from incandescent to flourescent lighting throughout the residence halls Leaky faucets are also a source of expensive waste, and as Irwing pointed out, the repairs of which could result in enormous savings. The task force is working on various projects to evaluate and improve energy management on campus. Among those projects is an energy audit to be conducted in conjunction with Penelec. Such an audit would assess the amount of energy consumed in each residence hall and would break down the consumption to peak hours. Eventually, the task force would like to conduct a room by room energy audit so that students could realize the actual amount they consume.

Says Mr. Irwing, it is encouraging to see student interest in the field of energy management.

For Siegel, the concentration will be placed on channelling the energies of those on the task force into some serious energy evaluation.

Campus abounds with Christmas cheer

Juniata College is filled with the Christmas spirit. Walking around campus, one's eye is attracted to the Christmas lights and ornaments decorating the dormitories. Ellis Hall is sharply dressed for the holidays with a giant Christmas tree out front and window paintings in Baker Refectory.

Students and faculty shared Christmas cheer the Juniata way last weekend. Friday night, the traditional Madrigal Dinner, with its pageantry, highlighted the weekend. Following the dinner, many students put on their dancing shoes and headed to the Kennedy Sports Recreation Center for the Madrigal Dance. "Rogue" exceeded all our expectations as they put on a stellar performance, drawing praise from everyone who attended. The Christmas celebration continued Saturday night at South's Semi-Formal Dance.

The weekend was appropriately concluded with an All Campus Worship Service in Oller Hall Sunday night. Putting the materialism of the holiday season aside and remembering the true meaning of Christmas. Protestants and Catholics praised Jesus in song and prayer.

The Juniatian commends the Madrigal Dinner Committee, the Dance Committee, the Campus Ministry, the Concert Choir and the rest of the student body and faculty for spreading the spirit of Christmas here at Juniata.

The Juniatian wishes all students and faculty a Very Merry Christmas and a Very Happy New Year!!

ALONG MUDDY RUN

by Mark Royer

Yes, the holiday season is upon us again here in Huntingdon, PA. Soon we will see the town children out in their yards building slush-men.

At Juniata the holidays are ushered in with the traditional Madrigal Dinner. Served in our traditional dining establishment, this meal takes on a special meaning: no jeans and t-shirts this evening; no mud-coated soccer players just off their practice field; and, alas, no Captain Crunch for dessert.

Many people have questioned the sign-up procedure for the Madrigal. As we viewed the festivities down below from our table up in Tote, several alternatives came to mind. Someone suggested that the Small Business Management class could handle the sign-ups in an efficient manner. Instead of each table sending a representative to stand in line at 3:00 in the morning, there is a saner method possible. Some kind of competition, perhaps. How about . . . Trivial Pursuit! (The Yuletide Edition, of course.) Players who win their first game could advance to the next round and try to win a better table. Naturally there would be a nominal entry fee.

Another idea is not to have any sign-ups at all. Everybody would just show up the night of Madrigal and fight for the best seats. Doors could be kept locked until, say 6:00. This "Who concert" approach would probably only be attempted once.

My favorite alternative is the lottery — just draw numbers and assign tables randomly. To avoid disappointment, people would be required to move from table to table. This way everyone would have good seats for at least some of the time. An orderly system could easily be devised. However, I believe there would be a much more enjoyable way to get it done. Here's the plan: As long as the choir is present they might as well be put to use. While the choir is singing everybody remains seated and is able to enjoy their food. But, as soon as the choir stops everybody is required to get up and move to another seat! That's right, musical chairs. Granted there would be problems — you may not see your date after the wassail toast, and you may end up at a seat with a half-eaten steak in front of you — but I think it would be a success overall. After all, look how much fun everybody has jumping up and down for the Twelve Days of Christmas.

Credibility of disciplinary system questioned

Dear Editor,

This letter regards the general rules and regulations sanctioned for the college community. These rules and regulations are made for a specific purpose and should thus be followed. If the rules are broken the violators should expected to be reprimanded.

The rules are made for the entire college community, therefore no explanations should be made. This is our complaint, a disciplinary system such as Juniata's cannot work if some privileged few are afforded the luxury of being exempt from these rules and regulations. If those delegated to service Juniata's disciplinary system choose to "look the other way" for personal friends while going by the book with others, the credibility of our disciplinary system could be seriously undermined.

In a recent violation of rules, we are reprimanded and sanctioned. The violation was by no means malevolent, but never-the-less, it was a rules violation. We were informed that the sanction was a necessity; it had to believed. We agreed and accepted this because it was the "duty" of the individual involved. Duty is the key word; is duty something that can be leisurely discarded at times while being stringently upheld at other times for the purpose of convenience of those with the "pink pads"? This was particulary disturbing to see this dichotomy of actions among one of the more influential persons in our disciplinary system.

Sincerely

From the Pen of. . . !

by David Orth Moore

The budget deficit is projected to be $210 billion in fiscal 1986 and may be still higher in 1987 unless the White House and Congress can come up with some magical potion to stop the spiraling deficit balloon. This budget deficit consumes six percent of our nation's gross national product. The United States' growth in GNP from July to September of this year is down to two percent compared to the growth rate of ten percent and seven percent in the previous two quarters. Economists are predicting a further slowdown in the GNP this holiday season, but hope that by late 1985, the GNP will again be increasing at a mild and sustainable rate of three percent.

To achive this GNP growth of three percent, however, economists warn that the budget deficits must be reduced. When the government can claim a significant reduction in spending, interest rates may again begin to drop causing the dollar abroad to be devalued. When the value of the dollar abroad is devalued, America can begin to balance its trade deficit of $130 billion and climb to a sustainable growth in 1985-86.

Every dollar spent on foreign goods is, of course, a dollar not spent on domestic production. Even if consumer demand is strong, as long as the money is spent on foreign goods, the GNP will not grow; as evidenced by the last quarter, where, even though spending increased at 5.7%, the GNP only rose at 1.9% showing that an increase in demand does not necessarily indicate an increase in profits for America. Every $35 billion in trade deficit lowers the GNP by one percentage point, and costs 700,000 jobs. Since demand is being met from abroad without a depreciation of the dollar, the trade deficit will grow larger. Indeed, economists are predicting that the trade deficit may go as high as $175 billion next year.

The combination of strong demand, mostly met by foreign imports, high interest rates and an overvalued dollar, caused in part by the budget deficits, led to 18 months of non-inflationary growth from late 1982. This non-inflationary growth, and the previous strength of recovery is being undermined by the dollar's strength abroad. We must get interest rates down to restore U.S. competitiveness abroad thus correcting the trade deficit that threatens economic expansion.

In the Capitol City, several plans are brewing in the hope of correcting the budget deficits. Mr. Reagan, with David Stockman's axe, has proposed an opening gambit of $42 billion in cuts; $34 billion worth of cuts in social programs, and a mere eight billion dollars, out of a defense budget of $333.7 billion, cut from defense spending. The defense budget already claims 29% of the budget, while social programs absorb 24% of the budget. So where's the justification for raising the lot of the defense industry, and debatably the strength of America's armed forces, at the expense of the needy in America?

Another proposal is a budget freeze. But this is really impractical since Mr. Reagan cannot freeze interest payments on the deficit (15% of the budget), nor can he touch the 32% of the budget which goes to Social Security, lest he break his election promises. And as Mr. Reagan remains intransigent about cutting the defense budget by any more than eight billion dollars, a freeze in defense spending would not be kosher to the administration since it means a cut of $41 billion from this year's proposed increase in the defense budget. Freezing social programs which use 24% of the budget, therefore, will have little or no impact on reducing the deficit.

The Congress will not allow the administration to disproportionately sharpen its axe on social programs without a similar measure to cut defense spending. Neither will the Congress allow a tax simplification program until it first tackles the problems of the budget deficit. So as the White House and Capital Hill search for a scheme to reduce the deficits, there will emerge one last plan, however unpopular, which will make substantial cuts in the budget deficit; a tax hike.

J.C. Club Corner

by Lisa Greiss
Juniata Executive Club

The Juniata Executive Club (JEC) is composed of approximately 100 active members and is run by a nine-member Executive Board. The club is designed to give business students the opportunity to put into practice concepts which they learn in class.

The majority of the club's members belong to one of J.E.C.'s three major subcommittees: the Marketing Committee, the Finance and Accounting Committee, and the General Management Committee. Each one brings in speakers and plans field trips pertaining to the needs of the group. In addition, there are also two smaller subcommittees: the Internal Affairs Committee, which communicates between the club and the business department, and the Community Relations Committee, which has collected money for needy families during the holidays.

Most Juniata students are familiar with the Juniata Executive Club's major project, Binder's Grinders. Advertising for the business is handled by the Marketing Committee. The General Management Committee is responsible for inventory and desgin setup, and the Finance and Accounting Committee controls the computerized accounting system. However, all club members help with producing and delivering the Binder's Grinders. Any profits are divided among the three committees to pay for their respective speakers and field trips.

Other J.E.C. projects include mud volleyball in the spring, and Juniata student discounts at area merchants displaying the club logo. The Marketing Committee will also order T-shirts from Business Systems for any interested campus organization.

Any Juniata students who are interested in a business-oriented career are invited to join J.E.C. General meetings are held when a project needs to be discussed by all members.

Burkholder to Chair Gifts Committee

W. Clay Burkholder of Milroy has been named chairman of the Planned Gifts Committee for the second phase of Juniata's Century II Campaign.

A 1935 Juniata graduate and member of the college's Board of Trustees since 1980, Burkholder served 21 years as county superintendent of the Mifflin County schools and spent three years as executive director of the Tuscarora Intermediate Unit, retiring in 1974.

Burkholder is a life member of PSEA, NEA and Phi Delta Kappa, and received his M.Ed. degree from The Pennsylvania State University. He is an active member of the White Memorial United Church of Christ and has served on the boards of Lewistown Hospital, Mifflin County Child Welfare Committee, Red Cross and was president of the Milroy Lions Club.

At Juniata, he has served as president of the Alumni Association, Annual Support Fund chairman, chairman of the President's Development Council and as alumni gifts vice chairman of the Sports & Recreation Center phases of the Century II Campaign.

Launched in October, the second phase of Juniata's $20 million Century II Campaign is designed to finance the growth of endowment for academic programming, student scholarship needs, educational equipment and program enrichment.

Road Trips

by Andrew G. Davis

As a child, I used to think of the road as an evil thing. Nothing was worse than pavement, asphalt, macadam. I saw where the grass and trees ceased, and the hard pavement began, and I much preferred greenery over tar. Roads always seemed slippery and dangerous in the winter, and hotter than the devil in the summer. Growing up in a suburban neighborhood a stone's throw from New York, I learned early that there were many roads, certainly more than anybody really needed. With a child's clairvoyance, I envisioned a future world wherein every walkable surface would be paved with asphalt, concrete, or some other man-made material.

Eventually, I began to wander, by bicycle, on buses, in cars. Roads took on a new meaning. They became more of a concept than a physical reality, but the reality was always there. And what a pleasurable reality! How many new places, faces, and ideas there were on this road; what an incredibly vast wealth of experience awaited out there! What a perfect cross-section of life the road is, at times rudely ugly, at times unspeakably beautiful, but always real, and always there.

My older sister once spent a year in France, and while she was there, a Frenchman had asked her if she had "seen her country." She replied that she had never been outside of a small area of the Northeast, except for going overseas. The Frenchman couldn't understand why she wanted to come over and see his small country without having seen all of her own first. There is a lot of sense in this question.

Three years ago this December I had the fortunate opportunity to drive across America, from Seattle, Washington to Massachusettes, via California, Arizona and New Mexico, the Texas panhandle, Oklahoma, Arkansas, and so forth, owing to blizzards along the northern route. The circumstances are immaterial, but the event was singularly significant for me, an experience which was the product of having taken a fondness for travel to the logical limit. I saw a California which wasn't all orange trees and palms, but a nasty desert; a Texas too big for words, clocks, or men; and a South peopled with some of the warmest, openly friendly folk anywhere, not hostile, openly violent hillbillies, as Northeners are led to believe.

I was so impressed by the expansive magnitude of America that I formed the opinion that it should be mandatory for Americans to travel overland across their country at least once, an obvious pipedream, but sincere. For anyone who has ever entertained the idea, I cannot urge or encourage you enough to go for it, to see your country, especially seniors who have thought about crowning their academic experience, for such a trip is undeniably educational. It will change your ideas about yourself as an American, and about America.

Meanwhile, somewhere, there is a young child, standing at the edge where the grass and trees stop, and the road begins. He is scowling at the hard, dirty pavement. For he does not understand.

JC Celebrated Christmas W

Evening Highlighted With An Aw

by Ginny Krall
and
Kathy Manzella

This past weekend Juniata College celebrated the holiday season with its annual Madrigal Dinner-/Dance.

The festivities began with a non-alcoholic cocktail party hosted by President Binder in Ellis Hall. This CASE (Committee for Alcohol Studies and Education) sponsored event was held in the President's dining room and was well attended by both students and faculty.

Juniata's concert choir opened the Madrigal dinner with several holiday selections including: "Carol of The Bell," the ever popular "Deck The Halls," and of course "The Wassail Song." Senior Richard Mrosky then followed with the traditional wassail toast.

After dinner, the Madrigal audience was entertained by senior soloist Lori Swivel as she sang "The Christmas Song." Juniata's own flute choir then entranced the diners with four flute pieces. The group ended with junior Lauren Rogerson's arrangement of "Greene Sleeves."

Andy and Terry Murray concluded the Madrigal dinner entertainment. The Murrays performed a variety of seasonal songs including the ever popular "The Twelve Days of Christmas."

Andy Murray also performed a song he composed and dedicated to his aunt who was stricken with cancer. He reminded the audience

The Madrigal dinner ended with e traditional "passing of the ght", along with warm holiday shes among students and facty, as well as the solemn ristmas carol "Silent Night."

"Rogue" rocked the crowd in emorial Gymnasium at the Madgal Dance. The band played a de variety of songs including ections by Huey Lewis, Yes, ACDC, Genesis, Journey, Billy Joel, ZZ Top, and many others.

The band left the students yelling for more after they performed their final song of the evening which was "Shout." During this song the members of the band went all out thrilling the students by jumping from the speakers to the stage, and doing the "worm" both on stage as well as on the mezzanine.

Both the dinner and the dance were well attended this year. Almost 800 students were served by the faculty at dinner. Approximately 350 students and faculty attended the dance.

According to Rich Mrosky on Monday's Centerboard-Student Government radio spot, this year's Madrigal Dinner and Dance was one of the best ever. Congratulations to the Madrigal Dinner Committee and Dance Committee on such a fine weekend! It was an event that will warm the minds of all J.C. students for a long time.

JC Offers Management Certification

Courses in the Management Certification Program, as well as other credit courses, are being offered again this winter through Juniata College's Continuing Education Program.

"Managerial Accounting" and "Principles of Management" are part of the six-course Management Certification Program designed primarily for supervisors and potential supervisors in business and industry. An achievement certificate is awarded after the successful completion of the six, two-credit courses which are offered at Juniata over a two-year period.

"Managerial Accounting" examines the fundamental principles and assumptions of accounting as well as the techniques and procedures used by managers from accounting data to faciliate the decision making process. An introductory accounting or principles course is a prerequisite for taking this course.

H. Christopher Peterson, assistant professor of economics and businesss administration, is the course instructor. Classes will meet from 7 to 9:30 p.m. on 10 Mondays beginning Jan. 7.

"Principles of Management" is an analysis of organizations and their primary functions of planning, organizing, staffing, directing and controlling. Case studies are used extensively.

The course instructor is James R. Donaldson, associate professor of economics and business administration, and the class will meet on 10 Thursdays from 7 to 9:30 p.m. beginning Jan. 10.

Although not part of the Management Certification Program, "Introduction to Computer Science" is a valuable course for individuals wishing to learn more about computers and their applications. Course emphasis will be on programming using the BASIC language and text processing facilities. Homework assignments require the use of Juniata's academic computer or a suitable personal computer.

Loren H. Rhodes, assistant professor of mathematics and computer science, will teach the course on 10 Tuesdays from 7 to 9:30 p.m. beginning Jan. 8.

The fee for each of these courses is $150 and full payment is required before the first class begins. Registration should be completed five days prior to the first class and a $50 fee for each course is required at registration. Checks should be made payable to Juniata College.

To register for a course or obtain additional information on the Continuing Education Program, contact the Juniata College Registrar's Office, Founders Hall, (814) 643-4310, extension 272.

WASHINGTON — According to administration sources President Reagan is considering ignoring senior advisors, Republican congressional leaders, and other elected officials who advise him to weaken the defense build up. Defense secretary Casper Weinberger has resisted military spending savings which were outlined by White House Budget Director David A. Stockman.

As of last week Mr. Reagan was still saying that he will be remaining firm in his committment to cut budget deficits. To achieve his goal, $42 billion in budget saving is needed next year. Reagan has already decided on $33.6 billion in domestic spending cuts, but it is reported that Weinberger's refusal to accept military spending cuts could affect Reagan's plans.

Kvasir Accepts Material

by Carol Connell

Kvasir, Juniata's art and literary magazine, will be accepting original material for submission until January 31st.

To submit short stories, poems, drawings, photos, etc., students should drop them off in the Kvasir folder in the Humanities Building (near Dr. Hunter's office, give them to a Kvasir editor, or send them to box 1647.

Kvasir, which plans to be printed in late March or early April, is an organization run by students to present a medium for fellow students' work.

The staff of Kvasir will hold its next meeting in the Blue Room on January 16th, at 8 p.m.

New Pool Hours Altered

by Kathy Manzella

The Students Concern Committee has announced that some of the pool hours will be changed upon return from break.

After compiling the results of a survey on the matter, the Committee felt that some changes in the current hours are needed. The weeknight hours have been changed from 7:30 - 8:30 p.m. to 8:00 - 9:30 p.m. and all other hours will remain the same. The Committee hopes that these new hours will accommodate the students better.

Brad Small, who is working with the Students Concern Committee on the matter, stressed that these new hours will be tested during the month of January. If the student participation is high during these hours they will remain in effect for the rest of the year. If the swimmer participation is low at this time, other changes may be made in the hours.

Small stressed that the pool is available on the weekends for pool parties. Any dorm, group, or organization is permitted to use the pool at this time. Anyone interested in using it should contact either Brad Small or Rosyln Hall. There is no charge for usage of the pool.

Lady Indians Outdistanced 82-56

by Joe Scialabba

The Juniata women's basketball team played a bad game at a bad time last week as host Susquehanna whipped the Indians, 82-56.

Coach Nancy Latimore's team still boasts a 4-2 record, with only a date at the Muskingam (OH) Tournament this weekend remaining on the pre-Christmas schedule. the Tribe is 2-2 in the Middle Atlantic Conference.

Susquehanna showed why it is one of the top teams in the conference, as well as Division Three, with a potent offense and strong board game.

The Crusaders only led 33-26 at the half, but ran away from the Indians in the final twenty minutes. Susquehanna shot 47.8 percent from the floor and hit 16-of-21 foul shots, as four players reached double figures. They out rebounded the Indians, 49-29.

Juniata once again relied on the strong senior-freshman combination of Patti Ryan and Sue Grubb. Grubb scored 19 points and had 9 rebounds, while Ryan scored 18 points and grabbed a 6 boards.

The Tribe shot a cold 36.1 percent from the field, to help keep the hosts in control.

Juniata will host Susquehanna on Jan. 10, when they resume conference play after the holidays.

St. Clair On T.V.

by Joe Scialabba

Juniata freshman Greg St. Clair of Johnstown, and his family are featured this month on a television documentary about Pennsylvania.

The hour-long program, "Portrait of America", will be broadcast four times in December, including Dec. 22 and 26, on WTBS, Atlanta, GA.

The "Portrait of America" series displays life in the fifty states, through people, places and events.

Greg's family was filmed for the documentary by a film crew from Phillip Burton Productions of New York.

A strong safety on the Indian football team, Greg can be seen in the documentary intercepting a pass and returning it 72 yards for a touchdown for Bishop McCort High School against Penn Cambria.

The crew followed his parents, Jacob and Diana, to the game as part of the production, to show spirit off the field as well as on.

The production of the show was completed before Greg began his stay here at Juniata.

The Juniata College men's basketball team ended 1984 with a 92-65 romp over PSU – Capitol Campus last Saturday in Memorial Gym.

Junior Dickie Moses put on another shooting exhibition, hitting 12-of-17 shots from the floor on his way to a team-high 26 points. Freshman Carlton Rodgers was 9-for-11 in gathering 18 points, while classmate Marty Nietz came off the bench to tally a dozen markers.

Mark Rucinski, Kevin Feagins and Moses had nine rebounds in leading the Tribe to the non-conference victory.

On Monday and Wednesday Juniata lost two Middle Atlantic Conference decisions, both on the road.

A five-minute scoring drought at Reading cost the Indians, as Albright picked-up a 69-55 win.

Juniata was led by Moses, who hit for 19 points. Rucinski had 14 points and 7 rebounds.

It was 33-33 at halftime, but the hosting Lions hit six more field goals than the Tribe in the second half to pull away.

At Selinsgrove the Indians met a similar fate. The Crusaders shot 64.5 percent from the floor on the night and a torrid 78.6 in the second half to shoot down the Tribe, 89-72.

Juniata shot a respectable 54.1 percent but couldn't keep it close in the final twenty minutes. Susquehanna led 38-32 at halftime.

Moses once again led the Tribe with 16 points. Rodgers had 14 points, Eric Lane 12, and Rucinski 13 points and 12 rebounds.

The Indians, 2-7 and 0-6 in the MAC, host Susquehanna on Jan. 10.

"We played some good basketball this month," said coach Dan Helm. "But we need to learn to play the entire forty minutes."

The Men's team will have two home games the first week that we are back from break. On Thursday, January 10th, the Indians will meet Susquehanna in Memorial Gym at 8 p.m., and on Saturday, January 12th, they will face Scranton at home beginning at 4 p.m.

Football Players Nationally Recognized

Two Juniata football standouts were among the top statistical leaders in the country for the 1984 season.

Quarterback Mike Culver finished sixth in the nation in the NCAA Division Three for total offense, according to The NCAA News. The sophomore averaged 232.8 yards per game in rushing and passing to finish as the second-ranked underclassman, behind sophomore Dean Ulrich of Alma (Mich.), who finished fifth overall.

Senior flanker Dave Murphy made the chart in the scoring department with an average of 7.6 points per game, good enough for a tie for 22nd nationally. The All-American candidate scored 12 touchdowns on the season, to go with four extra points to gain a toal of 76.

Culver was the second highest finisher among Middle Atlantic Conference players – only Lycoming punter Chris Howell was above Culver's sixth place finish.

Howell was fifth in the nation in punting average with a solid 40.2 yards per boot.

I.M. Volleyball Seasons Begin

by Andy Hiscock

The Winter Term Intramural Volleyball season for all four leagues began last week. This year there are more people involved in Intramural Volleyball than in years past, probably because the four different leagues accommodate just about every type of competition (competitiveness) that you could be looking for. There is an all Men's League with full spiking, etc.; an all Women's League; and two separate Co-Recreational Leagues. Co-Rec League "A" is for the people that want to expel more agression than those people in league (division) "B", with League "A" allowing spiking and overhand serving. For the most part, I figure that everyone is out there to have fun (at least at the beginning); and I think that everyone does, although by the end of the season the competition for play-off spots becomes pretty gruesome. Anyway, let me run down the results of the first week of action.

The Women's Volleyball season kicked off on Wed., December 12th. The league consists of seven teams. "The M&M's" defeated "Wonder Women" 15-8,10-15,11-6. Jane Duplak had a sound game for the "M&M's". Also in action were "East" and "First Territories", with "East" coming out on top, 15-3,15-2. Kathy Harwick's serve was a big help for "East". "Get A Clue" also won by default when "Snausages" had to forfeit their match.

The Men's Volleyball Leauge is composed of seven teams who began play on Sunday, Dec. 16th. "Defenders" easily handled "South of the Border" 15-13,15-1. Dave Murphy's height was a definite advantage for the "Defenders". "Magic" were also winners, by defeating "Cloister" 15-7,17-15. In the final Men's match, "People's Front of Jocka" with the help of a few key spikes by Larry Hillman beat "The Mohammed Project" 16-14,15-7.

The "Competitive" Division (A) Co-Rec Volleyball League began their winter schedule on Thursday, Dec. 13th. There are currently seven teams in this Division. On Thursday, "The Other Team" defeated "Just for Fun" 15-9,15-9; "Respect Your Elders" beat "The Five Points" 15-1,15-10; and "Snerds" fought off "The Exterminators" 15-13,6-15,11-3. On Sunday, Dec. 16th, "Respect Your Elders" defeated "The Exterminators" in a good match 15-11,16,14. "PAKA" won their first match of the season with the help of Chris Hester at the net 15-4,15-13 over "Just for Fun"; and "Snerds" squeezed by "The Other Team" 14-16,15-6,11-6.

In Co-Rec Division (B), last Thursday, "Deuteronomy, Son of Gath" defeated "No Win Situation" 15-6,15-9. Jeff Aurand had a good all around match for Deuteronomy. "Ladafas" were also victorious over "Grain Train" with the help of Jen Kauffman's solid serving 15-3,15-11. "Long" handily defeated "Druts" 15-2,15-4. Jim Bickel set up the front line effectively for "Long". "Destruction" beat "PMS's" 15-8,15-6 with the exceptional "dinking" ability of Sue Smith. "Screwballs" won by forfeit over "Contusions II", and Sue Simpson played well for "Queefs II" in their 15-13,15-7 victory over "It's Better Strange". Division (B) was also in action on Sunday, Dec. 16th (or they were supposed to be). Out of the six matches scheduled, four went by the way of forfeits with "PMS's", "Queefs II", and "Fun in a Size Medium" all picking up wins, while both "Deuteronomy, Son of Gath" and "Spirit-8" received a forfeit loss when both failed to show up for the match scheduled between them. "Flash Pants" and "Fleshpiles" did not show up to play, and they both recorded victories over their opponents.

World News Update

by Cindy Duick

PARIS — A declaration of a state of emergency resulted in sending 1,000 more troops to its Pacific territory of New Caledonia, France announced Saturday.

The reinforcements bring the total number of internal security forces on the island to 3,280 men, in addition to 3,000 French soldiers and 300 local gendarmes.

The decision to send the extra troops, by an emergency meeting of senior ministers chaired by Prime Minister Laurent Fabius, was prompted by the shooting by police of two leading Kanak separatists, and riots in the capital Noumea by mostly white demonstrators who were reacting to the murders of a European farmer Friday at Thio.

This is the first time measures such as this have been taken since 1961 when Charles de Gaulle had to deal with a settler insurrection in Algeria.

URUMQI, China — China's far northwestern province of Xinjiang is looking towards California as a model. The province has been compared to the "Wild West" of the United States because of its mountainous and desert terrain; however the Chinese province's top officials are aiming at a more contemporary comparison now.

Wang Enmao, first party secretary and the region's top political and military leader said, "Xinjiang will become China's California," after he visited California, Texas and Arizona in October. He predicted that China's development will probably follow that of the United States, proceeding from east to west.

WASHINGTON — Soviet scientist, Roald Sagdeev, warned last week that any future development of military weapons in space would end possibilities of further United States/Soviet Union cooperative space ventures. Sagdeev, the director of the

Variety Of Plays To Be Presented In Oller

by Scott Snyder

Winter One Acts will once again be performed by the students of Juniata. These one act plays will be presented in Oller Hall on Jan. 31, Feb. 1 and Feb. 2 beginning at 7:30.

The student actors, chosen through competitive tryouts, will perform three one act plays. These plays include, Apollo of Bellac by Maurice Valency, The Case of the Crushed Petunias by Tennessee Williams, and Afternoon at the Seaside by Agatha Christie. The first two plays are comedies and Afternoon at the Seaside is a mystery.

These one act plays, under the supervision of Doris Goehring, will be performed in the round — that is the audience will be seated on the stage. Help make these Winter One Acts the best ever and attend one of the performances.

Steve Landesberg Returns To Juniata

by Paul Bomberger

Following his successful run as Sgt. Arthur Dietrich on the highly acclaimed television series, "Barney Miller," actor/comedian Steve Landesberg will bring his own brand of humor to Juniata College Tuesday, Jan. 22.

During his six years as Dietrich, Landesberg was honored by his peers with three Emmy nominations.

In show business circles, Landesberg is regarded among the most versatile comedians in the industry. His "off the wall" humor, as Johnny Carson calls it, has been seen in stand-up comedy routines on dozens of television shows ranging from "The Tonight Show" to prime-time specials.

This past year, he has returned to the concert stage, bringing his stand-up comedy to sold-out concert halls and colleges across the country. He recently appeared in his own network special "The Steve Landesberg Show," which garnered excellent reviews.

A native of the Bronx, N.Y., Landesberg stepped on the stage for the first time to perform with his National Guard unit at Camp Drum, Watertown, N.Y. A short time later, he was working in small rooms in Greenwich Village and at the Improvisation with other young comics such as David Brenner and Jimmie Walker. He joined an improvisational comedy group called the New York Stickball Team and spent a year and a half with them appearing at colleges and on television. When the comedy group broke up, he continued to work as a stand-up comic in small night clubs.

On Dec. 17, 1971, Landesberg landed his first appearance on the Johnny Carson show. That initial appearance on the Carson show paved the way for the many TV guest shots, personal appearances and acting assignments that have followed.

In 1974, he was seen as the Viennese violinist on the Paul Sand show, "Friends and Lovers." Although the show lasted only one season, the reaction to Landesberg's performance was outstanding. Danny Arnold, executive producer of "Barney Miller," thought Landesberg was terrific and signed him for several guest appearances which led to his joining the 12th precinct as Sgt. Arthur Dietrich.

His friend David Brenner has said about Landesberg, "He's the most prolific and funniest of all of us...The closest, I think to the creativity and obtuse thinking of Jonathan Winters that's ever come along. That insanity, the angle he sees things...in a few hundred years the world's gonna catch up with Steve Landesberg."

Landesberg was well received by the local audience when he performed at Juniata in April, 1981. Area residents can once again catch up with Steve Landesberg in Juniata's Oller Hall Jan. 22 at 8:15 p.m. Faculty and students may purchase tickets for $3 at the door.

Weinstein Will Lead Conference

by Steve Creps

Dr. Matt Weinstein, the originator of Playfair, is coming to Juniata. He will be presenting the Playfair Leadership Training Seminar, sponsored by Center Board, on Saturday, January 26.

Called by People magazine "The Master of Playfulness' and one of "the biggest guns of the pop psychology boom," Dr. Weinstein and the Playfair staff members touch more than 100,000 individuals each year with their unique visions of a completely supportive community. This Leadership Training is a series of professional growth experiences designed for corporate management executives and for university administrators, faculty, staff and student leaders.

Leadership Training is based on a totally unique model of positive, supportive group interactions that has its theoretical base in Weinstein's books, Education of the Self and Playfair: Everybody's Guide to Non-competitive Play. This original model of group inter-

Strive for Punctuality Please

When one schedules an appointment with an associate, a friend, or even to have their picture taken, unless they are told otherwise they expect the appointment will be kept.

Apparently the photographers from the Alfarata, our own Juniata College yearbook, have been scheduling appointments with clubs for yearbook pictures but the photographers have not been showing up to shoot the pictures. The Young Republicans and the Juniatian, in addition to various other departments were notified that appointments were made to have thier respective club pictures taken. However, many club members have been inconvenienced since they are showing up at various locations only to waste 15 or 20 minutes waiting and hoping that just maybe an Alfarata photographer might keep the appoinment he or she scheduled.

The Juniatian realizes that sometimes "some things suddenly come up" and therefore alternate plans have to be made. But the Alfarata photographers have not even used "common courtesy" and notified clubs when their photographers cannot meet a scheduled appointment. Needless to say this neglect may result in resentment of the entire yearbook staff.

In order to maintain student, faculty and staff support for the Alfarata, the Juniatian feels that the editorial staff of the Alfarata should evaluate their priorities and responsibilities to do their best for 1985's yearbook.

Letters to the Editor

Editorial Comment

The editorial staff of the Juniatian has decided to reprint the following letter which appeared in our December 20, 1984 issue due to numerous grammatical errors. The authors of this letter were not responsible for the errors that were previously printed. The letter correctly reads as follows.

Credibility of disciplinary system questioned

Dear Editor,

This letter regards the general rules and regulations sanctioned for the college community. These rules and regulations are made for a specific purpose and should thus be followed. If the rules are broken the violaters should expect to be reprimanded.

The rules are made for the entire college community, therefore no exceptions should be made. This is our complaint, a disciplinary system such as Juniata's cannot work if some privileged few are afforded the luxury of being exempt from these rules and regulations. If those delegated to service Juniata's disciplinary system choose to "look the other way" for personal friends while going by the book with others, the credibility of our disciplinary system could be seriously undermined.

In a recent violation of rules, we were reprimanded and sanctioned. The violation was by no means malevolent, but nevertheless, it was a rules violation. We were informed that the sanction was a necessity; it had to be levied. We agreed and accepted this because it was the "duty" of the individual involved. Duty is the key word; is duty something that can be leisurely discarded at times while being stringently upheld at other times for the purpose of convenience of those with the "pink pads"? This was particularly disturbing to see this dichotomy of actions among one of the more influential persons in our disciplinary system.

Sincerely,
David J. Musser,
Joseph Campbell,
Mark Kirchgasser,
Scott Snyder

Andrew Lawson Geological Society

The Andrew Lawson Geological Society is a twenty-member environmental club for anyone interested in the nature of their natural surroundings. The organization is not just open to geology majors; however, most members are majoring in some aspect of the natural sciences.

Club members began a mural in the geology wing two years ago, which depicts the geological time scale and should be completed by the end of the year. However, most of the group's activities are centered around field trips and lectures. Dr. Burrell Montz, a guest lecturer from the University of New York at Binghamton, will be discussing environmental issues on January 25 at 3:30 p.m. in room P118 of Brumbaugh Science Center. Some spring term activities are also being planned, including a field trip to the Carnegie Museum in Pittsburgh and a lecture by Dr. Trexler on the geology of Scotland.

General club meetings are held approximately once a month in room P114. Anyone interest in joining should look for more information concerning specific meeting times or contact Lisa Skoglund.

Centerboard

The method of signing up tables for the Madrigal Dinner has been scrutinized for years. Center Board, being responsible for the dinner, has been working very diligently to come up with a better alternative. We've had many suggestions for a new system, but none seem as fair as the present system.

We, the members of the Center Board, as your representatives, would like to hear some input from you, the students. We will be surveying students within the next few weeks in lunch and dinner lines outside of Baker Refectory. The survey will consist of a list of our possible alternatives, plus any suggestions you might have. We would appreciate any ideas you may have on this situation. The ideas may be submitted to Center Board Box 148.

The following are alternatives already suggested: 1.) LOTTERY-This system would be a random drawing. 2.) SENIORITY-This system would be similar to the present room drawing system. There have been a number of other suggestions which were considered by Center Board, but were found to be impractical methods.

Here's your chance to personally have a say in what goes on at Juniata. Your help will be appreciated in this matter. Just look for the surveys in the near future in Ellis Hall. We're Center Board- . . . Helping to brighten your horizons, and bringing the campus to life.

Road Trips

by Andrew G. Davis

"Guess I'll keep on ramblin'," — Led Zeppelin

"Flip the tape, will you?"

"Is this our turn up here?"

"I hope you guys know where you're going . . ."

Skel and I looked at each other. There is nothing that can quite compare to the sinking feeling one gets upon realizing that one is completely, hopelessly, utterly lost.

"Buzz, I thought you know where we are. You always know where we are." Buzz was stumped, but optimistic.

"Sure, I know where we are, we're on State Forest lands." Somehow this didn't quite satisfy my trepidation. I noticed the gas gauge was leaning uncomfortably in the direction of empty,and the sun was leaning with equal precariousness in the direction of the horizon. Buzz had been in the back reading the literature on the back of the map, rather than the map itself.

"It says here that the State Forests of Pennsylvania comprise 1,-927,000 acres of land, about one-tenth of the State's total forest area."

"Thanks, Buzz, that's, uh, great news."

"Don't worry," Skel interjected, casually guiding the old VW through an obstacle course of potholes. "If we stay on this road long enough, we're bound to arrive somewhere." When it came to the road, Skel was full of illustrious tidbits of philosophical wisdom. It was he who discovered that "every road is actually two completely different roads, depending on which direction you travel." Recalling this to mind did not help to dispel my skepticism, considering the repetitive similarity between most State Forest roads. But I shrugged, cast my doubts aside, and cranked up the music, confident that a total freedom from worry is the best medicine to pull through any situation.

Buzz continued. "It says here that the State Forests are traversed by more than 2,600 miles of roads, 2,500 miles of foot trails, 2,-500 miles of snowmobile trails . ."

I sat back and laughed. The road through the forest was wide and rolling, a favorite song was playing, and the sunset through the trees was dazzling.

Murray Swims 600 Laps

by Kathy Manzella

Congratulations to Andy Murray on his successful 100+ Swim benefiting the American Cancer Society.

During the swims, held on December 29, Murray swam a total of 15,000 meters, or 600 lengths of the pool. He accomplished this task in seven hours and 34 minutes.

A total of 400 people pledged a total of $13.41 a length. If all pledges are received, a total of $6,705 will have been raised for the Cancer Society.

Students who pledged over $.03 a length are asked to meet as much of their pledge as possible, but should not feel obligated to do anything that would cause a hardship.

Murray added that he too was as surprised as anyone at the distance he accomplished during the swim.

Murray extended special thanks to the Campus Ministry Board, the Swim Club, the Psychology Club, the Conservation Club, and V103.

Student Gov't Working On New Projects

by Kathy Manzella

The members of Juniata's Student Government have been busy working on several new projects in recent weeks.

Currently there is a committee conducting a survey to determine whether members of the student body feel there is a cheating problem here at Juniata. After compiling the results of this survey, the committee members plan to make a recommendation as to how to remedy the situation.

Student Government members are also in the process of altering the current format for dorm senator elections. Presently the dorm senator elections are held prior to the room selection in May.

Under this system, students are able to use the dorm senator elections as a means of entering a dorm without expressing a genuine interest in the dorm senator position. Under the proposed election plan, the dorm senator elections would be held after the room draw in May.

Other Student Government activity involves the revising of the present Constitution here at J.C. Committee members are in the process of refining the constitution in an effort to clear up "loopholes" which exist in the current version.

The Budget and Finance committee has recently started working on the matter of club funding for the next year. If the final budget is determined in the near future, the committee will once again appropriate funds for the various clubs in the spring.

From the Pen of. . .

by David Orth Moore

An important development has emerged from the US-USSR meeting in Geneva. The Soviets have not made future arms control talks contingent on the United States freezing its research and development of President Reagan's 'star wars' strategy. The Reagan administration calls the star wars initiative a tentative effort to determine if stability can be increased by making offensive nuclear weapons obsolete. The administration's search for a more defensive strategy, although ideally sound, is actually destabilizing since star wars is inherently expensive and technologically infeasible (anything short of impermeable undermines national security and is thus worthless). As the talks will presumably continue, the Soviets may draw a tighter line around the pre-conditions for an arms reduction with America.

Beyond the expense of star wars — estimated to be in the range of hundreds of billions to one trillion dollars — and the general consensus among scientists that the strategy is scientifically infeasible given the known laws of physics, there are numerous other reasons why President Reagan's star wars strategy is fatally flawed.

• The star wars strategy does not address low-flying nuclear delivery systems such as bombers or cruise missiles.

• The Soviet Union, in rough parity with the US, has an estimated 10,000 nuclear warheads. To be able to destroy all these nuclear warheads in the event of a Soviet first strike is a very risky endeavor, considering that there is no adequate way to test the star wars system.

• The Soviet Union could 'jam' our starwars defense by sending decoys to misdirect and confuse the space system.

Most importantly, however, is the question of the Soviet's perception of the US star wars scheme. After all, the superpowers are in this nuclear gambit together, and what is dangerous to one is dangerous to the other. If the Soviets perceive the star wars plan as a US first strike strategy (the US being able to launch an attack without the USSR responding), the Soviets may launch a pre-emptive first strike before the star wars system is even in place.

Lastly, the star wars system is not purely defensive, in fact, it is primarily offensive. Star wars stations, orbiting 300 miles above the earth, will be able to maneuver over Soviet air space making the system a threat to Soviet satellites, and targets on land.

Mr. Reagan has promised that star wars is not a bargaining chip. If he used it as one, strategic nuclear arms talks would be impossible, causing an arms race into space — a condition that would add to an already intolerable level of nuclear weapons.

Guest Commentary

Dr. Jay Buchanan

As you read this we will be just past the half-way point in the term which means there is still plenty of time to get your act together and begin to manage your time, energies, and resources more productively.

In our last article we discussed the two major benefits of time management; namely, getting more accomplished and having a greater sense of control over one's environment. Let's now examine some specific, proven ways to be more time efficient.

Alan Lakein, a time management concultant, says that successful people have "to-do" lists. More importantly, though, it is the fact that these lists are made on a daily basis. Secondly, tasks on the list are arranged in order of priority or importance, and finally each task on the list is crossed off after its completion.

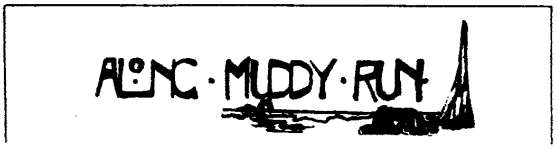
Lakein suggests an ABC priority rating system. "A" items are most important, require greater emphasis, and should be very few in number. "B" tasks are of medium importance and "C's" are low priority, but nonetheless require your attention.

The key point here is that we should be careful not to devote equal time and energy to all items on our list.

Another suggestion which ties into the need to set priorities, has to do with determining our own most productive times. We all have our own natural time colck, those times when we concentrate best and are most efficient. We should strive to engage in "A" tasks during these peak periods of productivity.

Keeping a time log can prove very helpful in determining what you have accomplished over a specified period of time. Often times we think we are using our time wisely but self-monitoring reveals that we are mis-using and wasting time.

Finally, because there are so many potential stressors in one's environment, one needs to learn to relax and engage in activities to lessen the impact these stressors have on us. You really should have exercise and relaxation as integral aspects of your life. Indeed, both belong on your daily "to-do" list!



by Linda Ramsay

By this time you've probably broken some of them, or all of them if you made any of them at all. No, I'm not talking about "making the grade," but New Year's resolutions; those words of wisdom spoken to get your parents to believe that your grades will get better, to reassure your roommate that you'll clean up your side of the room, or to promise yourself that you will go to class more often than once a week.

Why do we all make those silly resolutions that don't seem likely to be fulfilled anyway? I've promised myself for four straight years that I would lose those fifteen pounds I gained as a freshman,that I'd study more and sleep less and call home more often and not just for money. The answer must lie in the need to start fresh every once in a while. It kind of gets my blood going knowing that I have a clean slate at the beginning of each new year (and God knows I need it).

1985 — coined by the Writer's Guild as the year we make way for "the Brave New World." Books by Aldous Huxley and George Orwell must be selling like hotcakes, or is this coinage of years after books just a Big Brother plot attempting to get us to read more? But this new year marks an important milestone for me. Seniors rejoice!!! 1985 is the year "we make contact" with that Brave New World.

After waking up on New Year's Day (sometime after the roses had wilted on all the floats in the Rose Parade), I felt guilty about not preparing myself for the commencement of a new year. I had already broken my first resolution; I woke up after 1 p.m. I shuffled the papers on my desk, found a pencil and began the solemn ritual. After spending the entire day realizing my faults (and Nebraska's), I stuffed the ragged notebook paper into a light blue Juniata envelope and sealed it shut. Yesterday I thought I'd check out how I was measuring up to my own expectations for the new year . . . if only I could find that blue envelope, lost somewhere among the pile of books, clothes and food on my not-so-clean desk.

Students Urged to Study Abroad

by April Opinante

If you are a sophomore and want to spend your Junior year abroad, take heed! The notification deadline is fast approaching — January 21. Those who wish to apply should contact Dr. Vocke by then to register their interest. He is the Director of International Programs and can be found at 213 Founders or 316 Good.

What exactly are Juniata's study abroad programs? Basically there are three: Brethren Colleges Abroad (BCA), the Juniata Exchange Program, and a new professionally oriented international internship program. BCA is run by a group of colleges. Under this program, students can study in France (Strasbourg), Germany (Marburg), Spain (Barcelona), and England (Cheltenham). BCA tends to emphasize the humanities, with some exceptions such as the Education Program at Cheltenham. The Juniata exchanges exist in Britain (Hull), Germany (Marburg, Muenster), France (Lille), and Japan (Osaka). Under the exchange program, a Juniata student studies at a foreign school while a student from that school studies at Juniata. The internships abroad are available during the spring term, and these will last fifteen weeks - one term and part of the summer. The cost of these programs is the same as that of a normal Juniata year and includes plane fare.

The purpose of the study abroad program is to enable students to further their academic development, preferably within their POE. Programs are available in a wide variety of disciplines, and the foreign universities often have courses available which are not offered at Juniata.

After their year abroad, students can return to campus with the same amount of credits as they would have earned in a year at Juniata. All credits earned abroad are translated into their Juniata equivalents and count towards graduation. Students who spend a full year abroad can apply for a waiver of one Historical/Cultural requirement.

Who is eligible to participate? The programs are generally meant for students who have maintained a G. P. A. of 2.5. BCA and Exchange are for the junior year, while the internship is for both seniors and juniors, and applicants must have a good sense of maturity and responsibility. Foreign language ability is needed in France, Germany, or Spain. Students who wish to study in any of these three countries should take a minimum of three units of college-level language courses. Naturally, the more foreign language courses students take, the better prepared they will be; students are encouraged to study in a country where they can test and improve their foreign language skills. In England and Japan instruction is in English.

What should you do to prepare for study abroad? Talk to your advisers about which courses you should take. If you have not already taken the foreign language placement test, do so. Meet some of the foreign students on campus. Talk to seniors who have been abroad. Join the International Club. Maintain a G. P. A. of 2.5.

For more in-depth information on study abroad programs or the new internships abroad, see Dr. Vocke. Dr. Crouch, the BCA director, Good 305, also has a wide range of BCA literature. Booklets on each of the programs contain much useful information.

According to Dr. Vocke, "Students who go abroad for a year on a Juniata program can expect the College to make every effort to support them and help them get the most out of the experience."

Due to student requests, entrance forms for the Room Decoration Contest will be accepted until Friday, January 25. Forms are in the back of the booklet, "Your Room is Your Home," or can be picked up at the Residential Life Office in Founders Hall.

"Martial Law" rocks Sherwood's Catharsis Lounge in the first Centerboard Coffeehouse of 1985. Good attendance and great music combined to make a super night.

"Martial Law" Makes a Hit

by Will Thompson

The Juniata Coffee House Committee picked a winner when they hired Martial Law, an up and coming young band from Harrisburg, to play at last Tuesday's Coffee House in Sherwood's Catharsis Lounge.

The Coffee House was well attended and the audience appreciative.

Martial Law played a good variety of music, including songs from John Couger, UFO and Bob Seeger, which seemed to provide an interesting and fun evening for all who attended.

The band's roots go back as far as high school, but it was not until August this year that they hit the bar scene in and around Harrisburg.

Martial Law's lead singer, Jeff Feltenberg, described the band's music as "dance-able rock," a collection of popular hits designed to appeal to a wide audience.

The band's bass player, Steven Feltenberger (Jeff's brother), is a Juniata College student. Speaking for the band, he said they all enjoyed entertaining at Tuesday's Coffee House, and look forward to performing here again. When asked where the band will go from here, Steve said that the guys just want to have fun for now, and their future looks uncertain, as each member will soon graduate and pursue their individual careers.

Let's hope we can hear the sound of Martial Law again - if you missed them the first time 'round then be sure to be there next time 'round for another good evening's entertainment.

Updike's Stories Presented

The Pennsylvania setting of several John Updike stories was the subject of a lecture and slide presentation at Juniata College Thursday, Jan. 10.

"John Updike: The Pennsylvania Stories," was discussed by Dr. Peter Schneeman, associate professor of English at The Pennsylvania State University, in Juniata's Shoemaker Galleries. The presentation focused on Updike's works that use the Reading and Shillington areas as their locales, including the "Olinger Stories," the novel "The Centaur," and the three rabbit novels, "Rabbit, Run," "Rabbit Redux," and "Rabbit is Rich."

The talk, which Dr. Schneeman calls "a guide to Updike Country," was accompanied by slides of the Pennsylvania areas that figure so prominently in these works. Sponsored by the Pennsylvania Humanities Council and Juniata College, the program is part of the council's Writers in Pennsylvania Series.

Dr. Schneeman is the director of the Department of English's Undergraduate Writing Program at Penn State. He has published scholarship, criticism and fiction in a variety of national periodicals. "Through the Finger Goggles," a collection of his stories, won the Breakthrough Series competition and was published in 1982 by the University of Missouri Press.

Dr. Schneeman served as a Senior Fulbright Lecturer in American literature at the University of Bucharest (1978-79) and has received fellowships in literature (fiction writing) for 1982 and 1985 from the Pennsylvania Council on the Arts. He recently has been named a Commonwealth Speaker.

Juniata Hosts First "Punchbowl"

by Ginny Krall

The PUNCHBOWL is coming! Juniata's first live trivia game show will top off Winter Week 1985.

However this is not an ordinary trivia challenge. The PUNCHBOWL deals with questions all pertaining to alchohol and its consumption. These are trivial facts that may save your life!

CASE, the Committee for Alcohol Studies and Education is sponsoring this event in another attempt to spread their theme, "IF YOU CHOOSE TO DRINK, DRINK REPONSIBLY."

Each resident hall will be eligible to enter one team of four into this competition. These members will then be tested on their knowledge of alcohol facts. Such facts will be posted on campus bulletin boards and in the various campus medias.

Winning teams will be awarded in several ways. Local merchants have donated everything from pizza to car jumper cables to cases of soda. Resident hall points also will be given out.

Senior Joe Hiznay will MC the PUNCHBOWL in Alumni Hall with four mystery judges presiding over the competition.

Keep your eyes open Juniata for further details concerning the PUNCHBOWL! This will certainly be a fun and informative time for everyone involved.

JC Presents Course In Real Estate

"Real Estate Practice," a basic foundation course needed to satisfy one of the salesperson educational requirements of the Pennsylvania Real Estate Commission, will be offered at Juniata College beginning Jan. 21.

The course is part of the college's Continuing Education Program and is designed to acquaint students with the basic techniques, procedures, regulations, forms, mathematics and ethics involved in a real estate transaction.

Jack Rawlings, Jr. of Altoona, a licensed real estate broker, will teach the class on 10 Mondays from 6:30 to 9:30 p.m. beginning Jan. 21. This is a change from the Jan. 7 starting date originally announced in the Continuing Education brochure. The fee for the course, which will be taught in Juniata's Good Hall, is $150.

Residents interested in taking "Real Estate Practice" must register at least five days prior to the first class. A check for $50 is required at the time of registration and the balance is due prior to the first class session. Checks should be made payable to Juniata College.

Registration and course information may be obtained by contacting the Juniata College Registrar's Office, Founders Hall. The phone number is (814) 643-4310, extension 272.

action proposes that a task-group is like a family; although there may be arguments, disputes, and differences of opinion, there must be an underlying sense of caring for each other, and a shared common purpose. Workshop participants learn techniques for resolving conflicts, which they can use in their customary supportive relationship.

Possibly more importantly, participants in Leadership Training will learn to celebrate the successful things in their relationships. This celebration can lead to a feeling of excitement and commitment to each other. This special bond of openness, friendship, and high-energy support is the trademark of Playfair's motivational magic.

Topics to be covered in this seminar include "How To Run A Meeting So It Never Gets Boring", "Flexible Leadership: Theory and Practice", "Education of the Self", "Inspiration, Motivation, and Feedback", "The Elements of Cooperative Groupwork", and "Nobody Appreciates the Work I Do". Although there have been other seminars on these topics, the way in which Dr. Weinstein packages and presents them is unique.

The six-hour seminar will be held in the Ellis Ballroom. The registration fee is $3.00 until January 17th. After January 17, the registration fee will be $5.00. Students can register with any Center Board member or at the Information Desk.

The Eder String Quartet of Hungary will perform at Juniata College Jan. 17 as part of the 1984-85 Artists Series.

Founded in 1972 at the Budapest "Ferenc Liszt" Academy, the quartet performs regularly in Hungary's concert halls and on Hungarian radio and television. They have traveled throughout Europe and visited Australia and New Zealand in 1980.

In 1976, the Eder Quartet received first prize at the Evian International String Quartet Competition and in 1983 were among five finalists in the International Banff String Quartet Competition. They also have performed at the Istanbul International Festival and the Bath Festival.

The performance at Juniata, in which the group will present works by Franz Joseph Haydn, Leos Janacek and Franz Schubert, will begin at 8:15 p.m. in Oller Hall.

The Alard Quartet, originally scheduled to perform at Juniata on Jan. 17, was forced to cancel its engagement due to the illness of one of its members. The Juniata Artist Series Committee hopes to reschedule the Alard next season. All tickets for the Alard Quartet will be honored at the Eder Quartet performance and additional tickets will be sold at the door.

JC Student Receives Scholarship

David L. Acker of Lewistown, a freshman at Juniata College, has been awarded the prestigious Dow Chemical Company Foundation Scholarship in Chemistry for the 1984-85 academic year.

The $5,000 scholarship is awarded annually on a merit basis, to an incoming freshman who has an outstanding high school record, plans to pursue a B.S. degree in chemistry and is inclined to continue his or her education through the Ph.D. level. The scholarship is renewable each year, provided the student maintains a "B" average in all credited courses.

As part of its undergraduate scholarship program, the Dow Chemical Company Foundation established the scholarship at Juniata last year. Acker is the first Juniata recipient. The Dow program provides Juniata with $6,000 a year for four years, designating $5,000 for the scholarship and $1,000 to assist with educational programs in the chemistry department. Dow began the scholarship program in 1982 and Juniata is one of 40 institutions selected to participate.

A 1984 graduate of Lewistown Area High School, Acker is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Warren H. Acker of 505 Riverside Dr., Lewistown.

Winter I.M. Basketball Action

by Andy Hiscock

The Winter Intramural Basketball programs for both men and women are getting back in gear for the long run towards the play-offs. Since the Winter I.M. seasons are still fairly young, no one team has broken away from the pack in either the women's league or in any of the three men's leagues, and if this season is anything like the ones in the past, the teams will remain fairly bunched together right up until the end of regular season play. The women's league has not yet played since we have been back from break, but all three men's divisions have been in action.

The men's division A ("competitive") restarted play on Friday, January 11th with four teams doing battle. "Late Night" picked up their first win of the season defeating "Smegs"? — (58-52). Eric Cutting and John Surbeck combined to take away a number of rebounds for "Late Night". In the other Division A game, "FF II" beat "Hustlers Minus 1" in a close (48-43) game. This game was a bit more physical under the boards, with Randy Deike battling under the boards, and Steve Helm effective from the floor for "FF II".

Division B was also in action last week, with play beginning on Thursday, January 10th. "Pounders" defeated "Rudolph's Raiders" (43-49) with the help of good outside shooting from Rich Bouch. "Grube's Return" also was victorious, defeating "Delinquents" (52-41). John Newell had a couple of good steals for Grube. On Friday, January 11th, four more Division B games were played. "Barriettas" handily defeated "Rudolph's Raiders" (44-27) with excellent rebounding by Carl Fekula and Bill Stamp. "The Skulks" beat "The BAMF" (50-40). Marc Hoover and Sean Wallace worked the ball well for Skulks. "Blue Thunder" also won on Friday in an impressive offensive showing when they defeated "Grube's Return" (66-28). "Fighting Irish" beat "Fred's Flintstones" (40-35) with the help of good inside shooting by Captain Steve Yerger.

Swim Clubs Take To Water

by Andy Hiscock

Juniata's Men's and Women's Swim Clubs met up with a strong Lycoming squad in a meet held this past Saturday, January 12th in Binder Natatorium. Lycoming's women defeated our ladies 67-35 and their men came out on top 58-43, but even for someone who has had a limited exposure to swimming competition, I saw a lot of team spirit and a number of outstanding performances. I feel that Juniata's young Swim clubs are beginning to gel under the direction of Coach Roslyn Hall. When I say young, I am referring to both members with little or no previous competition experience and that the team has been in existence for a relatively short time; but they already show great promise.

The first event of the meet was the men's and women's 400M Relay. Each team consisted of four members, with each person swimming 100M (4 lengths) using either the Backstroke, Breaststroke, Butterly, or Freestyle depending on which leg of the team that they are swimming. Lycoming proved to be too strong for both Indian squads, although both of our teams had respectable times. For the Lady Indians: Laura Beck, Melanie Confer, Shelly Guest, and Lisa Wilson had a time of 6:13:45 compared to the winning time of 5:38:95. Our men's team consisted of Pat O'Dowd who led off with a good leg for the team doing the backstroke and passed on a half length lead to Tom Davis, Jim Neil, and Stan Wampler but they fell short with a time of 5:13:18 while Lycoming finished with 4:53:09. The next event on the slate was the men's and women's 800M Freestyle. Lycoming women's team won, but Stephanie Vlahos (11:12:72) and Beth Pierie (12:05:42) swam strongly for the Indians. In the men's 800M Freestyle, Andy Marsh swam a 14:47:31 for Juniata. Next came the 200M Freestyle for both men and women, with the women competing first. Our ladies placed 3rd, 4th, and 5th in this event, with Shelly Guest (3:01:42), Alane Penney (3:10:25), and Lucy Johnston (3:12:95) finishing in these positions respectively for JC. The Juniata men captured four points by having two men finish in the top three in their heat, with swimmers Pad O'Dowd (2nd—2:28:14), John Petrovic (3rd—2:40:79),and Jim Kreeger (4th—3:09:95). As the meet moved on, we came to the 50M Freestyle, which called for flat out speed. It looks as though the short quick events are Juniata's strong points since we won both the men's and women's heats. Melanie Confer grabbed the victory for the JC women's squad "by a hand" with a blistering time of 30:04 with Kathy Bell finishing 4th and Sue White finishing 6th. Ken Kurtzweg also won "by a hand" to pick up five points for the Indian men's squad (26:32). Stan Wampler also picked up one point with his third place finish (27:79), and Eric Bortell came in sixth (29:90). The next event was the 200M (8 lengths), where the competitors have to swim 50M (2 lengths) doing the backstroke, breaststroke, butterfly, and freestyle. JC picked up two second place finishes in this grueling event, with Lisa Wilson placing 2nd for the women (3:07:06), and Ken Kurtzweg finishing 2nd with a 2:52:34 compared to the 2:38:59 winning time.

History of sorts was made this past Saturday, when Juniata held its first Diving competition. The Indians had two participants in this event. Eric Bortell racked up 149 pts. placing him in 2nd place, while Ann Blycher had a total of 123.95 pts. I thought that the diving event was interesting, and would suggest you to try to get down to the next home meet to see it for yourself. After a short break, the last half of the meet began.

In the 100M women's Butterfly, Lisa Wilson finished in 3rd place with a time of 1:25:26 behind a winning time of 1:16:87. The men sorely missed the services of Tom Swivel who tried to compete, but was hampered by a broken hand that he had suffered prior to the meet. Once again, the Indians displayed their power in the shorter races. In the 100M Freestyle, our ladies placed two members in the top three, with Melanie Confer —1:06:97 finishing 2nd, and Shelly Guest — 1:20:40 finishing 3rd. JC's men's team also had two top three finishers: Ken Kurtzweg (2nd—1:00:29), and John Petrovic (1:09:40) against a winning time of 56:74 put up by a Lycoming swimmer. Still more fine performances were displayed by Juniata in the 100M Backstroke. Beth Pierie (1:27:22) placed 3rd, and Alane Penney (1:35:47) finished 4th for our ladies. In the men's event, JC was 1-2 with Pat O'Dowd bringing in a scorching 1:11:11 and Stan Wampler finishing a close 2nd with a time of 1:15:54. The next event was the 400M Freestyle, (16 lengths) and the Indians fought for two 3rd place finishes against a Lycoming squad that seemed to be strongest at the longer events. Stephanie Vlahos finsihed 3rd for the JC women's team, and Jim Kreeger placed 3rd for our men. Back to another short event, our ladies took eight out of a possible nine points in the 100M Breaststoke, with Shelly Guest winning (1:40:25), and Lucy Johnston placing 2nd (1:44:22). We also took 1st and 3rd in the men's 100M Breaststroke with Tom Davis finishing 1st (1:17:03), and Jim Neal placing 3rd (1:38:48). The final event of the day was the men's and women's 400M Freestyle Relay. Lycoming was unable to field a team in either event, giving us two more victories on the day. On the whole, I think that both our men's and women's teams made a good showing. Throughout the meet, people wandered in (balcony) and I think that they enjoyed what they saw. I would suggest that you try to get down to the next home meet, which will be Saturday, February 2nd vs. Lock Haven and cheer on our Swim Clubs.

Men's Basketball 1-1 In '85

by Joe Scialabba

The Juniata men's basketball team started the 1985 portion of their schedule about ten minutes too late to win a pair of games last week. But they did win one.

After losing a hard-fought 60-54 game with visiting Susquehanna on Thursday, Juniata came back to roll over Scranton, 75-56.

The Susquehanna game had the Indians behind from the start. Juniata put together a good comeback but ran out of gas down the stretch, turning the ball over in key situations. The first ten minutes of the game made it an uphill battle all the way, but the Tribe barely missed climbing to the top.

On Saturday, Juniata had enough to climb any mountain.

The University of Scranton came to Memorial Gym with a 7-4 record and a great basketball tradition on their side.

The Royals had won eight of the last nine Middle Atlantic Conference North titles, and hadn't lost to Juniata since 1980-81.

It was time for the Indians to stuff the "Royal's Jam Session."

Leading from the opening tap to the final buzzer, the Tribe ripped the Royals, 75-56.

It was basically an easy win, as JC led 39-18 at halftime and never let the visitors closer than 15 in the final twenty minutes.

Senior Mark Rucinski led a balanced Juniata attack with 21 points and 11 rebounds. He had 10 points against Susquehanna.

Eric Lane had 16 points and Wayne Paul a dozen in the victory.

Dick Moses had a team-high 16 against Susquehanna.

The Indians, now 3-8 and 1-7 in the MAC, played at Lebanon Valley last night and open a big three-game home stand tommorrow gainst Drew.

The Indians then host Delaware Valley on Saturday and Dickinson Monday.

Indian Grapplers Do Well In Tourney

by Mike Culver

Juniata grapplers were rested and ready to go for the 1985 Juniata Wrestling Invitational. Among the schools attending the tournament were two Division II universities, IUP and Mansfield. The remaining three teams who participated were Upsala, Baptist Bible, and the Indians.

Senior captain Rick Noll led his team by example as he proceeded through his weight class giving up only three points and obtaining Juniata's first medal of the day.

In addition to Rick's first place showing, sophomore Dave Cooper and freshman Greg Hughes both placed second in their respective weight classes (150 and 158 lbs.).

Making his contribution to the team's score with his third place finish was freshman Steve Feltenberger.

Overall, Juniata placed fourth in the tourney with twenty-one points. IUP took the team trophy home with fifty-four points and Mansfield was runner-up with twenty-four points.

The Indians face King's College this Saturday at 12 noon in the varsity gym. Plenty of action is guaranteed and everyone is invited to attend and cheer on our Indian grapplers.

Ladies Basketball Lose 2

by Soe Scialabba

The Juniata women's basketball team got visits from two of the best Division Three teams in the nation last week and found their MAC guests to be rather rude.

Scranton, ranked #6 in the nation, rolled to an 85-59 Saturday afternoon victory after Susquehanna got the Indians, 77-73 on Thursday.

While the Scranton Lady Royals coasted from start to finish, the Lady Crusaders of Susquehanna did have a tougher time of it.

After building a 41-37 edge at halftime, the visitors looked to run away from the Indians in the second half, leading by as many as 13 points.

Juniata didn't quit, and fought back to tie the game twice in the final minute before Susquehanna got the victory at the free throw line.

Juniata shot a school record 56 percent from the field in the game, which followed Tuesday night's home victory over Washington and Jefferson, 64-41.

The Tribe, now 5-6 overall and 2-4 in the Middle Atlantic Conference, was led once again last week by senior Patti Ryan, who scored 18, 22 and 14 points in the three games.

Senior Holly Crable also had a fine week, hitting double figures in all three games.

Janet Robison hit twin digits in the W & J and Susquehanna games, while Sue Grubb had 12 points against the Crusaders.

The Indians tried to get back on the winning track last night at Lebanon Valley. They also travel to Wilkes on Saturday afternoon.

Chilled To The Bone

With the record breaking temperatures we've experienced this year, everyone's doing their best to stay warm and dry. For the residents of East Houses, the cold morning showers do nothing but chill the bones.

Hot water shortages have been a problem in East Houses for years. This year, students have to take their showers before 7:30 p.m. if they have any hope of even slightly warm water. The problem has received a great deal of attention, both from student concern groups and from the administration. Yet, the cold water continues to run.

This year, the physical plant nearly promised that the shortage would be solved by the time students returned from Christmas break. The temperature was turned up as high as possible without running the risk of someone begin burned. Over vacation, the system was examined and reported to be working to full capacity. So where's the problem?

In a nutshell, the system is the whole problem. Though the system is working perfectly according to capacity, it is depleted too rapidly because too many people have early classes this term. The solution would require installation of an auxilliary tank or pre-heater. This would no doubt be a huge capital expense, an expense not accounted for in this year's budget. Currently the problem is a priority for next year's budget, though no definite allocations have been made.

So for this year's East residents, it looks like it's going to be an even longer, colder winter than expected. The Juniatian staff is curious to see just how long it really does take to get hot water pumping in the pipes of East Houses once more.

ALONG · MUDDY · RUN

by Mark Royer

Trivia. It's become an obsession in our society. There is no avoiding it: on campus we find "the trivia challenge"; on radio WRLR gave us "rock trivia"; even during the Superbowl we were bombarded with such observations as "the team which has scored the most points in winning their conference championship game has gone on to win the last seven Superbowls."

This glut of trivia may be irritating but it is not a serious problem. The danger comes when important issues and events are trivialized. Take a person who knows nothing about the social and economic problems in Ethiopia. Without any real interst or concern for the situation this person can still come up with some trivial tidbit to enhance conversation.

"Say Mark, did you know that on the average 150 children under the age of three die every day in Ethiopia?" No, I didn't — but you can be sure that from now on I'm going to eat everything on my plate. The subject can be rather sobering until it's reduced to just so many numbers.

Nuclear war is another topic that falls victim to the trivia trap. Comments like "we've already got enough nuclear bombs to destroy the world 39 times over" and "once they push the button we'll only have fifteen minutes" often pop up in conversations. Fifteen minutes? One hour? Two hours. What's the difference?

OK, I've made a point, now back to humor. With the trivia boom I've come up with some questions for the Juniata College edition of Trivial Pursuit. Good luck and remember — trivia is, by definition, not very important.

What is a kiosk? Where are they on campus.

When was the last year the college didn't raise tuition?

What are the veal patties served at the Baker Refectory really made of?

What did David Orth write about in his column last week?

Why does food service insist on rearranging the cafeteria every few weeks.

What TV show caused the origination of Standard Juniata Time?

How many people still owe money to Andy Murray from his swim for cancer? (I know this isn't funny, but I thought Andy might appreciate the reminder).

Students Speak

How do you feel about Juniata switching to semesters?

Students Against Semesters: "Semesters aren't good because professors won't slow down with the work load and five finals are too many to take. The crossover to semester will disturb the present credit system. Semesters are just plain bogus."

Sue Gill — Sophomore: — "It will be a good idea because classes won't meet everyday and it will coincide with other college's breaks."

Rick Mrosky — Senior: — "I oppose the change to semesters. I feel it differentiates Juniata and is a more productive environment. Semesters do have a lot of advantages but the trimester system is far superior. I will be graduating so I don't care."

From the Pen of. . . !

by David Orth Moore

Here we go again with the two-faced nature of American politics. President Reagan will be inaugurated to a second term of office in a city which voted against him by a margin of six to one. And despite the overwhleming upbeat mood of the nation, there are trouble spots looming on the horizon which threaten the future of our nation.

There are two contrasting developments in Washington these days. One is the latent, but destructive federal budget deficit (which has not been given the attention it will inevitably demand), and the other is the US-USSR talks on arms control in Geneva. The arms talks are being heralded as a major switch in policy for the administration, while the politically "messy" deficit is being swept under the carpet. As a result, the budget will probably not be significantly reduced through meaningful cuts in defense; yet, as we continue to build-up our military at the expense of a larger deficit, and other programs, the public applauds the President on his recent conciliatory gestures to the Soviets.

Expectations have risen so high in America for an arms agreement with the Soviet Union, that a failure to reach an accord would create disillusionment with the Reagan Administration. The sheer optimism vacillating in Washington is well deserved; but lest we forget the risks of more arms escalation, particulary into space, there is no sane option but to seek comprehensive arms control. There's no novelty in negotiation, it's necessary!

Inflation is no longer part of our vocabulary—it's been temporarily licked thanks to Fed Chairman Paul Volker. That's the good news; the bad news is that a more serious problem has emerged, the budget deficit. This is projected to be $210 billion, and consumes six percent of our nation's gross national product. When the deficit is lowered, interest rates may begin to drop causing the dollar abroad to be devalued. As the dollar is devalued, America can begin to balance its current $130 billion trade deficit to expand our GNP, and continue the present economic recovery at a sustainable pace.

Reducing the deficit is an accepted fact of the Reagan Administration; but how to reduce the deficit is another matter. Secretary Casper Weinberger is only calling for a mere eight billion dollar slowdown from a proposed budget of $333.7 billion, up $41 billion from last year. Meanwhile, the Congress is especially leary to an exceedingly fat defense budget because if President Reagan had his way, social programs (24% of the budget) will be sacrificed for defense expenditure (29% of the budget). A condition that will certainly hurt constituent oriented Congressmen in two ways: 1) there will not be much sliced off the budget since social programs are just too popular to be hacked to pieces, and a too little reduction in spending will add up to a continual large deficit; and 2) recipients of social programs, including the poor, students and some of the elderly, will raise you know what if their programs are sliced too thin. And there is good reason why social programs should not be cut further—there are six million more Americans below the poverty level from 1981, an increase of 5.2% over that time period.

Another impediment to the skinning of the fat budget deficit are the political interest groups which tend to block the process of bipartisan agreement. Whatever happens, the goal is the same; a reduction of the deficit without disproportionate cuts from one program to benefit another. How our government reaches this goal is anybody's guess.

In the foreign policy spectrum, there are a number of hot spots around the world which could flare up to undermine President Reagan's myopic initiatives abroad. For instance, the continuing violence in Latin America is only exacerbated when the US sends more military to the region. Instead of seeking a military solution to this problem, the administration might consider spending a greater amount of effort in pursuing a political and economic solution to the region's conflict. This will call for a withdrawal of US economic hegemony in the region, and the ability to accept the Contadora group peace proposal.

Amidst the freezing cold weather for President Reagan's inaugural gala, is a blossoming flower of hope to turn our country's attention away from foreign and domestic violence (the recent subway shootings and anti-abortion bombings), towards intelligent fraternity that fosters cooperation for a responsible future.

Healthline

by Jane Brown

The warnings of dangerously low temperatures are often ignored, but as the thermomoter goes down, the incidence of frostbite goes up. Frostbite can be treacherous. Because you have already been feeling cold and a little numb, chances are you won't notice the loss of sensation that signals frostbite. Often the only noticeable sign of frost nip, the least severe form of frostbite, is a whitishness in the affected area, which is usually the nose, ears, hands, or feet. To treat frost nip, place a warm hand over the whitish area and keep it there until the tingling sensation and the white color turns red. Don't rub the area, and do not apply any ointments. Once the color and feeling come back, the skin is probably all right.

Long exposure to cold can lead to superficial frostbite, in which the top layer of the skin has frozen. The signs are numbness and stiff whitish skin with a waxy appearance. You should go inside and have something warm to drink. Alcohol is a definite no because it is a vaso-dilator. Alcohol depresses the vasomotor center in the medulla of the brain and in this way brings about dilation of the peripheral blood vessels, especially those of the skin. This causes a feeling of warmth, and heat is lost from the surface of the body.

Gently press the skin to see if there is any resilience in the lower layers. If there is some softness, the frozen area is probably not too deep. What you don't do is also very important. Don't rub ointments, and don't expose the skin directly to dry heat. Rapid but careful reheating in warm water (104 to 108 degrees F) for up to 30 minutes is helpful in preventing further injury. Or gently apply pressure with warm hands. As the skin thaws it may show blue spots, and some pain may be felt. For this kind of frostbite you should seek medical help, especially if swelling occurs.

In severe frostbite the underlying tisues are frozen hard, and there is no resilience in the affected part. In such cases dont't try to thaw the skin. Gradual thawing of deeply frozen tissue can cause severe injury and pain. Go as quickly as possible to a hospital, keeping the frozen part elevated and wrapped in blankets to prevent bruising.

Preventative measures, though obvious, are often ignored. Warm, multilayered clothing with good hand and foot protection (avoiding constricting wrist bands and tight socks and shoes) should be worn.

Punchbowl Fact Sheet

The following facts are going to be used in the upcoming PUNCH-BOWL. Questions will be based on such information plus any other facts being posted around Juniata's campus.

1. Alcohol, more specifically ethyl alcohol or ethanol, is a drug.
2. Although alcohol initially (though temporarily) acts as a euphoriant, it is a sedative. This means it is a central nervous system depressant which depresses the functioning of the brian and spinal cord.
3. Time is the only cure for intoxication and hangovers.
4. Approximately 75% of American college students drink alcoholic beverages.
5. Alcohol is the most socially accepted and abused drug in the United States.
6. Approximately 64% of all Americans who drink alcoholic beverages do so without reported problems.
7. Fifty percent (50%) of all traffic fatalities are alcohol-related.
8. Generally, it takes the liver one hour to detoxify one jigger (1.5 oz.) of 100 proof distilled spirits.
9. Alcohol is not digested, but is absorbed directly into the bloodstream from primarily the small intestines (80%) and stomach (20%).
10. Some studies show that over 90% of the deaths that occur as the result of hazing are connected with alcohol.
11. At least 1 of 4 deaths of young Americans between 15 and 24 years old is alcohol-related.
12. Annually, 40,000 highway injuries among youths can be linked to alcohol.
13. Parental drinking behaviors are usually adopted by their children.
14. Parent problem drinking may result in youth problems, for example: guilt; anger/resentment; depression; acting out/rebellion; low self-esteem/poor self-concept; interpersonal relation difficulties; and chemical abuse or dependency.
15. Rigid non-drinking attitudes have been found to be as potentially harmful as alcohol abuse when strictly enforced in the home.
16. Some studies show that as much as 80% of the vandalism on college campuses is alcohol-related.
17. Blood alcohol content depends on body weight, concentration of beverage consumed, speed of drinking, and speed of absorption.
18. With a blood alcohol content of .10 or more, drivers are considered legally intoxicated.

Men's Varsity Basketball Has Rough Week

by Joe Scialabba

After defeating Scranton 75-56 two weeks ago the Juniata men's basketball team was looking to turn the tide on their 1984-85 season. However, last week the Indian ship ran aground, hitting shallow water at Lebanon Valley and against Drew.

The Tribe did beat Delaware Valley, 69-61 on Saturday.

Juniata fell back into old habits at Lebanon Valley on Wednesday night, allowing the Flying Dutchmen a 73-71 win.

The Indians played a very poor first half, trailing 42-34 at the intermission, and then blew a five-point lead late in the game with several key turnovers.

Dick Moses missed a 25-footer just before the buzzer, after LV had missed a chance to clinch the game at the foul line.

Moses was held to only eight points, but senior center Mark Rucinski had his best game of the season, scoring 32 points and grabbing 14 rebounds.

Carlton Rodgers scored 10 points.

On Friday night in Memorial Gym, the Indians again fell victim to untimely mistakes in a 50-46 loss to Drew.

Juniata led 21-18 at halftime, but shot a cool 37 percent from the floor the second half as the Running Rangers took the Middle Atlantic Conference win back to Madison, NJ.

Rucinski once again played solid basketball, hitting for 10 points and taking 16 boards.

Moses recovered from his cold night at Lebanon Valley to score a game-high 23 points.

The Indians may have played their worst game as a team in the Friday night loss.

Juniata bounced back on Saturday in their win over Del Valley.

After sloppy play all through the lineup on Friday, the Indians got good play from everyone that stepped into the court as JC got their second MAC victory of the season.

Moses played perhaps the best overall game of his career as the junior forward nailed 16 points and grabbed 16 rebounds.

Eric Lane came back to life with 13 points, including a clutch 5-of-6 at the foul line.

Rucinski finished off a very strong week of play with 10 points and 11 rebounds, despite not starting due to an injured foot.

Unfortunately, Moses was also injured over the weekend and is questionable for all of this week's games.

Juniata still had some sloppy moments, committing 19 turnovers, but shot 52 percent and outrebounded the Aggies, 46-27.

The Indians also survived a horrid 13-of-27 night at the charity stripe.

Juniata took a 4-10 record into this past Monday's game with Dickinson. The Indians travelled to Lycoming last night and host hot Albright on Saturday.

Ladies Basketball Excel On Road

by Joe Scialabba

Life on the road isn't always fun, but Juniata's women's basketball team had a good time last week winning two away contests.

The Indians went above the .500 level once again with victories over Lebanon Valley and Wilkes.

Juniata is now 7-6, and 3-3 in the Middle Atlantic Conference.

On Wednesday, the Indians survived a slow first half and ran away from the weaker hosts, Lebanon Valley, 59-43.

Juniata; still feeling the effects of two tough home losses to Susquehanna and Scranton, led 25-19 at halftime, but left the Flying Dutchmen behind with a 20-4 spurt to start the second twenty minutes.

Patti Ryan, Janet Robison and Sue Grubb all had 10 points to lead a very balanced JC attack.

At Wilkes-Barre on Saturday, the Tribe survived the rough weather and the tough Wilkes College Colonels, 70-66.

Ryan nailed down a foul shot with three seconds remaining before Grubb followed a miss with a lay-up at the buzzer.

Ryan had an outstanding 22 point — 17 rebound performance, while Robison contributed 16 points.

Freshman Jodi Cox hit twin digits for the first time, scoring 11 points. Sue Grubb had 12 of Juniata's 45 rebounds.

The women try to keep the winning streak going this week. They travelled to Lycoming yesterday and go to Gettysburg on Saturday.

Fast Paced I.M. Soccer

by Andy Hiscock

The three Winter Intramural Soccer leagues have been in action this past week.

The Women's league had four games scheduled this past week. On Monday, January 14th, "Footloose" defeated "Princess + Revolution" (3-0). In the second game played on Monday, "Panique" beat "TMK" (6-1). Karen Bennet had 3 goals, Jill Whitmer had 2 goals, and Mary Weir had 1 goal for "Panique". The ladies were in action on Thursday, January 17th. "Princess + Revolution" defeated "Panique" (5-3), with Kim Laubscher putting in three goals for the princess. "Footloose" won their second game of the week by defeating "TMK" (3-1). Marie Olver, Lori Swivel, and Julie Robbins each scored for "Footloose".

The Men's league also had four teams in action last week. Last Monday, "Lemmon 714" beat Mazod Squad" (7-4) with the help of 3 goals from Dan Berger, and 2 goals from Walter Ball. "501 Blues" played to a (6-6) overtime tie with "Third World Omelettes" keeping both teams in a first place tie in the league with identical 4-0-1 records. Two games were also played on Thursday, Jan. 17th with "Third World Omelettes" crushing "The Hellions" (7-2). The game wasn't as lopsided as the final score, with "3rd World" having a 2-1 lead at halftime, but mental mistakes led to the loss for the Hellions, with Tom "Rat" Visosky finishing the game with 5 goals. In the final game, "501 Blues" defeated "Mazod Squad" (5-4). Chuck Kreutzberger and Mike Smith had two goals each to account for most of 501's scoring, despite the outstanding effort of Gillette who had 3 of the 4 goals for Mazod.

The Co-Recreational League held two games last Tuesday, Jan. 15th, with "Rat Race United" handily defeated "Penn St." (8-1). In the other game, "Double-07" beat "Hat Tricks" (6-4). Last Sunday, "Hat Tricks" picked up a win when they defeated "Rat Race United" in a wild (9-8) game. Both teams left their defenses at home, leaving room for Sean Ruth to score 4 goals and Eric Cremer to pick up 3 more for "Hat Tricks".

Tom Reese had a fine game, dishing off several assists and scoring nine points.

The Tribe JV team will play Albright in the Saturday night prelim in Memorial Gym, Kennedy Sports and Rec Center.

Indian Grapplers Pin King's 42-12

Even Season Record at 2-2

by Mike Culver

This past Saturday, the Indian Grapplers posted another victory to increase their record to the .500 mark (2-2). The victim in this 41-12 win, was Kings College.

Leading the Indian attack were sophomore Matt Eggleston, and freshmen Greg Hughes and Steve Feltenberger each with a pin. Captain Rick Noll added an impressive three team points in his 134 lb. bout with the King's captain.

Also contributing to Juniata's large margin of victory were three forfeits by Kings, at 118, 126, and 190 weight divisions. As the season winds down, the grapplers are faced with four more matches, which will all be away. This Saturday they travel to Messiah for a tri-meet against Haverford and Messiah to be held at 1 p.m.

World News Update

by Cindy Duick

WASHINGTON — A Reagan Administration source reported Saturday that Reagan intends to ask Congress to refuse federally granted loans to all college students with family incomes above $32,500.

The 1986 fiscal budget will seek to limit total aid to any student, including graduate students, regardless of how poor his or her family is, to $4,000. Pell Grant eligibility would also be restricted.

Reagan will include the student aid cutbacks in the budget he will send to Congress on Feb. 4. Some of the cuts could possibly affect the aid budget for this fall, although most of the cuts would affect grants and loans for the academic year starting September 1986.

Student aid is the largest part of the Education Department's $17.9 billion fiscal 1985 budget. Over five million college students receive federal aid yearly, including 3.3 million who borrowed more than $7 billion in guaranteed loans last year.

SYRACUSE, NY — The United Steelworkers of America honored rock star Bruce Springsteen with a special "thank-you" presentation for "putting into song the feelings and conditions of working people everywhere," said Lou Thomas, USW District 4 Director.

Not only does Springsteen's "Born in the USA" album celebrate the working people and the unemployed, but Springsteen has donated over $50,000 to steelworkers' food banks in Pennsylvania, California, Colorado, Washington and Arizona.

MANAGUA, Nicaragua — Ending a two-day visit to Nicaragua Mir Hussein Musavi, Prime Minister of Iran, denied Washington claims that Iran is aiding the leftist Sandinista government with arms. At a news conference Friday, Musavi accused Mr. Reagan of trying to "present lovers of liberty as terrorists."

Actor/comedian Steve Landesberg chats with Paul Bomberger, Managing Editor of the Juniatian, following his performance last Tuesday night in Oller Hall. Landesberg packed the house and received excellent reviews from all who attended.

Landesberg Packs Oller
Leaves Audience Wanting More

Approximately 681 students, faculty and area residents crammed into Oller Hall last Tuesday night eagerly awaiting the appearance of actor/stand-up comic, Steve Landesberg, better known as Sgt. Arthur Dietrich.

When the lights dimmed and Dane Benko welcomed Landesberg to Juniata College, everyone sat on the edge of their seats. A round of applause greeted Landesberg as he graced the Oller stage.

He opened his performace with a few one-liners targeted at our football and basketball teams. The audience responded with laughter.

"I don't know what I'm going to say tonight; I guess I'll go with whatever comes to me," Landesberg expalined to the crowd.

The locals felt right at home when Landesberg asked them what they did for fun in this town? He said one area resident told him cow-tipping was a favorite pasttime in Huntingdon. The locals roared and clapped in approval. Landesberg expressed that small country towns have always been hospitable toward him. "Growing up in the Bronx, I'm just not use to little towns."

Landesberg went on to humor us with his experiences at Fort Dix, while in the army. "The things I remember most about Fort Dix was all the mixed marriages."

A great admirer of sports, he said he loves interviews with athletes, especially Fernando Valenzuala. "Valenzuala says he likes 11 year old girls and his interpreter tells us that his curve ball was very effective tonight."

Landesberg interspersed cracks on Vanessa Williams, the Olympics, commercials and the Jews throughout his performance, much to the approval of the cheering crowd.

He said he was rather quiet and shy as a kid. "My father thought I was crazy when I told him I wanted to be an actor," Landesberg quipped.

After working at the Improvisation in New York City with comics such as David Brenner and Jimmie Walker, his career in television began on the Johnny Carson Show in 1971. "That same week I appeared on The Mike Douglas and David Frost Shows as well."

The Carson show skyrocketed Landesberg's show business career. Danny Arnold, executive producer of Barney Miller, discovered him and cast Landesberg as Sgt. Arthur Dietrich. In the seven and a half year series, fans laughed week

One Acts Set The Stage

Juniata College students will present the annual "One Act Plays" Thursday, Jan. 31 through Feb. 2, at 7:30 p.m. in Juniata's Oller Hall.

This year's plays include two comedies, "The Apollo of Bellac" by Maurice Valency and "The Case of the Crushed Petunias" by Tennessee Williams, as well as the Agatha Christie mystery, "Afternoon at the Seaside."

In "The Case of the Crushed Petunias" author Williams expressed his desires for the abolition of war, in a comedy-fantasy context.

A goodly collection of characters on a holiday at a resort become involved in a not so perfect crime in the Christie melodrama, "Afternoon at the Seaside."

All of the plays are performed and directed by Juniata students under the supervision of Doris P. Goehring, assistant professor of speech and theater.

The stage work for all three plays is being done by the members of Ms. Goehring's play production class.

Admission to the plays is free. The plays will be performed in the round, with the audience seated on the Oller Hall stage. Over the years, the "One Act Plays" have provided area residents with a wide variety of theatrical entertainment. This year will be no exception.

They Call This Academic Achievement

All the ingredients are here at Juniata College for one to receive a bachelors degree in the physical or social sciences, humanities, history and politics. Each year over half of the incoming freshmen attempt to pursue a degree in chemistry or biology. The reason for this may be twofold. First, these students may aspire to enter medical schools. Secondly, these students may be aware that Juniata has an excellent science reputation.

The Juniatian finds this well and good.

However, the Juniatian questions some of the grading policies and testing procedures of upper level chemistry courses, particulary Biochemistry I and II. The Juniatian has reason to believe students who are presently enrolled in Biochemistry II are not getting a fair chance at the education they deserve. They are not motivated to just get by with a passing grade. Instead they want to gain knowledge and receive a grade equivalent to the amount of work they do.

During this fall term, Prof. Tom Fisher gave his Biochemistry I class a mid-term exam seven weeks into the term and later did not count the exam since he felt people cheated. This mid-term was the exact same exam that Prof. Fisher gave last year's Biochemistry I class. Since the exam was not counted and no hourlies were given throughout the entire term, the final exam was worth 70% of each student's grade. The other 30% of their grade was accounted for with eight pop quizzes. The majority of the class received C's and everyone passed the course. But did anyone gain new insights in Biochemistry?

Letters to the Editor

Dear Editor,

I would like to take this time to thank everyone who donated money to the Juniata Executive Club's Community Relation Committee's charity fund drive before Christmas break. We collected $141.00. All of the money was donated to the First United Methodist Church. With your money, the Church was able to buy thirteen turkeys to give to local needy families for their Christmas dinner.

Thanks again,
Jim Armstrong
Community Relations Chairman

Dear Editor,

As Editor-in-chief of the Alfarata, I feel it is my responsibility to apologize to all those persons inconvenienced by our negligence concerning scheduled photography appointments. By this letter we are not endeavoring to excuse our behavior, however, we wish to assure the campus community that this situtation is being rectified.

This letter's purpose is two-fold for I wish to invite all interested photographers to apply for the position of photography editor. All applications must be received by February 6. A letter containing information regarding years of photography experience and any leadership qualifications of the applicant should be submitted to box 918. Interviews will be scheduled after evaluations of applicants' letters are complete.

Once again, my apologies to all those inconvenienced.

Sincerely,
Kristine Van Horn
Editor-in-Chief, Alfarata '85

Students Speak

by Carol Stubbs

Do you feel Juniata should have a policy to cancel classes when there are extremely low temperatures?

Kay Rockafellow — Senior
"Yes, especially since it's a long, cold walk to classes. My eyes tear."

Laurie Rasco — Senior
"Yes, I do because temperatures that low are potentially dangerous; within 15 minutes you can get frost bite."

Steve Johnson — Senior
"It really doesn't matter to me because I'll either drive to class or stay in the power rack."

Glenn Hineman — Senior
"No, the quality of my education is more important to me then freezing to death. I'm like the mailman, I go to class no matter what."

J.C. Club Corner

by Lisa Greiss
Women's Action Committee

The Women's Action Committee is an organization designed to provide women with a place to talk about subjects pertinent to them. At each meeting, the group will discuss a different topic. Another club goal is to make the women on campus aware of some of the problems they can expect to face as they go out into the world.

The group has planned several activities for the month of March, including a coffeehouse and weekend retreat. Participants will be asked to sign up for the coffeehouse, which will feature a lip-sync contest, and then a definite date will be annnounced.

The weekend retreat to the Patrick Property will provide group members with the opportunity to spend time away from campus and get better acquainted with one another.

The Women's Action Committee is also establishing a woman's information library, which will be located in Beeghly Library in the magazine area. Specifically, the literature will address topics as women's roles in business and health services such as birth control. This information will be available to anyone concerned with learning more about these issues.

The Women's Action Committee is open to any interested Juniata students, male or female. Meetings are held every two weeks in Lesher's carpeted lounge.

ALONG · MUDDY · RUN

by Linda Ramsay

I've got a secret, I've got a secret!"

After three days of concealed operations, the five man space shuttle, Discovery, returned last weekend from America's first manned military space mission. But the "big secret" that was revealed after the shuttle's return was that the Discovery left behind a spy satellite to eavesdrop on Soviet communications.

Pretty clever of us Americans, huh! The real "discovery" is that the United States has a secret. Obviously there is a contradiction in terms when we announce to the world that we have launched a spy satellite in space. Why tell everyone (not to mention the Soviets) that we are directing this so-called secret weapon against a specific nation? Am I the only one that doesn't see the reasoning behind keeping our technological advances a secret?

When my mother made me promise to keep a secret that she had run into the back of a Cadillac with our brand new Subaru, I always thought it meant that I shouldn't tell anyone. With all the big secrets out in the open now, maybe that means that I no longer have to feel guilty about hushing up the facts that I don't brush my teeth before I go to bed; that I drink milk from the container; that I lied about myself on my resume (of course I didn't mean to, but as a senior without a job or future I was desperate); and that I was the one that left a little bit of the weekend on the bridge across Muddy Run.

As a senior at Juniata College, I am halfway through the final step toward graduating (maybe not, after the aforementioned confessions) — I am taking SVS. These three consonants represent the true meaning of being a senior —re-evaluating our "personal value theories."

Along the lines of values and conformity to social behavior, I have found myself still questioning rules such as the three strike rule which states that any student enrolled in SVS is only allowed to miss three (3) class periods. This type of rule authority never infringed upon my rights as an underclassman. But now I am faced with a truth and "secret" that only the U.S. spy satellite and I know —I've already missed my allotted amount. I'm going to try and maintain my own sense of values on secrecy and keep this under wraps.

Student Government Update

by Avril Opiante

The Student Government is doing a great deal to improve campus life for Juniata students. Two areas on campus had been unsafe due to poor lighting. The Residential Life committee resolved this problem after consulting with Jack Linetty. There are two new lights on campus-one facing Good Hall by the library and the other near East Houses.

Due to the efforts of the Residential Life Committee and Circle K, the Bloodmobile was here Wednesday, January 23. The blood drive was successful. Over 118 donations of blood were received.

The Student Concerns committee is arranging to provide bus service for Juniata students. The Fullington Bus Company will provide low rate transportation for students beginning at this winter's break. Vans will take students to State College, from where the buses will depart.

The Student Concerns Committee has also constructed a survey on campus cheating. The survey will be distributed in some classes and collected immediately for a better return.

Inner Circle, the Residential Life Dinner Club, has been very successful. It opened on January 19. The next time the Dinner Club will be open is on February 9.

Recently telephones in residence halls had been damaged, and it was rumored that the phone company was going to remove the telephones. The Budget and Management Committee met with Bell Telephone and reached an agreement. The phone company will leave the phones in the halls and any damage to them will be treated the same as any willful damage done to college or personal property as stated in the Pathfinder. All R.A.'s have been instructed to allow less student phone calls as well.

Student Government and Centerboard are currently hosting a live talk show on V-103 on Mondays at 9:00. This show features an update on what is going on on campus, and students are welcome to call in and make comments or suggestions.

"UNUSUAL CAN BE GOOD"

by April Evans

She squeaks, squalks, giggles, gurgles and hiccups, "She's So Unusual!" Cyndi Lauper may be 'unusual' (even by her own estimates), but that surely does nothing to harm her music. In fact, that may be it's best attribute. What is unusual about her music is her vocal style and overall tone. Cyndi Lauper's vocal style is a result of a unique voice, and a form of expression that goes along with it (here I refer to the hiccups, giggles and squeaks). The tone goes along with her singing style to project that music can and should be fun. That is not to say, however, that there are no serious lyrics. Part of music is lyrics and Cyndi Lauper shows she knows that.

The first song on the first side of "She's So Unusual" was "Money Changes Everything." The music made me want to dance. The lyrics dealt with the simple truth that some people believe money changes them as people and that they can't be friends with the people who were their friends before they got their money.

The first big hit of the LP, "Girls Just Want to Have Fun" is a fun dance tune with a pro-female view.

"When You Were Mine" combines a danceable tune with interesting lyrics. It is about a person wanting an old love back now that they can't have that person anymore. The lyrics are funny and touching, not sad.

Cyndi Lauper's second big hit "Time After Time" is a nice song, like a bit of school girl fantasy meeting up with the ferventness of womanhood.

"She Bop," a fairly good dance tune, sounds like she's defining the verb "to bop." Actually, it's another enjoyable tune about having fun.

"All Through The Night" reminds me of "Time After Time." It is slightly more serious, and takes us through a young female's mind and into the streets.

"Witness" is a good dance tune about the patching up of a love relationship.

"I'll Kiss You" is a funny song about a serious problem, getting your loved one's attention.

"He's So Unusual," starts out like "Adelade's Lament" from "Guys and Dolls." It bemoans the fact that this guy the girl is crazy about is strange in that he doesn't want her "loving."

Every song was good, in fact, "She's So Unusual" is one of the most enjoyable albums I've heard lately.

Guest Commentary

Dr. Jay Buchanan

From time to time most of us are affected by some form of mild depression. This is normal since mild depression is considerd to be the most common emotional disturbance. During this particular time of year though, we are more vulnerable or susceptible to it than perhaps at any other time.

But don't despair, there is hope. We can learn to deal with the traditional mid-winter blues, or more descriptively, the blahs. What follows are a few suggestions for getting ourselves up when we find ourselves down.

Get involved in exercise, Dr. Karl Stoedfalke, an exercise specialist at Penn State, suggests that it improves our outlook. Other experts note tht exercise is a mood elevator. Additionally, it provides us with a sense that we are doing something and not just sitting back passively. As I have noted in previous articles, exercise should be a regular part of one's life style.

One final comment regarding exercise is that it need not be competitive. Jogging, swimming and other aerobic activities are extremely beneficial in improving our outlook.

Work on building a support system. The research is quite clear on this matter. Those who socialize and interact with others on a regular basis are far more healthier that those who feel they have to go it alone.

A University of Delaware study on managing stress points out that the single most often used strategy employed by college students is to talk with a supportive person.

Depression takes its greatest toll on those who have isolated themselves from other. Knowing that others care about you is good medicine.

Watch what you put into your body. Nutrition is a key to staying healthy both physically and emotionally. Begin to monitor your food consumption and cut out refined sugars and cut back on caffeine.

Dr. Priscilla Slagle, nutrition expert, suggests that foods such as whole grains, fish and green vegetables go a long way in combating depression.

In addition a proper diet leads to higher resistance to stress which in turn may lessen the impact depression has on the individual.

Thought control. Change those negative self-statements into positive self-statements. Sort out those things over which you have control from those over which you don't have control. Concentrate your efforts on the former and forget about the latter.

Get out of that rut in which you may find yourself. Plan a mid-week activity that will help you break the monotony. You will be in a better position to concentrate and take care of your course work if you can build in these special motivators and reinforcers.

JC Students Learn Interaction Techniques

by Linda Ramsey

Twenty-six newly formed friends gathered in a circle last Saturday afternoon to decide which five of them would blast off to the new space settlement and leave behind the other 21 members of the group. No, this is not another episode of "Star Trek" but a growth experience in leadership training, sponsored by Centerboard.

Last Saturday afternoon from 10 to 5 in the ballroom of Ellis Hall, Dr. Matt Weinstein, the originator of Playfair, led the twenty-six Juniata students through a series of growth experiences focusing on leadership development. The seminar focused on learning through emotions or sensory experiences stimulated by physical movements or kinesthetics. For example, Weinstein suggests that instead of feeling depressed and internalizing that feeling, the use of kinesthetics offers the idea of raising your hands in triumph and yelling "I'm depressed." This physical explosion of energy develops the right side of the brain rather than the overused and non-creative left side, thereby overcoming the feeling of physical depression as well as the mental anguish.

Weinstein has been on campus previously, presenting Playfair to the incoming freshman classes in September, and last year introduced Juniata students to his unique model of positive, supportive group interaction with the Centerboard-sponsored Leadership Training seminar. The participants in the program learn to understand the importance of successful working relationships that lead to a feeling of excitement and commitment to each other. The special bond of openness, friendship and high-energy support has become the trademark of Playfair's motivational magic.

Weinstein educates corporate management executives, university administration, faculty and Juniata student leaders on how to facilitate dynamic motivation within yourself and utilize it in supportive group interaction. One of the methods used to realize the positive elements that we all possess is by telling a partner "everything" that you like about yourself and realizing that "you are a gift."

Appreciating the assistance of supportive "leg-up" people and realizing your own resourcefulness was emotionally emphasized in a 45 minute retropsective analysis that delved into the emotions of every participant.

Deb Maue, co-chairperson of Centerboard said that the six hour seminar may become an annual event. With Weinstein's enthusiasm and dynamic personality, the experience becomes more than the typical conference exchange of ideas between teacher and listeners. Instead it is a highly dynamic and responsive experience available to anyone interested in better understanding individual and group potential.

Teenager Debuts at Catharsis

by Will Thompson

Seventeen year old solo guitarist Mike Morder filled Sherwood's Catharsis lounge for the second Centerboard coffee-house of 1985 last Wednesday.

Good attendance and great music made for a super night for all who attended. Mike played a variety of music, from the popular sounds of Dan Fogelberg, The Beatles and Led Zeppelin, to the more extreme requests such as "Puff the Magic Dragon."

Great student participation made the night even more enjoyable . The audience cheered the young entertainer on, and Jake Smith and Ken "Fuss" Foster went out there and helped Mike out on the last song.

Mike is presently a senior at Huntingdon High School. He plans to graduate and come to Juniata College next year, and thinks he might choose computer science as his major. When asked why he did not pursue a profressional career in music, Mike explained that he was a pragmatist and that the competitive, cut-throat nature of the music-business frightened him. He said he would like to keep on performing and make music his career, but with the way things are, he feels that he needs a back-up in life if things in the music world fail to turn out the way he plans.

When asked if he enjoyed performing at the coffee-house, Mike said "It was incredibel . . . quite an experience."

His inexperience was easily compensated for by his good choice of music and great potential. Lets hope we hear the sound of Mike Morder again at Juniata.

Skating Benefit Planned

Area residents who are tired and bored from spending these long winter weekends at home may be interested in Cystic Fibrosis State Skate. This event will be held on Saturday, February 2nd at the Lake Skateway, Inc. from 1:30 until 4:00 p.m.

To participate, skaters collect donations and take their collected funds to the skating center on the day of the State Skate. Anyone returning $25 or more will receive free admission to skate. Prizes will be awarded to two skaters from each center who return the largest and second largest amount of funds over $60. A grand prize will be awarded to the skater returning the overall highest amount of funds from all participating skating centers.

Proceeds will benefit children and young adults who have cystic fibrosis, a serious and life-threatening disease.

Anyone wanting more details about the State Skate may call the Cystic Fibrosis office at (412) 321-4422.

Recently, Prof. Ruth Reed administered a test to her Biochemistry II class in which the raw scores ranged from 9% to between 60% and 80%. The test was curved so that 20% or above was considered passing. Three students failed. There were no A's; the majority of the students in the class got between 40% and 60%, which was curved to a C.

The Biochemistry II students, who were Biochemistry I students last term, are quickly becoming discouraged. Motivation is lacking, therefore resulting in below average class attendance. Can you blame the students for becoming discouraged and losing motivation?

The Juniatian questions the academic policies which are currently employed in Biochemistry II and were employed in Biochemistry I last term.

Are these policies meeting the needs of the students? Do these policies reveal a trend in science education where faculty are concerned with only differentiating students by grades? Most importantly, are students getting a fair shot at the education they deserve or are they just supposed to obtain a passing grade and be satisfied with it?

Bangladesh Diplomat To Present Lecture

"Economic Development of the Third World" is the topic to be discussed by A.M.A. Muhith, former Finance Minister of Bangladesh, as part of Juniata College's World Affairs Lecture Series Thursday, Feb. 7, at 8:15 p.m. in the Ellis Hall faculty lounge.

Since the independence of Bangladesh from Pakistan in December, 1971, Muhith has held a variety of key posts in finance and planning, including governor of the Asian Development Bank in Manila, secretary in the Ministry of Planning and Finance Minister from 1982-83.

After studying and teaching at Dhaka University, he joined the Civil Service in 1956, serving as deputy commissioner of districts in East Pakistan and becoming a member of the specialized economic pool of the Civil Service.

Muhith was assigned to Washington as an economic counselor to the Pakistan Embassy in 1970, and a year later held the same office in an unofficial Bangladesh Mission in Washington.

Presently, Muhith is involved with research at the Woodrow Wilson School at Princeton University.

The World Affairs Lecture Series is sponsored by the political science department and the Peace and Conflict Studies Committee with support from the John C. and Elizabeth E. Baker Endowment, the Sedgley Thornbury Lectureship and the William G. and Mary A. Nyce Lectureship.

The Feb. 7 lecture is open to the public. There is no charge for admission.

Students To Give Readings

Readings from poetry, literature, drama and the Bible will be given by Juniata College students Wednesday, Feb. 6 at 8:15 p.m. in Shoemaker Galleries.

The students, all members of the Oral Interpretation of Literature class at Juniata, invite members of the community to the free reading. Each student has selected a short piece of poetry, literature or fiction to perform at the Feb. 6 reading. The class is under the direction of Doris P. Goehring, assistant professor of speech and theater.

Shoemaker Galleries are located in Carnegie Hall, corner of Seventeenth and Moore Streets.

Financial Aid Faces Decrease

If rumors about the 1986 Education Department budget are true, one of every four students who apply for federal financial aid won't get it.

Students from middle-income families and those attending private or out-of-state schools would suffer most under the proposals, financial aid experts forecast.

Trial balloons sent up by the Office of Management and Budget (OMB) in early January signal the Reagan administration may try to limit students to no more that $4,000 a year in financial aid, and disqualify families that make more than $30,000 a year from the Guaranteed Student Loan (GSL) and Pell grant programs.

The budget proposals should reach Congress in February. Congress will then accept, reject or approve figures of its own.

It could be months before Congress and the president actually agree on funding figures.

"If the proposals are accepted —of course, we hope they won't be - it means a serious restriction to graduate study loan aid and to all kinds of undergraduate aid," predicts Charles Saunders of the American Council on Education (ACE).

Financial aid directors around the country agree the proposals could hurt needy and middle-income students

Under current rules, students from families earning more than $30,000 a year must pass a "needs test" to get federal aid.

Now the administration wants to cut off such students regardless of need.

Educators expect the OMB to try again to eliminate $412 million in Supplemental Grants, $76 million in State Student Incentive Grants and $17 million in graduate fellowships for women and minorities, he says.

Another recycled OMB plan would freeze next year's education budget, Western Washington University's John Klacik reports

Meanwhile, the Department of Education, burdened with changing leadership and an uncertain future, is reviewing all the proposals, but officials refuse comment.

Across the board domestic cuts will slice some aid dollars, ACE's Saunders concludes, but "we have as good a chance of beating it as we've had in the last couple of years. We'll face some cuts, but not the drastic meat-ax cuts the administration will propose."

Trivia Entices Juniata

Only one chance remains for students to take the challenge and attempt to win their choice of several fabulous prizes!

Last night's competition completed the fifth preliminary round of the six-round Trivia Challenge, sponsored by Professor Thompson's Small Business Management Class. The non-profit enterprise gives students the chance to test their knowledge and possibly win, among other things, a trip to Florida or Vermont or a $200 cash prize. The more money collected —entry fee is $5 per person ($10 per 2-person team) — the more valuable the prizes will be.

On February 12, the two grand-prize winners will be determined from the six teams that will have won their way into the finals. The last preliminary competition will be held on Wednesday, February 6 at 8:00 in the Ellis Mini Lounge.

In addition to the student competition, a special round of Trivia Challenge will be held for the Juniata faculty and staff on February 4. The winning team will receive a $50 gift certificate for a dinner for two at the restaurant of their choice.

Murrays And Crew Perform

by Beth Gallagher

The sounds of a thundering rain storm clapped through Ellis Ballroom last Saturday night when Andy Murray conducted his orchestra to the tune "Rain."

"Rain " was just one of a large repertoire performed by Murray, his wife Terry, and the Muddy Run Philharmonics in the Campus Ministry Board sponsored Coffeehouse.

An enthusiastic crowd turned out for the event and none were disappointed by the performance. In his unusual style, Murray cast a magical spell on his audience by playing his own music on guitar.

Murray soloed for the first half of the performance. He sang such favorites as "Take Me Out to the Ballgame" which required audience participation.

After a short refreshments break, Murray returned to the stage and sang a Madrigal favorite "Sally's Song." "Oh Susanah" with a James Taylor twist following. Terry Murray also joined her guitar playing husband in this set. Terry played a unique instrument called the dulcimer which harmonized with her husband.

The addition of The Muddy Run Philharmonic completed the band for the final set of the show. With Pat O'Dowd on the drums, Doug Yokoyamo on sax, Alan Schaffer on the tuba, and Terry on the piano, the right jazz blend was created.

This sound carried over into the final songs of the night. A lovely rendition of "Just the Way You Are" followed an upbeat tune entitled "Vocational Trauma Blues."

The last song of the night, the "Great Yellow Bus-Mack Truck Race" told a favorite childhood story of Murray's. Whether this race really happened – we'll never know, but the charm in the delivery was entertainment enough for Saturday night's crowd.

Landesberg

after week at Dietrich's antics at the 12th precinct. "The most memorable was the first Barney Miller episode; it was a riot."

Landesberg's own brand of humor dazzled the crowd for about an hour and a half. He left the stage smiling and waving to the cheering of a capacity crowd.

Following the performance, I spoke with Landesberg about his career. He enjoys stand-up comedy more than acting because it is much easier. "I don't have to prepare any lines when I perform for colleges." Landesberg will continue entertaining at concert halls throughout the country and Canada.

Landesberg said he owes much of his television successes to Danny Arnold and his close friend Johnny Carson. "Danny discovered me and Carson gave me the break I needed."

When asked about his future plans, he said he's going to do stand-up comedy in London, England and a talk show entitled "Chat Section." "The show will be different because I have to rehearse my comedy and I never usually rehearse comedy."

Landesberg said he enjoyed his second trip to Juniata College. "Maybe I'll return in another six years or so."

A little relaxation on the set? The cast of this year's one act plays practices in Oller Hall. The plays are slated t open at 8:15 tonight and run through Sat., Feb. 2.

Co-Rec Volleyball Action Heats Up

by Andy Hiscock

The Intramural Co-Rec Volleyball league was in action, with both division "A" and "B" having matches scheduled. The Winter I.M. sports program is beginning to wind down, with both of these two divisions still pretty much up for grabs. I'm sure that there will be a tight squeeze for the last remaining play-off berths.

Co-Rec Volleyball Division "A" ("competitive") was in action one day last week, with four matches scheduled on Sunday, January 27th. "Respect Your Elders" defeated "The Exterminators" 15-4/ 15-13. Tracy DeBlase, and Kathy Harwick were terrors at the net for the Elders. "The Other Team" beat the other team ("The Exterminators") 15-0/ 15-5. Carl Fekula and Lisa Rodino combined for a number of kills for "The Other Team". "PAKA" beat "Five Points" by forfeit, and "Just For Fun" defeated "Respect Your Elders" 15-7, 15-13, with the help of good setting by Sue Grubb.

On last Monday, January 21st, Division B (no spiking or overhand serving) had three matches scheduled. Well, one out of three being played isn't too bad coming off a weekend, with "Queefs" winning by forfeit over "PMS", and "Flash Point" picking up a win over "Long" through the same route. The one match that was played ended up with "Destruction" defeating "Fleshpiles" 16-14/ 15-10/ 11-6. Bob Ryder and Sue Smith were able to set each other up well while on the net for "Destruction." Division B was also in action this past Sunday, January 27th. "Screwballs" defeated "It's Better Strange" 16-14/ 15-12. Carol Stubbs had a consistent serve and Chris Williams was tough at the net for "Screwballs". "PMS" narrowly squeezed by "Fleshpiles" 15-12/ 15-11/ 11-8. Beth Gallagher and Steve Johnson worked well as a team, with Beth setting Steve up for a couple of crucial points. "Destruction" beat "Deutrononmy, Son of Gath" by forfeit. "Druts" defeated "Grain Train" 15-1/ 15-11. Tim Sunderland and Marianne Shipp both used good placement of the ball to account for a substantial amount of "Destruction" 's scoring. "Fun in a Size Medium" beat "The Fin Tubes" in a close match 10-15/ 15-11/ 11-9. Mark Royer had a good day serving, while Bob Payne was able to set up the front row well for the victors. "The Flying Fickle Fingers of Fate" defeated "Ladafas" by forfeit.

Team Handball

by Andy Hiscock

The Intramural Team Handball league has not received any coverage yet this year, so I went to a few games last week and saw some hard-fought fast-paced action. The Team Handball League consists of four teams, with all four teams having at least one game this past week.

The league had two games scheduled last Wednesday, January 22. In the first game, "Roughriders" defeated "Whips and Chains" (32-25). Tim Barnett and Matt Siegel had a good game for "Roughriders". In the other game, "BASB's" also defeated "Whips and Chains" (33-22).

Frankie Phelps and Gregg St. Clair had a good day for the winners.

The teams were back in action last Sunday, January 27th. "Figpuckers" picked up their fourth win to stay right behind league leading "BASB's" when they defeated "Whips and Chains" in an amazing game (28-27). "Figpuckers" whole team played well. In other league action between the "BASB's" and "Rough Riders," the "BASB's" won 32-20.

Men Upset Albright 76-66 Go 1-2 For Week

by Joe Scialabba

Juniata's men's basketball season has had more ups and downs than a ride over the potholes of Route 22. The Indians are 5-12 on the season after a 1-2 performance last week.

The Tirbe dropped a 50-47 decision to Dickinson last Monday and a 74-50 drubbing at Lycoming before upsetting Albright on Saturday, 76-66 in Memorial Gym.

The Albright Lions were in the thick of the Middle Atlantic Conference Northwest playoff race, and in crucial need of a victory, when they came to Huntingdon. The Indians helped darken the visitors playoff hopes with a hot shooting night and an aggressive defense.

Eric Lane and Mark Rucinski both pumped in 18 points while Dick Moses hit for 13. Rucinski also had a game-high 14 rebounds.

Juniata survived a 14-for-25 foul line effort by canning some key charity tosses down the stretch, including a four-of-four performance by senior guard Doug Fleming.

The Albright victory was a far cry from Wednesday's embarassment at Lycoming.

The Tribe was just never in the game against the nationally-ranked Warriors, who led 32-13 at halftime. Juniata shot a frigid 26 percent in the first twenty minutes as the hosts ran to the big first half lead.

Rucinski once again led the Indians with 16 points and 14 rebounds. Freshman Marty Neitz scored 10 points and also had 7 boards.

Rucinski had been in the spotlight on Monday as he became Juniata's top career rebounder, passing Walt Vanderbush (1952-56). Despite Rucinski's 14 points and six boards the Indians still lost the three-point decision.

Dickinson led 32-27 at halftime, shooting a red hot 66.7 percent from the floor in the first half. But, despite the hot hand, the Devils went slow down in the second half, taking only 11 shots from the floor.

The winners hit seven field goals in the second half and, despite Juniata's strong comeback in the final stages of the game, held on for the victory.

Juniata, 3-9 in MAC play, hosted conference playoff contender Elizabethtown last night and hosts King's College on Saturday afternoon.

Senior Mark Rucinski drives through Albright defenders for an easy lay-up on the road to his total of 18 points. The Indians upset Albright 76-66.

Ladies Basketball

by Joe Scialabba

Juniata's women's basketball team may very well be the nation's best 8-7 team.

The Indians have lost to only one team not ranked in the Division Three top twenty, and have given several of these top teams "runs for the money."

Last week, Saturday to be specific, Juniata had a four point halftime advantage at Gettysburg but the nationally-ranked Bullets came back to win, 76-67.

Sue Grubb led the way for Juniata with 18 points.

The Indians, who lost their lead near the midway point of the second half, trailed by only three points with 6:40 remaining but hit an over four minute dry spell that allowed the hosts to pull away.

On Wednesday at Lycoming it was the Tribe doing the pulling away, storming to an 83-49 win over the Warriors.

Senior Patti Ryan scored 21 points and grabbed seven rebounds. In the process, the 5-8 native of Philadelphia became Juniata's third women's 1,000 point scorer.

In the victory, the Indians had all twelve players who made the trip score points. Alexia Marks had 14 points to go with Ryan's 21.

Coach Nancy Latimore felt the Indians may have played their "best game of the year."

The Tribe, 4-3 in the Middle Atlantic Conference, still has an outside shot at an MAC playoff berth but must win their remaining league games, including last night's showdown with rival Elizabethtown.

Juniata hosts King's on Saturday afternoon.

Grapplers Break .500 Mark

Rick Noll Named Academic All-American

by Mike Culver

The Wrestling team scored 2-1 this past week to raise their team record above the .500 mark (4-3). After a frustrating 45-6 loss Wednesday evening to Western Maryland, the Indians got back on the track Saturday with two victories in a tri-meet against Messiah and Haverford.

Getting off to a slow start with a 0-10 score after the first two bouts, Juniata swept the next eight bouts to defeat Messiah 38-11. The triumph over Haverford presented more of a struggle.

Bernhardt, Schechterly, and Noll gave the Indians the lead with two pins and a superior decision respectively. However, Haverford fought back to tie the team score 21-21 going into the final bout. Matt Eggleston came through with a pin at heavyweight to secure the Indians' victory.

Highlights of the afternoon included sophomore Steve Feltenberger having two falls, John White scoring a victory in his first varsity start, and each member of the team going home with at least one victory.

Senior Captain Rick Noll, with his 8-1 season record, has acquired the status of Academic All-American. Qualifications for this honor include a better than 80% record, a place winner in the Conference, and a better than 3.20 GPA. Tonight the grapplers travel to Washington & Jefferson for a dual match. This Saturday, our team travels to Lycoming for a quad meet against Elizabeth and Messiah.

J.V. B-Ball Roll

by Joe Scialabba

Juniata's junior varsity men's basketball team doesn't have any problem scoring points because they certainly aren't afraid to shoot the basketball. No, seriously sports fans, the Indian JV point parade continued last Monday in an 89-74 romp over visiting Dickinson.

The Indians are now 4-1.

The Tribe made 36-of-73 field goal tries, and led 40-30 at the half.

Chris Frew was seven-for-seven from the field on the way to a team-high 17 points.

Allan Reyes and Brian Shaffer scored a dozen points apiece with Marty Neitz getting 13 and Kevin Feagins 11 to round-out the five Indians in double digits.

The Juniata JV's may possibly be 5-1, if you count the forfeiting fact that Albright "forgot" their JV team last Saturday.

ADDIS ABABA, Ethiopia — The Red Cross has not been allowed to transport famine relief to rebel-led areas of the country by the Marxist government there. The government promised, however, to organize armed convoys to transport the supplies to those areas.

Permission for the Red Cross to transport the aid had been requested by Kurt Jansson, UN assistant-secretary, after protests by Western donors that food shipments were being blockaded to 2.3 million people in famine plagued areas.

HELSINKI, Finland — Finnish radio reported that the damaged engine section of the wayward Soviet target missile was removed by an airforce helicopter from a frozen lake near the Soviet border, Saturday. Although the Soviet Union has requested the return of all missile parts, Finland will not decide immediately on an answer.

MOSCOW — The Soviet news agency Tass charged the United States with drawing attention away from what it calls "U.S. plans for a crash militarization of space" by accusing the Soviets of arms control violations.

President Reagan sent a report to Congress last Friday in which he accused the Soviet

Jazz Ensemble To Perform

A free concert featuring many popular jazz favorites will be given Friday, Feb. 8 by the Juniata College Jazz Ensemble.

Scheduled for 8:15 p.m. in Juniata's Oller Hall, the concert will feature selections by Maynard Ferguson, Count Basie, Chuck Mangione, Weather Report, Henry Mancini and other jazz greats.

Established 11 years ago, the Juniata College Jazz Ensemble is comprised of 18 musicians under the direction of Ibrook Tower, Associate professor of music. Tower, a member of the Juniata faculty since 1974, received his bachelor's degree in clarinet and music education from the Peabody Conservatory of Music, now affiliated with Johns Hopkins University. He also holds a masters degree from Temple University and is currently working on his diploma in fine arts from Calgary University in Canada. Tower is director of instrumental music at Juniata and solo clarinetist with the Altoona Symphony.

The public is cordially invited to attend the Feb. 8 concert by the Juniata College Jazz Ensemble.

Juniata to Host French Art Show

Juniata College's Shoemaker Galleries will host a unique collection of original French posters of the 1890's and exhibition posters from the Bibliotheque Nationale de Paris, Feb. 1-16. The exhibit will be open to the public free of charge from 9 a.m. - 5 p.m. weekdays.

The modern pictorial poster as a medium of art was discovered in the late 1800's in Paris, Europe's capital of pleasure and entertainment, but soon spread around the world as the "chic" way to advertise not only entertainment, but also commercial products such as chocolate, cigarettes, margarine, aperitifs and bicycles.

All posters in the Juniata presentation are original, turn-of-the-century works which reflect the times, culture, movement away from the Beaux-Arts and the establishment of the poster as a successful advertising medium.

The Bibliotheque Nationale de Paris, the symbol of international life in France, is a depository of seven million volumes collected from various sources and also is famous for priceless manuscripts, rare prints, moneys and medals, maps and plans, and musical score collections. It is the single largest museum in the world, possibly rivaled in content only by the Library of Congress in Washington, the British Museum in London and La Vaticana in Rome.

The 25 posters on display at Juniata were created for exhibitions held at the Bibliotheque nationale of famous works by writers such as Jules Romains, Andre Maurois, Gustave Flaubert, Voltaire, Jean Racine and Charles Peguy, and artists including Max Ernst, Honore Daumier and Francois Clouet. This presentation was made possible with the cooperation of the Club of American Collectors of Fine Arts of New York.

Both exhibits in the Shoemaker Galleries were arranged by the Exhibition Department of the French Cultural Services in New York.

V103 To Sponsor Benefit

by Beth Gallagher

V103, Juniata's student-operated radio station, has announced plans for a Valentine's Day promotion to benefit the people of Ethiopia.

Using dedications sent in from Juniata students, staff, and faculty, V103 will set up a show starting at 6 p.m. on Valentine's evening. At this time, all dedications received will be aired. Along with each dedication, a one dollar donation is requested. All proceeds will go to Ethiopian aide through CROP. Campus Minister Andy Murray will be helping to see that the money is sent to CROP for use in Ethiopia.

The dedications can be any song requested for that special person. All names will be aired at the donor's request. Program Director Shelly Guest commented, "We generally don't allow dedications on the air, but this Valentine's Day seemed like a good time to make the exception. The tie in with the famine relief really makes this an exciting project."

According to Dave Peters, Station Manager of V103, "This idea originally came from Mike Wojcik, and our staff has worked it into a really great project that I think will be well received by the college community."

All students have received a mailer about the promotion, and an ad in this issue of the Juniatian further explains the program and carries with it a tear-off sheet that can be returned to V103 studios. The deadline for getting your dedication in is Tuesday, February 12.

Aid Cuts Loom Overhead

Main headlines of newspapers flash the threatening news that President Reagan is again pushing for budget cuts in educational funding. Specifically, those cuts call for a ceiling on the total dollar value of grants and loans any one students can receive; they also call for the denial of guaranteed student loans to students whose annual household income exceeds $30,000.

Individually, most students can assess what this could mean for their own educational plans. Indeed, the cuts, if approved, may reduce the chances for some students to continue their education at Juniata or elsewhere.

The Juniatian scrutinizes the proposed budget not on an individual basis, but on a national level. We firmly stand against these proposals.

As it is, college enrollments are down, reflecting demographic changes. Cuts in education would only further reduce college enrollments. It is not hard to recognize how that will reflect on our nation in the long run.

Without affordable higher education, technology would lag; the economy would stagnate; a clear differentiation between the classes would evolve and remain.

The United States cannot afford to deprive itself of growth and advancement. As students eligible for financial aid or guaranteed student loans, we should all keep abreast of the pending situation. We should also be prepared to lobby against the proposal both for ourselves individually, and for our nation as a whole.

Letters to the Editor

Incompetent Referees

Dear Editor,

Juniata College has historically prided itself on its outstanding intramural program, yet there is a real problem with our intramurals today. The problem lies in the area of officiating. Now I know that no one likes to officiate; especially by yourself. People are always afraid of losing friends if they should make a bad call. However, this problem could be somewhat alleviated if the people who are the officials, have experience with the sport they are to officiate.

Yet the problem remains. The intramural office has assigned students to officiate, when that particular student has never even played that sport or possibly even watched it on T.V. When these students come to referee a game, like basketball, they just walk up and down the court and sign the score sheet at the end of the game. They don't give a darn; they just want their $3.35/hour. This attitude ruins the game for the participants becuase they expect the refs to call the fouls, but they don't. It really makes you wonder if it's worth having officials at all.

Most of the time the refs don't show up. Also most games do not have a clock and the refs generally don't have a whistle when they are present. It seems like the intramural office doesn't care either. Perhaps that attitude has permeated down to the officials from the intramurals office. If the intramural heads did care, they would be checking up on their refs and issuing equipment that is in good working condition.

It is time to reevaluate Juniata's intramural program, and possibly the people in the intramural office. But in the meantime, if you don't care up there in the intramurals office, then let us know. We will enjoy the intramural program much more without the incompetent referees you send us. At least that way we will feel good about winning, and take our losses in stride.

Road Trips

by Andrew G. Davis

The long absence of this column has been the result of (as might be expected) a continuous series of unanticipated and completely out-of-contrl road trips, the likes of which cannot even be expressed on paper. It is almost inconceivable, the miles upon miles involved, lost maps, near collisions, the innumerable roadside repairs, the countless tankfuls of gasoline. It is perhaps beyond the comprehension of the ordinary mortal. It is enough to boggle the mind, that from the very waking moment of every day heretofore I have spent in the planning, undertaking, or acquisition or the means by which to take road trips, all to fill the ruefully empty space of my missing column. It makes a great excuse, in any event.

Anyway, with the onslaught of winter, one is wont to develop a fearful addiction to kinetic energy. I began to have anxiety attacks if restrained from moving for too long. I felt helplessly lost in the large expanse of my room, much preferring the intimate accommodations of my truck cab. The bouncy bench-seat was undisputably more comfortable than my desk chair, the steering wheel more reconciling than the typewriter. Yet given the amount of time I spent in transit, I failed to solve a fundamental problem: how to write while on the road.

Everyone has experienced it —driving along a particularly glum, lackluster part of a journey, and suddenly being accosted by a startling, profoundly brilliant revelation, a monumental, disgustingly clever idea which is . . . suddenly gone. Some wretched Bozo slams on his brakes ahead, or makes the famous "left on red" across your path with inches to spare, and the ephemeral, beautifully fragile thought has disintegrated.

In lieu of this nasty dilemma, I strove to find a manner in which to capture these ideas while mobile. My first attempt involved writing on a pad of paper balanced conveniently on the steering wheel. This proved ineffective; it wasn't so much the long, straying tire tracks I left behind through cornfields and flowerbeds that distracted me, but that my frenzied scribbling was utterly illegible. The next logical step was to dictate my ideas to a sympathetic passenger, but the torpor and eventual slumber that my verbose prattle produced on these people proved inefficient. I finally tried recording these deserving thoughts on a cassette tape machine, but the resulting playback of my voice over the truck's voluminous roaring and rattling sounded like a soliloquy whispered beside a speeding New York subway train: deplorable at best.

Hence the quandary remains. The ideas were lost forever and alas, the Road Trips column returns disgracefully barren of illustrious meditations, spontaneous notions, and tidbits of sagely philosophy, not to mention interesting places to go. Such are the winter doldrums, trapped in this chair, fidgeting, restless, with absolutely not a thing to say . . . .

Juniata Legal Society

The Junita Legal Society, formerly the Barrister's Club, is a fifty-member group of Juniata students interested in law or related professions. The goal of the organization is to familiarize students with various law school and to increase their knowledge of other law-related careers.

Activities sponsored by the Juniata Legal Society include trips to various law schools. This year, as in the past, the group will travel to Pittsburgh to visit the University of Pittsburgh and Duquesne. A tenetative trip is being planned to Washington, D.C. The organization also sponsors speakers, including lawyers or present graduate law students, to inform members on various legal topics or different aspects of attending law school. Judge Morris Terrazzi, a lawyer from Huntingdon, spoke last term on legal ethics. One other way in which the Juniata Legal Society keeps its members aware of different law school prospects is to keep a file of current literature available in Good Hall.

Anyone interested in joining the Juniata Legal Society should contact Mike Wojcik, Box 1627. Meetings are usually held once a month. The next one will take place on Tuesday, February 12 at 8:15 p.m. in room 214 Good Hall.

by Mark Royer

So here we are stuck at Juniata College, middle of winter term, with no sign of spring ahead. This week I'm not writing about our snow-bound campus, the administration, or the food service. A more appropriate title than "Along Muddy Run" this week would be "How I Spent My Summer Vacation."

This past summer my brother, Jon, was a rider in the Race Across America (RAAM), a 3000 mile bike race from California to Atlantic City. When he first started thinking about doing this, I don't know. I'm sure his friends Lon Haldeman and Susie Notorangelo were a a major influence. Susie holds the transcontiental record for women and, until last summer, Lon was the men's record holder.

In previous years Jon has been on support crews for Lon on his record-setting rides (incluiding a double crossing, NY-LA-NY, in jut over 24 days). Last spring Jon trained with Lon and Sue and in May qualified for RAAM.

During the race itself, all the racers do are ride (about 20 hours a day) which is why they need support crews. My brother's crew consisted of myself, my dad, and four others. Our support vehicles were one VW rabbit and one 23-foot motorhome. The car stays with the rider at al times providing food, protection, spare bikes, and light at night. The motorhome is the kitchen, the laundromat, and the bedroom. We all did quite well maneuvering the beast of a motorhome. We only took out one sign (Bob got it in a downtown Longbeach parking lot) and no pedestrians or small cars — that I know of, anyway.

The race started from the pier in Huntingdon Beach, California at 8:00 A.M. on August 19. We spent the few days prior to the start up the coast in Long Beach, "away from the beach unfortunately, for the women on the beach were incredible (I wish they all could be Pennsylvania girls). Jon wanted to stay somewhere more isolated where he and his crew ould have fewer "distractions". We never forgave him for that.

At the start of the race, the field of 24 riders didn't spread out much until they had gotten through Los Angeles. It was very confusing going through the city as each rider had two or three support vehicles (including a motorhome) which were trying to stay close.

Once the race was underway, 'days' became very obscure and not very useful as a way to keep time. "Race time" was actually East Coast time, used to avoid confusion while crossing through the different time zones. This meant that the time was given in local time and race time; necessary but confusing. Since I didn't keep a diary I'm not sure exactly what happened when.

Some things do stand out. The ABC film crew was everywhere at first, but as Jon dropped back from the leaders we saw less of them! Once Jon pulled off the side of the road to urinate. No sooner had he stopped than the ABC camera truck was pulling over in front of him. They must have sensed some dramatic moment unfolding since riders rarely get off their bikes. They looked pretty embarrassed when they realized what was happening. This scene will probably be edited out for television.

Speaking of television, RAAM is scheduled to be shown this Sunday and next Sunday on ABC. I strongly suggest that you tune in. I'm sorry to say thay you won't see much of my brother, as he only made it to day three — 740 miles, he hung it up somewhere in the wastelands of Utah. Your best bet to see him is at the starting line —he'll be wearing a Pepsi jersey and standing newxt to Lon Haldeman (You'll see lots of Lon). All I can say is that if you watch the show next year I hope the name 'Jon Royer' plays a more prevalent part in the production.

From the Pen of. . . .

There is a growing problem indigenous to our country which receives little attention: malice of the environment. Whatever happened to those days in the 1970s when the country seemed to be moving toward greater appreciation, and care, for the environment in which we live? The 1970s witnessed such legislation as the Clean Air and Water Acts, the Ocean Dumping Act, Safe Drinking Water Act, Toxic Substances Control Act to name a few; all of which protected the public from the abuses of careless business interests, and a neglectful public. For Congress, 1985 could well be the Year of the Environment as these pollution issues pile-up for reauthorization. However, because of the current state of the budget deficit, and the resounding need within Congress to correct this problem first, legislators may not be able to effectively handle both budgetary and environmental problems.

Superfund, the toxic dump clean-up law, is in danger of running out of funds by September 20; this is when the tax on chemical companies, which raises most of its money, expires. The Superfund law makes dumpers and dump owners legally responsible for paying clean-up costs. Everybody involved, including EPA, agrees that the current $1.6 billion fund is not big enough to clean-up the Love Canals and Time Beaches toxic dumping disasters. The issue is whether its renewal for another five years should be at a $5 billion or $10 billion funding level. The Reagan administration, while at first not supporting the Superfund concept, has since changed its mind after EPA head, Anne Burford resigned in 1983; but it only wants a $5 billion budget over the next five years. Renewal is a necessity since toxic dumps create a scared and angry public, and there are toxic dumps in every state.

Acid rain, a cause for the death of lakes, animal, and plant life in America, is an issue hotly debated within Congress tied to the air quality issues. In 1970, when the Clean Air Act was passed, sulfur-dioxide stood at 30 million tons per year, in 1980, sulfur-dioxide emissions stood at 26 million tons. Environmentalists urge a drastic tightening of existing smoke-stack laws that would reduce annual emissions by another eight million to 12 million tons per year. However, in 1981, funding authorization for the Clean Air laws expired, and the EPA lost its quisi-judicial rights to punish uncooperative industries for not meeting the clean air standards. Although scientists have not agreed as to what should be done to stop acid rain, a step toward reauthorizing the Clean Air Act is surely more appropriate that continued intransigence form the Reagan administration, and Congress.

The Clean Water Act, which controls water pollution by requiring permits for any discharge into a waterway, expired September, 1982. A renewal, although introduced by the House but killed in the Senate, was made in June, 1984. Parts of the Act struggle along due to temporary authorizations, but, in part, due to the weakness of the act, 30% of US lakes are being adversely affected by nonpoint pollution.

In sum, the Superfund stands the best chance of being renewed; but the Clean Air Act, seems destined to get nowhere.

"One Acts" Entertain Audience

by Scott Snyder

The Winter One Acts held in Oller Hall this past weekend were a great success. Each night the cast of players performed for a fullhouse. The audience was a mix of college students, faculty and twonspeople.

The plays performed this year were a mix of comedy and mystery. The comedies were, "The Apollo of Bellac" by Maurice Valency and "The Case of the Crushed Petunias" by Tennessee Williams. The mystery, written by Agatha Christie, was entitled, "Afternoon at the Seaside."

The performance of the cast in each play was excellent, as implied by the favorable audience reaction. Ms. Goehring's Production class also did an excellet job with the props and seating arrangements.

The members of the cast and the production crew should receive a hearty round of applause for providing the student body with some delightful entertainment. The One Acts were as successful this year as in the past. Let's continue this tradition at Juniata next year and support One Acts '86.

The three violations are the construction of a radar system in Krasnoyarsk in Central Siberia, underground test explosions that send radioactive debris outside of Soviet territory and alterations in an intercontinental ballistic missile.

Reagan Asks For Student-Loan Cuts

by Beth Gallagher

President Reagan's proposed student-loan cuts are likely to have a profound effect on Juniata students should they receive Congressional approval.

The proposal includes denying federally guaranteed loans to all students whose annual family income exceeds $30,000. The fiscal 1986 budget also seeks to put a $4,000 limit on the annual grants and loans extended to any student.

Reagan has been pushing for these very cuts in education since 1981, but has received stiff opposition from Congress, particularly from the House of Representatives. Though the education cuts have not passed, current regulation requires a needs analysis test for all families in the $30,000 or above income bracket.

This year, eight hundred of Juniata's eleven hundred students borrowed money for tuition under the federally subsidized guaranteed student loan program. A cut in that program could have a drastic influence on the significant percentage of those students whose total family income is in excess of $30,000.

According to Larry Bock, Director of Financial Aid, "The important thing for students to remember is not to panic. Certainly a proposal that cuts social programs and simultaneously increases defense spending will come under close scrutiny." So far, both Democrats and Republicans have been reluctant to cut aid programs aimed at the middle and poor classes.

Bock also stresses available alternatives should the proposal pass. The PA Higher Education Assistance Association (PHEAA) offers an auxilliary loan program where guaranteed student loans are made on an unsubsidized basis. Under this program, loans are made at a rate 3.5 percentage points above the Treasury Bill rate which is currently between 8 and 9 percent.

As a final note, Bock added that any studnets or parents with questions and concerns should contact him at the Financial Aid Office.

In 1981, students at Juniata banned together to lobby against the cuts. The Juniatian will keep students updated as lobbying information becomes available.

Juniata Hosts Carnell for the 1984-85 Year

by Laurie A. Rasco

Dr. Corbin S. Carnell, professor of English at the University of Florida in Gainesville, has been the J. Omar Good Visiting Professor at Juniata for the 1984-85 academic year.

Carnell has been teaching at the University of Florida since 1958, but has also taught at such distinguished schools as Georgetown, Eckerd, and the University of British Columbia and Sir Sanford Fleming College (both in Canada). This summer Carnell will be teaching English in China at the invitation of the Chinese government.

Fall term at J.C., Carnell taught "The Language of Film." As an English professor, he first became interested in teaching film when he realized the advantage of discussing literature as related to film. "Also, people can become better readers through the medium of film," said Carnell.

In 1974, Carnell wrote a book about the writings of C.S. Lewis, and because of this the college asked that he teach a special topics course focusing in C.S. Lewis. Carnell claimed, "The student response to the class this winter term was excellent." Enrollment was approximately 40 students.

For spring term, Carnell will be instructing an English course entitled "Ideas and Themes in Short Fiction."

Carnell has been enjoying his time here at Juniata College and has been very busy. He has been speaking foe several civic groups in the area including rhe Kiwanis club, the Friends of the Huntingdon Library, and numerous church groups. One of his primary topics, and one in which he has led workshops for, is Jungian Personality Theory as drawn on the Myers-Briggs Indicator, a test designed to categorize personality types. His wife, Carol, has also become involved in the community, and has especially enjoyed auditing several Art History classes at Juniata.

Carnell stressed his strong support for Juniata as a liberal arts college, providing a general education. He feels a small college enables one to "develop the person and experience and pursue more varied interests." Carnell particularly applauds the International Studies program which has recently been implemented, which "provides outside stimulus and incentive to education."

Matching Service Arranged

by Ann Cameron

Do you kiss and tell . . . (a) your friends? (b) only your best friends? (c) no one? Did you come to college to . . . (a) prepare for graduate school? (b) find a wife-/husband? (c) prepare for a job? (d) please Mom and Dad? Would you rather have . . . (a) money? (b) fame? (c) health? (d) happiness?

These are a few of the questions you answered if you completed a Computer Matching questionnaire. The newly organized Juniata College United Methodist Fellowship (JCUMF) is offering a matching service.

Closer to Valentine's Day, individuals who completed the surveys will be able to purchase their results. For just $1.50 you can receive a list of the ten most compatible persons of the opposite sex. The list will contain the names of those people on campus whose answers most closely match your own. An outside company will tally the results by computer.

The intentions of JCUMF are not to "couple-up" the campus. Campus Ministry Intern Patrick Walker says, "We aren't playing matchmaker. It's just for fun, more for people's curiosity."

JCUMF has just been recently organized. They plan to use the money made from the matching service to go on retreats and perhaps to visit the United Methodist Bishop in Harrisburg. The group meets every other Monday at 4:00 and organizes fun-filled activities in between meetings, such as challenging the Brethren to volleyball. Anyone interested in joining JCUMF may talk to Mike Derk or Patrick Walker.

Paper by Nieto Included in Book

A paper delivered by a Juniata College professor at an international symposium has been included in a new book entitled "The Spanish Inquisition and the Inquisition Mentality."

Published in Barcelona, Spain by Editorial Ariel, S.A., the book is a collection of papers delivered at a 1983 symposium in New York City marking the 500th anniversary of the Spanish Inquisition.

Included in the volume is the "The Nonmystical Element of the Alumbrados of Toledo (1509-24)," a paper delivered by Dr. Jose C. Nieto, Mary S. Geiger Professor of Religion and professor of history at Juniata. The Alumbrados were non-catholic heretical movements of popular religious reform which took place prior to the Protestant Reformation. Nieto's paper is an analysis of their ideas and religious doctrine as contributions to the renaissance and reformation of the modern world.

Nieto was one of 28 historians, doctors, philosophers and theologians from Europe, Israel and the United States whose papers were published in the book. The papers cover such topics as history, religion, literature and politics.

A member of the Juniata faculty since 1967 and a native of Spain, Nieto is a graduate of the University of Santiago de Compostela and the United Evangelical Seminary and has studied at Presbyterian College of Northern Ireland and Pontifical University of Spain. He has also been a resident scholar at the University of Marburg, West Germany.

Nieto is the author of several books, articles and professional papers.

Regatta Route Considered

by Paul Bomberger

Rumors are flying around campus that the Raft Regatta route may be abbreviated this spring. While these rumors are not factual as of this writing, there is a distinct possibility that the administration will propose to shorten the Raft Regatta route.

According to Dean Tilden, "No such proposal has been formally submitted to the Student Government or Centerboard to shorten the Raft Regatta route as of this date." The issue is a bit premature right now. However, in the weeks to come it is possible that the administration will seek the opinion of the Student Government and Centerboard concerning the possible abbreviation of the Regatta route.

The Juniatian will keep the campus abreast of this issue as it becomes clearer to us.

Albertson Joins Business Department

by Carla DeMarco

Joining the business department at Juniata College this year is Prof. Patricia Albertson, Assistant Professor of Economics and Business Administration. Originally, Mrs. Albertson had wanted to be an English teacher, and she started working towards such a degree at Memphis Tennessee State University.

After spending two years there she decided to put a hold on her education in order to raise a family. Albertson got married and spent 12 years working in business. Such a job was not challenging enough for her though. Next, she decided to do what she had wnated all her life—to learn how to fly. She and her husband enrolled at The Flight School in Georgia for one year. She learned how to fly and says it was the most challenging thing she ever did in her life.

Although she had worked with computers in her first job, she had never learned the technical side to computers. Her curiosity led her to spend a year at Dekalb in Atlanta, Georgia where she recived an Associate Arts degree.

Her husband's job caused them to move to Altoona, Pennsylvania. Albertson then proceeded to get an associates degree in computer science from Pennsylvania State University. She also spent a year at Juniata College taking undergraduate courses in business. In 1984, Albertson received her Masters of Business Administration at Indiana University of Pennsylvania.

Dr. Albertson had recieved an offer to teach at Pennsylvania State University. Instead, she chose Juniata College because her experience at Juniata College had been more meaningful to her. She said that she prefers our liberal arts atmosphere because it teaches a lot of values and teaches one how to be happy. And it is not strictly business either. When asked what she thought about working at Juniata College, Albertson replied, "I love it!"

I.M. Basketball Action

by Andy Hiscock

Both the men's and women's I.M. basketball leagues were in action this past week. The end of the winter scholastic term draws to a close, the Winter Intramural programs follow suit. Men's division "C" basketball has finished up with "The Big Ganglers" dominating this section ending with an undefeated (5-0) record compared to the second place winless record for "The Cripples III" (0-5), with the third team that made up the division forfeiting out of the league in the final week of play. Meanwhile, the men's other two leagues are in going full-tilt toward the coveted play-off berths; as is the same for the women's league.

The Women's I.M. league had one game scheduled last Sunday, February 3rd. League leading "Admissions" handily defeated "Bind's Bombers" (45-26) to raise their season record to (5-1) and hold a 2 game lead. Stacy Codnick showed some fine perimeter shooting for "Admissions".

Division "A" for the men's league had a number of games last week. On Tuesday, January 29th, "FF II" defeated "Late Night" (61-55).

Tom Cable had a solid game for "FF" both offensively and defensively. Also in action on last Tuedday, "Hustlers Minus 1" beat "Pipe Layers" (79-68). Last Thursday, January 31st "Hustlers Minus 1" maintained their grasp on first place in the division (7-2) with a close victory over "Smegs" (74-70). Mike Cottle had a good inside game for "Hustlers". "Pipe Layers" also picked up a win by forfeit from "FF II" on Thursday. The Men had two games last Sunday, February 3rd. "Pipe Layers" moved past "Late Night" in the divisional standings with their (57-45) victory over them. Steve Meeker was hot from the top of the key for close game "Pipe". In the other scheduled game, "Smegs" defeated "FF II" in a close game (47-45). Matt Eggleston grabbed a number of crucial rebounds for "Smegs". There are a number of teams fighting for the last remaining play-off spots. with just a few games remaining in the regular season. If you want to see some good basketball, try to get down to one of the games.

Freshman Carlton Rodgers (#14) sets up for the outside jumper vs. Elizabethtown last Wednesday night. The Indians led E-Town at halftime, but were unable to hold off the opponent in the 55-45 loss.

Grapplers 2-1 for Week

by Lauralee Snyder

Winning two of the three matches held this weekend at the quad-meet at Lycoming, the Indian grapplers impressively upped their season record to 6-4.

Due to injury, Elizabethtown was only able to show two wrestlers, enabling the Indians to pick up an easy victory over them.

Messiah, though proved to be a lot tougher. Losing the first two bouts left the Indians in a 0-10 hole. A pin by Rick Noll and a strong performance in the middle weights edged out the victory for Juniata.

Dave Cooper won by technical fall, and Greg Hughes won by a Major Decision. Steve Feltenberger and Randy Smith added to the effort with each of them pinning their opponent.

As expected, the always tough Lycoming team posed a major problem for the Indians. Rick Noll and Greg Hughes managed wins while Dave Cooper wrestled very well, but lost 5-4.

Tonight the Indians take on Washington and Jefferson away, and they finish their season this Saturday at Muhlenberg in a quad-meet against Elizabethtown, Scranton, and Muhlenberg.

Ladies Basketball Cruise To 85-60 Upset Victory

by Joe Scialabba

The Juniata's women's basketball team used every weapon it has in the arsenal last Wednesday night as the Indians ran Elizabethtown out of Memorial Gym, 85-60.

The Indians, now 9-7 and 5-3 in the MAC, had lost six games to teams ranked in the Division Three top twenty until finally doing a number on the 16th-ranked Blue Jays.

Juniata left little to be decided as they sprinted to an early lead and never looked back. The Tribe led 37-25 at halftime.

The Indians got a record-breaking performance from sophomore guard Janet Robison and senior forward Patti Ryan, as the pair combined for 55 points.

Robison, who scored 24 points in all, played a tremendous floor game to go with a 9-for-15 night from the field and a perfect six-of-six at the foul line.

Ryan, on the other hand, also played a super game in scoring 31 points, just missing the Indian single-game record of 32. Patti, who passed the 1,000 point mark this past month, nailed 11-of-20 from the floor and 9-of-12 at the line. She also had eight rebounds.

Solid efforts went right down the Juniata lineup as Freshman Jodi Cox scored 11 points to go with classmate Sue Grubb's 10 rebounds.

Shooting (50 percent from the floor) and ball-handling (only nine turnover, compared to 20 by E-Town) were key factors in the Juniata win, which was the fourth in the last five games.

The Indians hope to keep their MAC hopes alive when they host Messiah on Saturday. They played St. Francis and York earlier this week.

Ladies Swim Club Shows Bright Future

by James Van Buren & Tim Parnell

Biting the ice to carve a smooth turn, busting through the slalom gates, and then letting the skiis run flat through the finish line to complete a great run—the Juniata College Ski Team has accomplished this for the past two weekends by racing slalom and giant slalom courses.

The first race of the season was held at chilling Blue Knob in Claysburg, PA on January 26th & 27th. Racing intercollegiate aganist such big name colleges as Penn State, West Virginia, Dickinson, Kutztown, and Bucknell; Juniata placed third in the giant slalom race and fourth overall for the weekend. Contributing to the results and individual places in the race, Tim Parnell placed 8th in slalom and 9th in the giant slalom; James Van Buren placed 16th in slalom; Dave Kantner placed 16th in the giant slalom; and Chris Kohout placed 18th in the giant slalom. There were a total of eleven teams and sixty races.

The second race of the season was held this past weekend on February 2nd and 3rd at Wisp Mountain in Oakland, MD. The team placed fourth in slalom and fifth overall for the combined slalom and giant slalom race. Individual standings out of fourty-five male racers consisted of Tim Parnell placing 8th in slalom and 11th in giant slalom; Mark Kearn placing 15th in slalom; and both James Van Buren and Dave Kantner placing in the top twenties.

Expectations of the team are to attend regionals and compete for a chance to go to Nationals of the National Collegiate Ski Association to be held in Idaho in mid-March. The top five teams out of twelve in the division will compete for this chance. Come out and support the team at the fund raiser to be held this Friday.

Senior Co-Captain Patti Ryan gets this lay-up to fall vs. nationally ranked Elizabethtown. The Indians showed their true colors as they controlled the game from start to finish, and ended up with a 85-60 upset victory.

Ski Team Having Successful Season

by Andy Hiscock

Juniata's Women's Swim Club hosted a meet with Lock Haven last Saturday in Binder Natatorium Despite losing to a strong Lock Haven squad (division #2 school) 86-42, our ladies put up a number of good performances. Our ladies were starting out at a disadvantage by giving up 10 points to Lock Haven in the diving competition, and 5 points elsewhere in the meet, but despite this and the fact that Lock Haven has an established swimming program, our ladies were able to do well, which is a testimony to the dedication and talent that we have. I expect the team to take the valuable experience that they are gaining this year, and surprise some teams with their strength next year.

A number of outstanding individual performances were displayed for the Indians last Saturday. Stephanie Vlahos captured 1st place in both the 800M and 400M Freestyle for our ladies. Melanie Confer picked up 13 points for the Indians with a 1st place finish in both the 50M and 100M Freestyle and a 2nd place in the 200M Breaststroke. Beth Pierie also had an excellent day, with three 2nd place finishes (50M, 100M, 200M Freestyle). Lisa Wilson finished 2nd in the 200M Intermediate, and 3rd place in the 100M Butterfly. Dee Gulden finished 2nd in the 100M Backstroke. As you can see, we took points in many of the different events, that shows that we are a fairly well rounded team that can only get better, with the young members on the team.

Men's Basketball Fall To E-Town 55-45

by Joe Scialabba

Juniata's men's basketball team "left their game in the locker room" last Wednesday night, as Elizabethtown came-from-behind to win, 55-45 in Memorial Gym.

The Indians, who fell to 5-13 and 3-10 in the Middle Atlantic Conference, led 25-19 at halftime but had things slip away in the final twenty minutes.

E-Town, in second place to the MAC Northwest, kept their chances of catching Lycoming alive by shooting 59 percent in the second half and taking advantage of 18 Juniata turnovers, compared to only seven by the Blue Jays.

Juniata outshot the Jays from the floor for the game (44 percent to 42 percent), but the turnovers were too much for the Tribe to overcome.

Mark Rucinski played another solid game, but foul problems left him on the bench for most of the second half. He fouled out with just over two minutes to go in the game.

Despite the foul trouble, Rucinski scored nine points and grabbed 12 rebounds, ten in the first half.

Dick Moses also had nine points for Juniata.

The men's and women's doubleheader against King's, originally set for Feb. 2, was snowed-out and has been rescheduled for Feb. 14, in Memorial Gym.

The men played at York last night and host Messiah on Saturday.

Executive Board of Trustees Approve 9% Tuition Hike

by Glen Bouder

A 9% increase in the Juniata College general fee has been approved by the Executive Board of Trustees.

This translates into tuition, room and board charges of $9,891 for the academic year 1985-1986. The decision was reached on Monday, Feb. 11, 1985 after long deliberation by trustees, administrators, faculty representative Dr. Craig Baxter and Student Government President Glen Bouder.

Concerns over price controlling, financial aid, retention, endowment, and physical campus maintenance were among the major topics of discussion. What the price hike means for Juniata students remains a question.

It appears a larger than expected increase will mean additional revenue for some long awaited campus improvements. Among those discussed were a new hot water system for East Houses and re-instatement of lounge renovation cycles.

The financial aid portion of the 1985-86 budget will also see a substantial increase. This will help in offsetting the cost increase to students. This comes out of concern by the trustees over the entire financial aid picture, particularly in light of proposed federal cuts in aid program.

Juniata College's increase is 2% higher than a reported national average of 7%.

The executive Board of Trustees were also brought up-to-date on the Century II campaign at Monday's meeting. The second phase of the Century II campaign got underway in October when goals of reaching $4.8 million by 1986 were set; a large portion of that money will go toward educational endowment funds to help students battle the rising costs of education.

It's Time For A Change

Rarely, if ever, do the editors of the Juniatian use heavy philosophical undertones to express their views. It is time to break the usual editorial mold so that this Editor-in-Chief can, for the last time in this publication, reflect on an integral part of life.

Many campus organizations are about to undergo a change in management next term. No doubt, the leadership switch will cause a shift in organizational style and personality. And again, there's no doubt that some people will react with hesitation or resistance to those changes.

For many of us, changes are so routine and frequent that they go unnoticed. For others, change poses a threat to the security of status quo.

Indeed, many of us are inclined to perceive change as an evil. Frankly, that's a stifling way to look upon life.

Changes are necessary in almost anything we do. They prevent activity from becoming stale. They prevent participants from falling into ruts — ruts often too deep to get out of.

Changes are beneficial. They add new enthusiasm to any project. New blood in an organization creates an aura of excitement. Change often initiates a renaissance in an organization.

Changes build character. They teach us to gracefully adapt to and accept new circumstances, regardless of how fond we are of the specific changes.

Finally, change is inevitable. Some say that change is the only certain thing in life. If that's the case, and I think it is, then we should all welcome these changes and any others, with open arms and open minds.

ALONG · MUDDY · RUN

by Linda Ramsey

For the past three weeks as I walked across the bridge to East over Muddy Run, a glitter has caught my attention. At first I thought it was my imagination-grasping for that glimmer of hope that my grades were improving and that dinner on Friday nights would be something different than fried perch and seafood platter. But neither occurred.

One day when I had three papers due at 5 pm, I decided to stop and take the time to investigate the gleam from the stream. I thought for sure that the shine was the reflection of the sun on the body of my roommate's dead fish that she dumped into the water after her 39¢ investment at Murphy's Mart. Wrong again. The glitter came from a real pot of gold! Yes, now you can tell your children exactly where the end of the rainbow is. East House residents have been collecting for the trolls that live beneath the Muddy Run bridge.

If I ever come home as broke from a three day weekend as I did two weeks ago from the American Foreign Policy field trip in Washington, D.C. I may dive into the brown mud and collect the reward. For as much complaining that goes on about the cost of a Juniata education, the price of partying is inexpensive and may just balance the scales of our fine but expensive education. Every weekend I can count on spending no more than four dollars for two nights of dancing on the radiators of the lounge windows with my friends at Juniata versus a $25 attempt per night to party as hard at Georgetown (the party capitol of the world). Georgetown's price for a relatively inexpensive Bud Light was $2.75, not including cover charge and transportation, increasing the grand total of a night's entertainmennt to $6.75. And of course the price varies with the amount of action you are expecting. Bills of $5 to $85 are not unusual nor should they be unexpected if you head south to the nation's capitol. Washington, D.C. thrives on tourists, highly successful government officials, and people of influence who are not restricted by a tight student budget.

But for me and 36 other visiting Juniata students, it was quite a shock to find our wallets empty on Saturday moning with only an unused Metro ticket and a piece of Ethiopian bread to show for the three day trip.

If this sounds more like an "Out and About" article than Along Muddy Run, you're close. And as I've realized, soon I'll be "out and about."

This is more than the final week of winter term for me at Juniata. It is my last Muddy Run article, my last radio show, my last final exam and the last time I have to clean the bathroom at East. But I'm not complaining. By the time you are a senior, everything at JC can't be all that bad-or why would you still be here?

The reality of being financially insecure is closing in on me. "Senioritis'" is taking its toll on my budget as I try to meet the requirements for the Beer Taster's Club every Friday afternoon at the Brass Rail. Sooner than I realize, I won't be coming back to my "second home" this spring. Shades of depression have invaded my normally positive attitude as I think about leaving friends and fun. At the same time, the moments of happiness and success I feel towards Juniata will cling with me forever. My only regret-I won't be around to nominate myself for May Day Queen.

Think of me and the trolls next time you cross Muddy Run by adding to the pot of gold at the end of the rainbow. Happy Valentine's Day to all my lovers (who am I kidding) and enjoy yourself.

The National Campus Pigeon War Takes To The Skies

One cold night during the next few weeks, "before spring temperatures start rising above 50 degrees," a small cropdusting plane will buzz the Ohio State University campus, drenching selected areas with a detergent-laced solution.

As the sun rises the next morning — if the plan works — university workers will begin picking up the frozen carcasses of hundreds, perhaps thousands, of dead pidgeons and startlings.

"It's the simplest, most humane method we've been able to come up with." explains Ed Lavere, OSU's director of environmental health and safety. "As the birds are nesting in their trees at night, we'll spray them with the detergent and water and they'll slowly freeze to death."

Awful as it may sound, the tactic is only the most recent in an unofficial, declared national campus was against pigeons.

Dozens of campuses over the last ten years have adopted tactics that would make some war criminals blush in trying to stampede, kill and otherwise remove the birds.

Arizona tried to scare its pigeons away with metal owls. Maryland used "electronic clickers" to discomfort them. Yale installed $15,000 worth of screens. Kentucky put up "mesh hardware cloth" to keep them off certain buildings.

Others have fed the pigeons drugs, left plastic snakes in their roosts, soaked them with hoses, and trapped them in cages and dropped them off in rural areas.

They almost always return to campus.

Failing to convince them to move voluntarily, Illinois, UCLA, Berkeley and Maryland administrators — among many others — try to kill them.

While OSU's spraying method is likely to draw criticism, "we hope it will be less controversial" than the tactic the school has used in the past.

Until this year, OSU officials would select one Sunday every January to round up the local bird population and systematically blast them with shotguns.

Last year the mass shootings drew unusually harsh criticism, and the Ohio Humane Society stepped in to condemn the slaughter.

"Poisoning or killing the birds is aesthetically unacceptable and of questionable value," says Paul Steward of the American Humane Society.

OSU's spray-and-freeze method also "is totally unacceptable," argues Dennis White, director of the Humane Society's animal protection division.

Cleaning up after the them can be expensive.

Ohio State spends up to $3000 each time it has a commercial firm clean the campus, estimates Dean Ramsey, OSU's landscape architect.

The University of Texas at El Paso (UTEP) pays workers $5 per hour for three or four hours a week, and buys them protective clothing and breathing appliances to clean up the mess, says UTEP's Stan Brown.

White of the Humane Society says colleges can succeed "by changing the campus environment — like screening off nesting areas and cutting down ress — not by killing the birds and any other wildlife that feed on them."

Ah, yes, where was I before I got sidetracked? Buzz and Skel and I travelling along in the ancient Bug, gas nearly gone, daylight waning, utterly lost in the spacious wilds of Rothrock State Forest. It was late autumn, and we were searching for the elusive Bear Meadows, a particulary wild and unspoiled habitat area high up in the hills, a small glacial swamp, of sorts. Buzz said he had been there with a biology class, slogging through waist-high muck for some reason or other. It sounded like fun, so we were off to Bear Meadows! Finding it was another story, however. State-maintained dirt roads snake all over the mountains up there, and signs are a rare precious commodity.

The sky was at the strange half-light which comes shortly after the sun has set. We had just passed a brushy, cut-over area near some old cabins, when he pulled up along side a motionless buck-deer, magnificent with a full rack, not 15 feet beyond the side of the road. We weren't sure whether it was real or not. I turned down the music.

"Check it out! Why doesn't he run away?" It was a beautiful buck, he didn't seem to quite approve of our presence in his neck of the woods. He stared at us. We stared back. The buck lowered his head, pawed at the leaves once or twice, and began to snort steam from his nostrils.

"Go, Skel, go for it! GO!" Skel slammed the VW into gear just as the buck chaged into his quarter-panel with a phenomenal crash. A general terror was heard from the interior of the car. We didn't stop to see if the crazed animal was chasing us or not. We didn't stop laughing, either, after the shock had subsided and we were several miles down the road.

We got out to inspect the damage. Now, not only were we lost, nearly out of gas, and in the dark, but we were missing a tail light to boot.

SNIP, SNIP. Another round of the yearly tradition of budget cuts are just getting under way in Washington. Somehow, this year is dangerously distinct from other years. Perhaps its because if the President's budget went unscathed through Congress, America would still be carrying around a whooping $180 billion deficit consuming 4.3% of our gross national product. Or maybe it is because President Reagan has submitted a budget with a $39 billion cut in non-defense items, and only $8.7 billion from the defense budget representing an increase of 30 billion, or six percent in real terms over the fiscal 1985 budget. Regardless, even with the President's brilliant State of the Union speech, Congress is unlikely to allow Reagan's one-sided budget to pass through its saw mills.

After four years of defense build-up with no corresponding measures to increase revenue, the government deficit is high in the sky. Government spending today makes up 25 percent of GNP, while revenue makes up 19 percent — the gap represents the budget deficit. Because of the budget deficit, the US government is forced to borrow more to pay for these deficits; as the government loans more, there is less money available to consumers. Thus, interest rates rise. An increase in the interest rate makes dollar investments attractive to foreign citizens. This pushes up the value of the dollar, therby making it harder for US companies to sell their goods abroad and easier for US consumers to purchase foreign goods. The result is a $123.3 billion trade deficit in 1984. Forecasters project a strong dollar and continued increase in US trade deficits for the next year. The trade deficit suppresses domestic economic growth and job creation. Each $1 billion increase in trade deficit means the loss of 25,000 jobs in the US. If America continues to buy more abroad than it sells, we are in danger of becoming a net-debtor nation; a situation that may affect our standard of living for future generations.

Americans recognize the need for a strong defense. There will be no cuts in defense spending; the debate is whether the rate of increase in the defense budget should be moderated as non-defense programs have been. There are proper limits for the military, and a disproportionate increase in the defense budget without a sense of national purpose from the administration, calls for a pruning back of the defense establishment. What is maddening about Reagan's budget is that it's so one sided: the administration would slash funds for mass transit subsidies, Amtrak, sewer grants, juvenile justice, school lunches, federal aid for public libraries and operas, aid to families with dependent children, and medicaid, only to propose a huge increase in defense spending.

Perhaps the most noteworthy, and something that should worry most college students in America, is the administration's proposal to make families with incomes of more than $25,000 ineligible for federal education grants, direct loans, or subsidized jobs. Students from families whose annual incomes top $32,500 would be eligible for subsidized, guaranteed student loans. Additionally, no student would be able to receive more than $4,000 per year in federal education aid. For large families with many children, quality education may be sacrificed to spend more on Reagan's defense build-up. Well, education is like defense — it serves our national security by enabling America to maintain its edge in science and technology; apparently Mr. Reagan does not recognize this fact.

President Reagan's State of the Union address, coinciding with the introduction of his budget earlier in the week, is vintage Reagan; less government on the people by the government spending less. While such a strategy can be appreciated after the perpetuality of Big Government during the 1960s and 1970s, the President has not quite found out how to implement his program so that government does spend less (government spending, as a percentage of GNP, has increased in four years), thus truly getting government off the backs of Americans.

Nor has the president learned how to balance his conservative desire for less government with the modern realization that our government must carry on its duties of caring for the needs of our society: food, shelter, and health care for the poor, a quality education for everyone who desires it, health care for the old, funding for the arts, and a clean environment.

It is doubtful that President Reagan will be able to convince the Congress to continue the largest peacetime military build-up in our history, while some social programs go undernourished. While the defense industry provides economic growth for some of the nation, it does little for the economic growth in America' inner cities. Clearly President Reagan's initiative towards greater defense spending is misplaced.

Sweeney Sings At Catharsis

by Kristina Krohnemann

Ed Sweeney appeared for the Coffeehouse in Catharsis Lounge last Thursday night. Going by the title "Singer of Obscure Songs," Sweeney performed a variety of songs ranging from Irish folk songs to politically affiliated songs, to comical "beer-drinking" songs. He also did a fantastic instrumental mix of the Beatles.

Sweeney is from Rhode Island and travels throughout the East Coast playing at various colleges, clubs and social functions. He has one album cut entitled "The Times, They are Something Like They Used to Be" and a single containing the songs "Streets of London," "Banjo Medley," and "Ralroad Bill and the Cat." He is going to be working on a seond album soon. Sweeney also teaches guitar privately.

The Coffeehouse was well-attended and the crowd was basically a listening crwod. We hope to see Sweeney again at a coffeehouse in the near future.

Aerobics Sessions Concluded

by April Opinante

Spring term is quickly approaching and an activity which many students enjoy will come to a close. The aerobics sessions which were offered each night from 9 to 10:00 p.m. in the gym ended last Thursday, February 7. This is mainly due to student participation in spring sports, such as track and tennis. The instructors will be involved in spring sports, and therefore won't have enough free time to hold aerobics. Many students will also be involved in spring sports, so there would be fewer people attending the classes. In addition, often the teams for spring sports want to sign out the gym.

The winter term is perhaps the best time for aerobics. Since students are cooped up in their dorms for most of the day, the aerobics classes give them an opportunity to get some exercise.

Why are aerobics so popular? For one thing, they are non-competitive. Whereas on a team one feels pressured to play well lest the team lose, with aerobics each person can do as much or as little as he/she feels comfortable with. Aerobics are also a good way to burn calories, tone muscles, and strengthen the cardio-vascular system. The fact that they are co-ed also adds to their popularity. And when you are in the right mental and physical state, aerobics (though certainly not always easy) can be a lot of fun.

Students Present Readings

by Scott Snyder

The Oral Interpretation class of Mrs. Doris Goehring presented a variety of readings for the public on Wednesday, February 6. The readings ranged from Woody Allen's comedy Annie to the reading of the 103rd Psalm. The crowd of about thirty people enjoyed themselves, judging from the laughter and applause.

The class presented some very fine interpretations of great literary works. Ed Willard amused the crowd with an excerpt from Tom Sawyer as did Ruth Woodrow and Maggie Gregory with their interpretation of Bad Habits. On a more serious side, Bob Yanckello read a prose from Rudyard Kipling entitled If. In all there was a total of twenty-one readings, each given its own meaning by the student. This presentation of readings was considered the final for the class, and thanks to the public support, everything went well.

Juniata: Home Of The Largest Monopoly Game

Boardwalk, Marvin Gardens, Free Parking and all the rest of the Monopoly squares have become household terms over the years, thanks to the popularity of the Parker Brothers game.

Monopoly celebrated its 50th anniversary last week and at Juniata College, that milestone sparked memories of a very special Monopoly game.

According to Parker Brothers, the largest known Monopoly game was played at Juniata in April, 1967, with the board laid out on the streets and sidewalks of the campus. Two-foot square foam rubber dice were rolled off the third floor fire escape of Students Hall, and players were informed of their moves via walkie-talkie and messengers on bicycles.

"We started the game outdoors on April 29," recalls Dr. Toby Dills, the 1967 Juniata graduate who organized the event. "When it got dark, we moved the game inside, using a regular Monopoly board, and kept going non-stop for about 270 hours."

The game was organized as a competitive event between the four classes. "Each class built its own token which members of the class pushed around the board. We whitewashed the sidewalks and painted them to match the spaces on the Monopoly board," Dills said. The tokens included a giant Snoopy, an outhouse and a beer can. "The freshman designed a token that I can't begin to describe, but it was so tall it became tangled in the telephone lines," recalls Dills, now an associate professor of chemistry at Southeastern Massachusetts University.

Everything about the game was huge. The students made giant-size property deeds, money and Chance and Community Chess cards. "The houses and hotels were three feet high and made from card board boxes," Dills said.

Communicating the roll of the dice to the players became the biggest problem, so Dills and the other organizers enlisted the aid of the campus radio station, broadcasting the moves and providing continuous "play-by-play" action. It was not unusual to hear such reports as "Seniors eight, advance to Kentucky Avenue" or "The juniors are in jail again." Other student volunteers delivered deeds, collected rent money and carried out other chores. "In all, about 200 students participated in the game," Dills said.

"It was quite an experience," said James R. Donaldson, associate professor of economics and business administration and a member of the senior class in 1967. "They started on the corner of 18th and Moore streets," said Donaldson, who helped throw and retrieve the dice.

"My most vivid memory of the game was running up and down the fire escape retrieving the dice. We took turns throwing the dice and running after them. It was a lot of fun," Donaldson recalls. He added that the event drew many spectators.

Donaldson credits Dills with making the Monopoly game a success. "Many people were involved, but Toby put it all together. He was the type of person who was involved in everything on campus and had the reputation as a great organizer."

Those who took part in, or witnessed the giant Monopoly game take special pride in this unusual accomplishment. But all Juniatians share in that pride everytime they open their Monopoly game and see Juniata's name immortalized under the heading, "The Incredible Ways We Play Monopoly."

JC Jazz Ensemble Performs

by Carol M. Connell

The Juniata College Jazz Ensemble presented an enjoyable evening of music on Friday, February 8th in Oller Hall.

Under the direction of Associate Professor of Music, Ibrook Tower, the band performed a wide variety of jazz favorites including works by Chuck Mangione, Maynard Ferguson, Earth, Wind and Fire, Henry Mancini and Count Basie. Three different settings of the standard "Birdland," complemented by toy stuffed birds on stage provided an interesting series displaying various improvising techniques.

All the music for this informal concert was chosen by the members of the Jazz Ensemble, who, wearing their individualized costumes, seemed at home on the stage.

Leading Economist to Deliver Lecture

One of the nation's leading economists will deliver the annual Will Judy Lecture at Juniata College Thursday, March 7 at 8:15 p.m. in Alumni Hall, Brumbaugh Science Center.

Dr. Mancur Olson, distinguished professor of economics at the University of Maryland, will speak on the topic "The Rise and Decline of Nations: Afterthoughts."

A member of the University of Maryland faculty since 1969, Olson received his B.S. degree from North Dakota State University, his M.A. degree from Oxford University and his Ph.D. from Harvard University.

In addition to the University of Maryland, Olson has taught at Princeton University and served as Deputy Assistant Secretary of te U.S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare from 1967-69. He also spent six years as vice chairman of the Health Services Cost Review Commission for the State of Maryland.

Among his many honors, Olson has been the recipient of a Rhodes Scholarship, and fellowships from the Social Science Research Council, Woodrow Wilson International Center for Scholars and the Lehrman Institute. In 1980, he was a Visiting Fellow at the Hoover Institution on War, Revolution and Peace at Stanford University, and an Adjunct Scholar at the American Enterprise Institute for Public Policy Research.

Olson has served as executive and editorial board member of the Eastern Economic Association, and is a member of the Editorial SelectionCommittee for Economics for the Bobbs-Merrill Reprint Series. Executive Committee for the Southern Economic Association, Editorial Board of "Science," the American Association for the Advancement of Science and the Editorial Advisory Board of "Challenge," the Magazine of Economic Affairs.

Olson is the author of numerous books, including his most recent publication, "The Rise and Decline of Nations: Economic Growth, Stagflation and Social Rigidities," on which his lecture will be based. His many articles have appeared in such publications as "The New Republic," "The Washington Monthly," "International Studies Quarterly," "Washington Post" and "The New York Times Book Review."

The public is invited to attend Olson's lecture which is made possible by an endowment from the late Will Judy, a 1911 Juniata graduate.

A valedictorian of the Hamilton School of Law, Judy practiced law briefly in Chicago and served in the Army during World War I, rising to the rank of captain and receiving the Silver Star.

Before retiring in the late 1950's, Capt. Judy operated a Chicago publishing firm for 36 years. He wrote eight books about dogs, edited a dog encyclopedia, and made "Dog World" magazine the most widely read pet periodical in the nation. he also lectured frequently and judged shows in the U.S. and 26 foreign countries.

Capt. Judy made numerous finacial contributions to Juniata and in 1958, 15 years before his death, provided a $20,000 stipend to establish a lecture series "to supplement and enrich the academic program of the college."

Since its inception in May, 1960, the Will Judy Lectureship has brought 29 speakers to Juniata.

Students To Give Recital

A recital of keyboard music will be given by Juniata College students Tuesday, Feb. 12 at 8:15 p.m. in Oller Hall.

Organ and piano students of Teresa R. Murray, instructional assistant in music, and piano studnets of Mary Ruth Linton, associate professor of music, Katsuko Ochiai and Patricia Lloyd, both instructional assistants in music, will perform compositions by Bach, Chopin, Debussy, Haydn and Beethoven.

In addition, the concert will feature original compositions from Mrs. Linton's harmony-counterpoint class. A vocal group will sing settings of choral melodies and Mrs. Linton will play original keyboard pieces written by Juniata students Michael Giblin and Eric Barnes.

Remain In Contention For Regionals

by Tim Parnell

The Juniata College Ski Team was at it again this weekend in full force racing slalom and giant slalom courses. This past weekend's race was held at roundtop Resort in Mechanicsburg, PA.

Saturday, the team raced a tight slalom course against ten other colleges in the state consisting of fifty male racers. The team consisted of : Chris Kohout placing fourteenth, Mark Kearn placing sixteenth, Tim Parnell placing eighteenth, and Steve Helm placing twenty-first.

Sunday, the team had a relaxing giant slalom run and a comfortable fourth place standing for the day. Again, individual standings for the giant slalom run consisted of : Tim Parnell placing 12th, Chris Kohout placing 18th, Mark Kearn placing 21st, and Dave Kanter placing 34th.

Overall for the entire weekend, the ski team placed fifth, keeping them in contention for regionals in two weeks. A special thanks goes to the rest of the team who helped with the party Friday night enabling the top five to race.

I.M. Soccer Leagues Gear Up For Play-Offs

by Andy Hiscock

By now the three Intramural soccer leagues have finished their play-offs, and crowned a champion. At the time of printing for this issue however, there were still a few make-up games to be played. I will now recap last weeks action (Saturday 2/2-Friday 2/8), and give full coverage of the play-offs when we return from break.

The Co-Rec League had four games scheduled last week. On Wednesday Feb. 6th, "Double 0-7" defeated "Penn St." (6-3). Will Thompson had 4 goals, and Dave Campbell had 2 goals to account for the "Double's" scoring. Also on Wed., league leading "Rat Race United" easily defeated "Hat Tricks" (7-3). Well at least Tom "Rat" Visosky had an easy time, since he scored all 7 goals for "The Rats." The league also had two games on Thursday, Feb. 7th. Penn St. pulled out a crucial (4-3) win over "Rat Race United," to stay up with the leaders. Penn St. spread out their scoring among a few different players. "Double 0-7" beat "Tussey" (5-3) to hold on to 2nd place in the league standings.

The men's Indoor Soccer league finished their regular season play last Thursday, February 7th with two games. "Lemmon 714" defeated "Mazod Squad" (5-2) to raise their season record to the .500 mark. This was a fairly physical game, which is commonly characteristic of the men's league. "Lemmon 714" also was able to show a balanced offensive attack, with their scoring being spread out among five different players. "501 Blues" came up with a (7-4) victory over "Third World Omlettes" to remain undefeated 7-0-1 and advance to the play-offs.

Ladies' Basketball Player of the Week

by Joe Sciolabba

Juniata College sophomore Janet Robison has been selected Middle Atlantic Conference Player of the Week in basketball for her performances agains St. Francis (PA), York and Messiah last week.

Robison, a 5' 6 guard from Duncansville, scored 11, 24 and 20 points in the three consecutive Indian wins. She had a team-high 12 rebounds to go with her game-high point total at York.

Robison is the second Juniata woman to be named MAC Player of the Week this season. Senior Patti Ryan was honored two weeks ago.

"Janet is probably one of the best all-around players we've ever had in our program," said Juniata Coach Nancy Latimore. "She has been a very important part of this year's team, and we are looking forward to her future contributions to Juniata women's basketball."

Janet has helped the Indians to a 12-7 record and 6-3 league mark. She is the daughter of Carl adn Laurita Robison of R.D.#3, Duncansville, and a 1981 graduate of Hollidaysburg Senior High School.

Ladies Basketball Rolls

by Joe Scialabba

Juniata's women's basketball team had one of its most productive stretches last week, sweeping three games and raising its 1984-85 record to an impressive 12-7 mark.

The Indians, under coach Nancy Latimore, remain in contention for the final Middle Atlantic Conference Northwest playoff berth with a 6-3 league record, but need a win over Wilkes on Saturday and an Elizabethtown loss to the Colonels to get second place.

Last week's three victories came in impressive fashion. The Tribe beat St. Francis (PA) 64-50 on Monday night; crushed hosting York 72-54 on Wednesday; and ran away from visiting Messiah on Saturday, 74-57.

Against the Division One Red Flash, the Indians built a 37-27 halftime lead and never looked back. Holly Crable had 16 points to lead the Indians. Patti Ryan and Sue Grubb each pitched-in 14 points apiece, while Janet Robinson added 11.

York was no match for Juniata and, despite the fact JC played one of its worst games of the season, the Lady Spartans fell victim to a 46-point second half explosion by the Tribe. Robison led all scorers with 24 points. Ryan had 16 points.

The Lady Falcons from Messiah only lost to the Indians by four points in December but this time around it was a totally different ballgame. Juniata led 42-22 at halftime and was never really threatened. Grubb cruised to a near record, scoring 30 points. Robison kept up her sizzling pace, nailing 20 points. The Indians, as a team, shot 55.6 percent from the floor.

The Tribe finishes off the season on Saturday, hosting Wilkes. Juniata hosted King's College on Monday and played at Dickinson last night. If the chips fall, the Indians will enter the MAC's that will be held February 19, 21, 22.

Grapplers Stumble

by Lauralee Snyder

The Indian Grapplers managed only one win this past week due to injuries and other priorities.

Last Thursday, the wrestlers lost their away match to Washington and Jefferson. The losing streak continued into the weekend as they only managed one victory over Elizabethtown in their quad meet.

This weekend MAC actio starts as the Indian squad enters three contenders: Rick Noll with a 13-3-1 season record, Greg Hughes with a 8-4 season, and Dave Cooper witha season record of 6-9-3. Steve Feltenberger qualified for the competition, but is unable to attend.

The team as a whole finished with a 7-7 record.

Tight games for Men's B-Ball

by Joe Scialabba

Juniata came out on both the long, and short end of men's basketball scores last week, and both were of the close variety.

The Indians came home from York on Wednesday with their first road win of the year, 63-62. But, Juniata lost a heart-breaking 63-61 decision to visiting Messiah on Saturday.

In the York victory Mark Rucinski was the dominant force, scoring 20 points and grabbing 13 rebounds. Juniata led 33-26 at the half, but had to hold-on down the stretch. Troy Mummert's 15-footer with just four seconds left missed the mark for the Spartans, preserving the Indian win.

Dick Moses scored ten points at York.

The Indians, however, let Messiah take one away from them. Leading by eight in the first half, Juniata went cold and the Falcons grabbed a 30-29 halftime lead.

In the second half Juniata hung tough, but missed a chance to send the game to overtime in the final five seconds as the Tribe failed to beat the buzzer with what could have been a tying shot.

Rucinski again led the way with 14 points and 14 rebounds. Moses scored 13, and Wayne Paul added 10 points to the Indian cause.

The Tribe played a Western Maryland on Tuesday and hosts King's tonight. They host Wilkes on Saturday before travelling to Houghton (NY) on Monday to finish the season.

The Indians own a 6-14 record, and are 3-11 in the Middle Atlantic Conference.

Freshman Jodi Cox puts this shot in off the glass to help the Indians go on to defeat Messiah. The ladies won all three of their games last week, keeping their play-off hopes alive.

World News Update

by Beth Gallagher

MOSCOW — Soviet President Konstantin Ustinovich Chernenko, 73, died Sunday, March 10, after an extended bout with emphyzema. Chernenko's death marks the third leadership crisis for the Soviet Union in less than three years. Chernenko will be succeeded by Mikhail Gorbachev. At 54 years of age, Gorbachev will be the youngest Soviet leader since Vladimir Lenin who at the age of 47 became the nation's first leader in 1917.

U.S. officials don't expect this leadership shift to have much impact on long-term relations with the Soviet Union. At a time of renewed U.S.-Soviet arms negotiations, the U.S. is hopeful that the talks will proceed as scheduled.

GENEVA — An eighty member U.S. delegation with Max Kampelman as Chief Negotiator was sent to Geneva, Switzerland for the U.S.-Soviet strategic arms talks (START) and the intermediate range nuclear task force talks (INF). These talks, billed as the most complex and as the most radically different of the last twenty-five years, were scheduled to open Tues., March 12. Both sides pronounced support for peace. However, Soviet negotiators linked arms reductions to a ban on Reagan's space-defense plan (Star Wars). Nevertheless, Reagan and U.S. negotiators insist that Star Wars won't be used as a bargaining chip. A closing date for the talks has not been set.

PHOENIX — Controversy was strirred over the transplant of an unauthorized artificial heart to an Arizona man who died after his second human-heart transplant. When Thomas Creighton's donor heart failed early last Wednesday, Dr. Jack G. Copeland transpianted the "Arizona heart," made of plastic and metal, to keep Creighton alive

All Class Night Presents Cartoons

by Kathy Manzella

After much time and much work the long awaited All Class Night weekend is now upon us.

The Master of Ceremonies for the evening will be Admissions Counselor Bob Gielow. The plays are scheduled to begin at 7:30 p.m. in Oller Hall. The doors will be opened at approximately 7:00 p.m.

The theme for the plays will be cartoons. The freshmen class will be doing a spoof of The Little Rascals, while the sophomores have selected The Flinstones. The Juniors have chosen Scooby Doo and The Adams Family as the subject of their plays. The Superheroes will be the subject of the Senior class play.

Immediately following the plays the All Class Night Dance will be held in the Memorial Gymnasium. Round Trip, a rock & roll band from Easton, PA, will perform. The band is expected to play selections from Huey Lewis, Loverboy, Hall & Oates, Sammy Hagar and many others.

Tickets for the dance will be sold in the Ellis Lobby and at the Information Desk. The cost of the tickets is $2.50. No tickets will be sold at the door, so make sure you get yours early.

Bates will perform at Juniata College

Pianist Leon Bates may look like a lineman for the Pittsburgh Steelers, but the avid athlete and body builder is actually one of the busiest touring artists on the concert stage.

The Philadelphia native will be in residence at Juniata College March 19-21 giving workshops and lectures, and performing in concert in Oller Hall March 21 at 8:15 p.m.

Bates began his musical training as a toddler. By the time he was six, Bates was studying with the Viennese pianist Irene Beck at the Settlement School. In high school, he was featured soloist with the All-Philadelphia City Orchestra. He chose to study at Temple University with pianist Natalie Hinderas and under her tutelage, Bates went on to win many competitons including the Philadelphia Orchestra Competition. Later, he appeared in some of the nation's finest concert halls including Lincoln Center, The Kennedy Center and Carnegie Hall.

Bates has enjoyed a busy concert schedule which has taken him to three continents. He has performed with such outstanding ensembles as the Atlanta, Detroit, Denver, Baltimore, Cleveland, Florida and National symphonies, as well as the Alvin Ailey American Dance Theater at the Metropolitan Opera House in New York.

In Europe, Bates has performed with the Dublin Symphony, the Orchestra Sinfonica dell'Accademai Nationale di Santa Cecellia in Rome and the Swiss National Symphony. In 1982, Bates performed with the National Symphony Orchestra of Zimbabwe in four concerts in Bulawayo and Salisbury.

The numerous awards Bates has won include the National Association of Music Teachers Collegiate Artists Competition, the National Association of Negro Musicians Competition, the Symphony of the New World Competition, the Rhode Island International Competition and the National Endowment for the Arts Solo Recitalists Fellowship Grant.

In addition to his concert schedule, Bates is currently a faculty member at the University of Delaware and has taught at the Oberlin Conservatory of Music.

Bates's March 21 concert at Juniata will include selections by Schubert, Ravel, Chopin and Rachmaninoff. The public is cordially invited to attend and tickets may be purchased at the door for five dollars.

Dear Editor,

During the week of February 11, I attended a conference for the College Board in Washington, DC. It seemed ironic to me that a group concerned with the transition that students go through between high school and college should meet in our nation's capital at a time when our president has proposed a budget that would drastically reduce federal funding for programs that assist students attending college. I immediately thought about how such cuts would affect many of Juniata's students, both present and future. It is an issue that we all need to be concerned about.

Our reaction should not just stop at concern. I would like to urge all students, faculty, and administrators to communicate their concerns to their elected congressmen or women. Express to them how these cuts may affect you, Juniata, and America's educational system as a whole. The following are addresses for three of Pennsylvania's congressional representatives:

Senator Arlen Specter

Senator John Heinz

Do not allow the influence that we all have to go unused.

Sincerely,

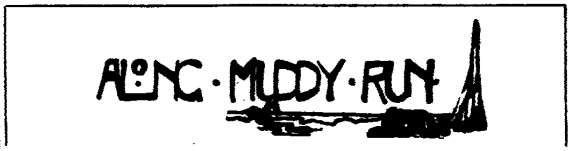
From the Pen of. . . !

by David Orth Moore

How sweet it is! Our nation's congressmen continue to amaze this reporter as news flashed around the nation that the Senate Budget Commitee agreed to a budget freeze for the Defense Department. What's more, the Senate Budget Committee is seeking a $64 billion cut in the 1986 budget instead of the $50 billion proposed by the President. Republican Congressmen recognize the need to decrease America's huge deficit if not for the nation's sake, than certainly for their political careers. Since the president isn't taking the needed realistic and sensitive approach to decreasing the budget deficit, other republicans are stepping in to fill the void.

The democrats, though a weak national party, are extremely influential on the state and local level. Take for example the recent conference of U.S. mayors. At this meeting, these primarily democratic mayors, overwhelmingly condemed President Reagan's budget cuts in social programs arguing that their cities would not be able to fill the hole left if the federal government cuts it's flow of funds to the states. Mayors are adamantly defending social programs as necessary to maintain the social balance which promotes life, liberty, property, and the pursuit of happiness.

The beauty of our bountiful nation is that social programs can be enhanced, student aid increased, and the cultural arts promoted without a corresponding decrease in America's capability to defend itself and the Western Alliance from attack or blackmail by the Soviet Union. A ridiculous supposition and one which receives simplistic press by the media is that the U.S. will lose its bargaining position, vis-a-vis the Soviets, if the Defense Department's budget is frozen. This is supported by facts recently disclosed by the C.I.A. They reported that the Soviet Union spent less on defense in the past four years than the U.S. government. Why must we spend more? So unless this administration is seeking a clandestine military superiority over the Soviet Union, it behooves them to spend less on defense and more on weaving a sturdy thread that unites all Americans in a complete mosaic.



Spring term senior year: The all been waiting for since 1981. College has changed us all; some only subtly, most for better, some for worst. This is a time for reflection and a time to look to the future, but most importantly perhaps, it is a time to have fun.

"So Mark," people ask me, "What's it like being a senior?" This is a silly question. Sure, it's great being a senior, but it isn't much differnt than being, say, a junior. I imagine graduation will be like a birthday; one day you are 18 and the next day you are 19, but you are the same person and nothing has really changed (except you may wake up with a hangover, which is a terrible way to start the next year of your life). There are, however, certain characteristics which set seniors apart.

Being a senior means. . .

..not having to pre-register for next year's classes.

..finally being able to laugh at the tuition increase for next year.

..wondering what became of all those people who didn't make it through our freshman year.

..now summer vacations are a thing of the past.

..turning in the final revision of your POE and knowing that if you were coming back next year you would change it again.

..understanding that course levels (100's, 200's, etc.) say very little about how hard a course is.

..not caring how attractive the prospective female students who visit the campus are, since you won't be here next year anyway.

..wondering what you'd be doing if you'd gone through with those plans to drop out, take a year off, or transfer to another college.

..those loans you've been taking out over the last four years suddenly become more than just other forms turned in at Founder's Hall.

..even though you've been apathetic the last four years, now you can be apathetic without feeling guilty.

..thinking dangerous thoughts like: So what if I don't write this paper? What will it matter in three months anyway?

..never having to say you're sorry (even when you end your column with a cliche).

Review of Eurythmic's "1984"

by April Evans

The Eurythmic's latest album, "1984," is Dave Stewart and Annie Lennox's proposed music score for the movie version of George Orwells famed political parable 1984.

1984 is the story of Winston Smith's plight against the totalitarian state of Oceana (a place once known as England), which is ruled by the mythical Big Brother.

The Eurythmics, with their usual musical originality, create a tone of desolateness, quite appropriate for the subject of one man's destruction at the hands of a totalitarian state. The hardship, loneliness, and oppressiveness comes across in the music. It makes you feel how Winston must have felt in a state where the motto is "War is peach, Slavery is freedom, Ignorance is strength."

The first cut from the album, "I Did It Just The Same," is an unworded piece (it's not instrumental because Annie Lennox does vocalize, although she does not sing actual words), that sounds much like previous recordings by the Eurythmics. It sets the tone for the rest of the album. The prevailing tone is despair.

"Sexcrime" (otherwise entitled "1984") introduced the major ideas and feelings of the album. The feeling of emptiness; of being watched, and the idea of the State's total control over existence, even thoughts (a.k.a. Thoughtcrimes).

"Winston's Diary" was a mournful sounding instrumental that was perhaps meant to communicate Winston's despairing frame of mind. Winston did in fact keep a forbidden diary in which he questioned the State.

"For the Love of Big Brother" was an almost eerie piece about how Winston felt watched constantly, although no one was really there (and in fact it was the telescreen and various spies that were watching him).

"Greetings From a Dead Man" was a sinister instrumental with a pounding beat. It conveyed the feeling of Winston's doom and how he was nothing in the eye of the State. He could be changed by torture to meet their will.

The first song of the second side, "Julia," was about Winston's rejuvenation when he and Julia fall in love. It also has tinges of darkness.

"Doubleplusgood" is a song dealing with the phenomena of Newspeak. Newspeak is the tool the State uses, continually building the Newspeak vocabulary to continually decrease people's ability for thoughtcrime. "Doubleplusgood" also deals with Winston's job which is to change the records to show history and news just the way the State wishes it shown.

"Ministry of Love" is a song about that place called Minilove where those accused of crimes against the State are held prisoner and tortured until their wills are broken and they are just physical beings, doing what the State wishes.

"Room 101" is a song about a room in the ministry of love where the worst fears of the pople who are being tortured are realized. For Winston it is rats.

This album is unique in form and content. It achieves its aim, and I think when the producers of the movie decided not to use the talents of Dave Stewart and Annie Lennox, they lost out on an album that would have enhanced that movie tremendously.

Guest Commentary

Dr. Jay Buchanan

One of the major concerns of college students, and indeed of just about everyone, is the development of meaningful relationships. Whether it takes the form of a best-friend relationship, a roommate relationship, or a more intimate relationship between a male and a female, to name just three, one can be certain that conflict will be part of that relationship. The question is how to deal with the conflict so that it is positive and growth-producing and not negative and counterproductive.

To make the issue of conflict management within relationships even more difficult is the fact that most of us have been socialized to believe in what is called the conflict taboo; that is, that conflict and anger are wrong. But, we also realize that anger is a normal emotion and that conflict is ineveitable within reationships. Oftentimes, the result, because of the conflict taboos, is that anger goes unexpressed, and conflict is avoided at all cost.

Many times we resort to what psychologist Irene Kassorla calls anger "sustitutes" or anger "insteads." Instead of dealing directly with the issues and our emotions, we engage in substitute behaviors which are more socially acceptable than the direct expression of anger.

The anger "insteads" outlined by Kassoria are overeating, boredom, depression, physical illness, and gossip. Let's briefly examine each of these:

- Overeating, or any excessive behavior such as drinking, may be employed as a substitute for the direct expression of anger. The over-indulging behavior serves to temporarily relieve the anger but does nothing to address the real issue.
- Boredom is another anger instead used when individuals fail to deal effectively with their emotions. We may act bored, uninterested, or indifferent to the person with whom we are angry.
- Depression is a third anger "instead." Again, it is more socially acceptable to withdraw than to show anger.
- Physical illness is a fourth anger substitute. Many of the illnesses we experience may be a result of unexpressed anger. Allowing anger to build-up inside oftentimes will contribute to such problems as fatigue, headaches, and back problems.
- The final anger substitute, and probably the one employed most often, is gossip or talking about someone. Instead of telling a person directly what he/she did, we tell others about it.

In the next column we will discuss some ways of dealing effectively with conflict and some definite practices to avoid.

The Juniata Computer Society is composed of about thirty members, and its goal is to expose students to computer-related topics which they cannot learn about in the classroom.

In addition to sponsoring speakers and field trips, the club also sponsors students to join professional computer organizations. From March 21-24, the club's members will travel to Washington, D.C. to visit several companies to view their facilities. On March 29, the Computer Society, in conjunction with the educatin department, is sponsoring a lunch meeting with a speaker. Also, the club spnosors help sessions for computer courses upon the request of the professor.

Meetings are held every Monday night in the Science Center. Any interested individuals are encourage to attend.

Give a Meal for CROP

by Kathy Fantau

Nobody knows how many people in the world are affected by poverty; how many die of starvation. The UN estimated in 1978 that over 12 million children died of hunger. Surely by now those numbers have risen. Even more startling for us today is news of widespread famine in Africa, in Ethiopia in particular. In this year's Meal for CROP to be held Tuesday, March 26, students have the opportunity to share the burden of responsibility for coping with the problem of world hunger.

The idea behind the Meal for CROP is for students to volunteer to give up their evening meal at the College, for which they have already paid. Each student's place in line is then sold to a member of the community and the price of each ticket goes to help feed hungry people around the world. The money from this year's Meal for CROP is targeted for relief in Ethiopia. CROP is an organization that works through Chruch World Service to fund immediate emergency relief as well as long-term self-help projects aimed at relieving the causes of hunger.

In the past, students have been quite willing to give up their evening meal. This year there is an opportunity to participate even more fully in the Meal for CROP by attending a Hunger Awareness Symposium being held in Ellis Mini-Lounge March 26 from 6:00 to 8:00. The symposium is designed to allow people to come and go throughout the two-hour period. It will consist of several short movies, drama, and a time for open discussion.

Dr. Mancur Olson discusses "The Rise and Decline of Nations: Afterthoughts", a topic from his most recent and popular book, in a lectureship held in Alumni Hall.

Dr. Olson Addresses Juniata's Student Body

by Andrea Romano

March 7, Alumni Hall was filled with students, professors, and distinguished guests for the annual Will Judy lecture. This year's speaker was Dr. Mancur Olson, a Distinguished Professor of Economics at the University of Maryland. He has published books on economics, world politics, and the social sciences. His most recent and most popular book is The Rise and Decline of Nations: Economic Growth, Stagflation, and Social Rigidities. In relation to the book, the topic for the evening was the "The Rise and Decline of Nations: Afterthoughts".

Dr. Olson began his speech by stating Judy's reason for sponsoring the lectures. He hoped to reflect his own love for logic and how our thinking is influenced by ideology and prejudice. He said that all people are naturally logical. Olson believes that the rise and decline of nations directly represents the people's ideology. The role of the economic ideology is prevalent in everyday life, therefore, people within nations affect the economy of their country.

Dr. Olson based his discussion on economy in developed countries and how its performance has varied in each of these governments. He stressed the idea of the amount of resources used by the government as the rate of growth for the nation. The larger the role of the government, the slower the rate of growth. He does not agree with it.

His main negative argument was Britain's use of Laissez-faire or "let them do as they please." During this time, Britain suffered from slow growth, but when the policy ceased, the economy continued to decrease. The U.S. at the same time and with the same policy was increasing economically. In the late 19th century, laissez-faire was throughout Europe and the economic performance was very good. After all, the Industrial Revolution was spreading and even developed in Britain.

From World War I to World War II, the U.S. was conservative or part of the right wing, and under this idea, it was prosperous. Here Dr. Olson began to focus on the performance of the economy on the rate of growth of developed nations.

Part of the nation's economic policies is the presence of groups that engage in collective government in a right wing attitude. However, there is a problem of organizations to provide a benefit for companies that involve themselves in collective government or union. It is difficult to raise prices in this situation.

Out of a collective government comes collective action by workers. It is usually a strike by the high social order. When a worker sees too much work in the future, rather than have to do it quickly, he will strike. Other workers will follow so as not to lose produce. When all the organizations for collective action are destroyed, a better economy occurs.

As a conclusion, he stated that common ideologies of the right and left are not sufficient to meet the challenges for the current days.

Rish Names Food Service Director

by Jodie Monge:

Spring changes many aspects of the Juniata campus, from the attitudes of the students to the appearance of the campus. The members of Juniata's staff changed this Spring term in the absence of Norman Gopsill, Food Service Director.

Gopsill's resignation was a result of a mutual agreement between him and Philip R. Bach, the president of the Hallmark Management Service, an independent company that is contracted by Juniata College. Gopsill is currently involved in a career change.

Hallmark has named Christel S. Rish to the position of Food Service Director, replacing Gopsill. She will be responsible for all dining service functions at Juniata, including planning daily menus, purchase of food and other supplies, and the supervision of the food service staff. Rish has been employed at Juniata for the past fourteen years, the last thirteen by Hallmark. In addition to Gopsill's training, Rish credits the excellence of the staff to her successful transition into the director's position. Rish is currently interviewing applicants for a Production Supervisor to be filled as soon as possible.

Rish prefers to think of the food service as a part of Juniata College and not as an independent element. It is important to her to maintain the personal rapport between Hallmark and the Juniata environment, the staff as well as the sutdent employees.

Rish is committed to maintaining, as well as improving, the already excellent food service program to make it the best possible for Juniata College students.

Dr. Morris Judges Court Appointments

The former research assistant to Chief Justice Warren E. Burger discussed future appointments to the U.S. Supreme Court during a lecture at Juniata College Wednesday, March 6.

Dr. Jeffrey Morris, who worked for Chief Justice Burger from 1976-81, spoke on "Who Reagan Should Appoint to the Supreme Court: A View From the Inside," this year's G. Graybill Diehm Lecture in Political Science. The 8:15 p.m. lecture was held in the Ellis Hall faculty lounge.

Morris, who is currently an assistant professor of political science at the University of Pennsylvania, received his J.D. and Ph.D. degrees from Columbia University. He has taught at the City University of New York and served as assistant to the Dean of Columbia University.

During his tenure with Chief Justice Burger, Morris was responsbile for conducting research dealing with the operation of the federal court system. He also served as a clerk for the Chief Justice.

Morris is the author of two books which will be published soon. One deals with the office of the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court while the other is a history of the U.S. Court of Appeals, Second Circuit (New York).

The G. Graybill Diehm Lectureship in Political Science was established in honor of the late G. Graybill Diehm of Lancaster, who served 35 years as a member of the state House of Representatives, Republican County Chairman, state Senator, Chief Clerk of the state Senate and top advisor to state GOP leaders. The lectureship brings to Juniata speakers on such topics as political leadership, governmental operations and procedures on the state and local level, and participation by responsible citizenry.

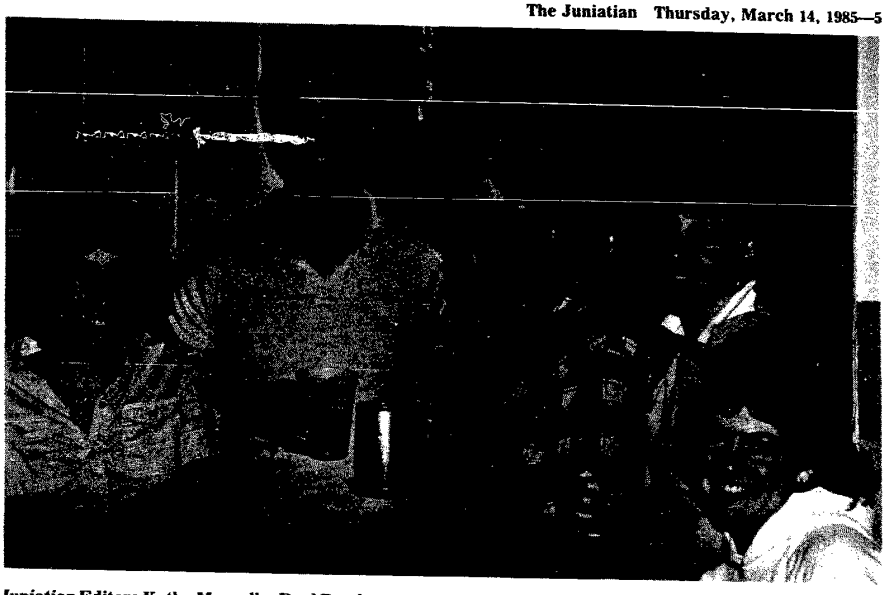
Coffeehouse Format Changed

by Kristina Krohnemann

An important meeting was held by the Coffeehouse Committee with Wayne Justham. The purpose of the meeting, held March 6, was to determine how the rudeness of the crowd towards the performer(s)—loud talking, playing disruptive games, such as dice or "quarters" during the performance, etc.—could be eliminated. Many options were brought up and evaluated: having bouncers with the support of either a Resident Director or a Resident Assistant to distribute warnings to rude individuals, and if the warning is not consented, ask the individual(s) to leave, changing the format completely, increasing the admittance charge, or changing the location of the Coffeehouses to the Ballroom in Ellis.

It was mutually agreed upon to change the Coffeehouse format completely. Coffeehouses will have a different atmosphere. A buffet set-up with different types of hors d'oeuvres, vegetable platters with dips, cheese and crackers, fruit punch and soda will be served. Admittance remains at $2.00 and the Coffeehouses continue to be held in the Catharsis Lounge. Hopefully, changing to a formal atmosphere will have a positive effect on the behavior of the crowd.

This change in format is not permanent. Different approaches and ideas will be explored for future Coffeehouses. Fortunately, those few rude individuals did not cause the termination of the Coffeehouses.



Juniatian Editors Kathy Manzella, Paul Bomberger, Kay Rockefellow, Laurie Rasco, and Beth Gallagher enjoy Juniatian staff party.

Performing Arts Series Planned

The "Summer of '85" performing arts series sponsored by Juniata College in cooperation with the U. S. Army Corps of Engineers, is now in the planning stages for the upcoming season.

Organizers of the annual series are interested in presenting new, capable talent in addition to regular performances from previous years. "We plan this year to present a variety show and an old fashion vaudeville show," said Dr. Howard H. Crouch, "Summer of '85" program director and a professor of education at Juniata.

Crouch asks that persons interested in auditioning for either the variety or vaudeville shows, or separate performances, contact him at the college. "We will need the person's name, address, phone number and a brief description of their act or talent," Crouch added.

The "Summer of '85" will be the ninth annual summer series organized by Juniata College.

Former Juniatian editor, Beth Gallagher transfers her power to current editor Paul Bomberger, with a kiss.

Juniata Conserves For PENELEC Reward

In recognition of energy saving measures used at Juniata College, the Pennsylvania Electric Company (PENELEC) has presented the college with a check for $1,450.

The rebate to Juniata is part of a PENELEC program which rewards consumers for undertaking energy saving measures in their homes and businesses. According to John V. Linetty, director of physical plant at Juniata, the colleg spent some $4,000 on energy saving florescent lights and ballasts. The use of these lights and ballasts reduces the wattage without reducing the amount of light given off.

Linetty added that the college is undertaking other energy saving measures which could result in additional rebates. One measure is the use of miser light bulbs which also reduce wattage without reducing light.

Foreign Cultures Featured In Films

A variety of films, lectures and exhibits have been planned at Juniata College as part of the annual Foreign Language Week observance beginning March 18.

"Voltaire" is the tile of a photography exhibit that will be on display in Shoemaker Galleries March 18-29. The color and black and white photos from the French Cultural Services in New York City deal with the life and times of the famous French philosopher. Included are photos of famous people Voltaire knew, the countries where he traveled and his homes. The exhibit is open weekdays from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Carlos Saura's 1983 film "Carmen" will be hown in Juniata's Oller Hall Tuesday, March 19 at 7:30 p.m. The Spanish language film, with English subtitles, is a sensual and exhilarating contemporary flamenco dance update of Bizet's famous opera. The foreign languages department is presenting the film in cooperation with the Ellis College Center Board.

An English language film from Germany will be shown in Oller Hall at 8 p.m. Sunday, March 24. This will be followed on Monday, March 25 by a slide presentation on Germany set for 4 p.m. in Shoemaker Galleries. On Monday evening at 8:15, a lecture on East and West Germany will be held in the Ellis Hall faculty lounge. These programs have been arranged through Goethe House in New York City and the Consulate General of the Federal Republic of Germany.

All of these activities are open to the public.

AMERICA'S ENERGY IS MINDPOWER

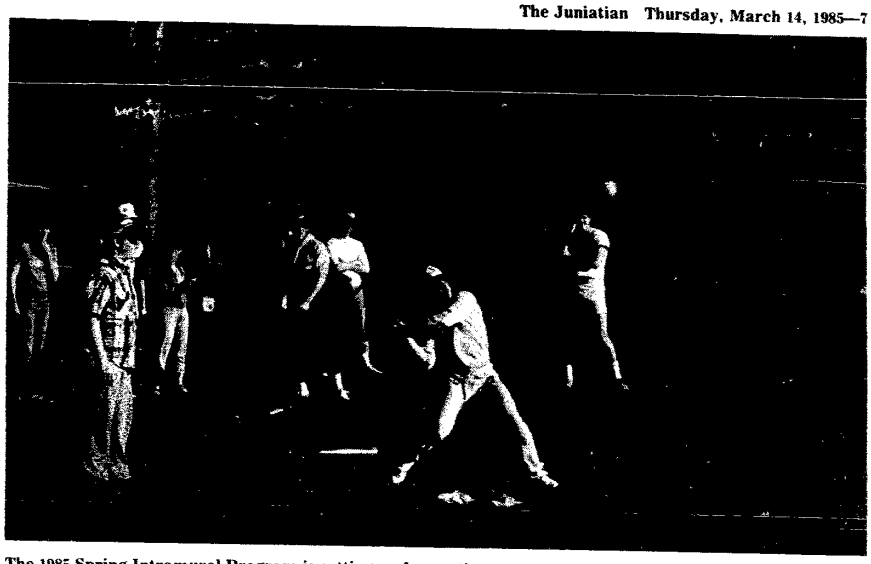
I.M. Program To Begin

By Andrew Hiscock

This spring the Intramural Department has offered seven different sports programs for your enjoyment. Within these seven sports, there are a number of different leagues that are offered. The wide range of choices usually accounts for the popularity that Juniata's Intramural Program has enjoyed in the past. By this time, all team rosters should have been handed in to the I.M. Office, and many teams have already begun practicing for their upcoming seasons, as can be seen by the activity all around campus.

This spring, men's, women's and co-rec softball leagues are offered. League play will begin on March 26th. A men's, women's, and co-rec league will also be offered in Intramural Track, which will hold their meet sometime in May. Intramural Racquetball and Intramural Tennis will be offered to men's doubles, women's doubles, and mixed (co-rec) doubles. I.M. Racquetball will begin play on March 26th. The ever-popular and physical I.M. Gym Hockey will once again be in action this spring with both a men's and a women's league. The I.M. Gym Hockey Program will begin its regular season play on March 20th. Intramural (post season) Basketball will consist of a men's league and a women's league and will begin play on March 12th. To round out the 1985 Spring Intramural Program, Co-Rec Water Polo (inner tube) will be offered. The Water Polo season is slated to begin on March 20th.

Once again, I expect Juniata's Spring Intramural Program to be very popular. As it stands now, I am looking for sports writers for all I.M. sports. If you are interested in writing for the Juniatian, attend the staff meeting held every Tuesday evening at 7:30 p.m. in the Juniatian office . No previous experience is necessary.



The 1985 Spring Intramural Program is setting up for another term of action. A wide variety of sports for both men and women provide everyone an ample opportunity to get out and enjoy themselves.

Volleyball Club To Host Tournament

The Juniata College men's club volleyball team will host a United States Volleyball Association Tournament on Sunday, March 17th. Ten teams from Central and Eastern Pennsylvania will participate in the tournament. The first matches are scheduled for 9 a.m. in the Intramural Gymnasium of the Kennedy Sports & Recreation Center. The JC men's team will play at 9 a.m., noon, 3 p.m., and 6 p.m. Semi-finals are slated for 7 p.m. and finals will follow at 8 p.m.

The novice J.C. men's volleyball club has been improving throughout the season, and is expected to make a good showing this Sunday. The team welcomes all spectators on Sunday. There will be no admission charge.

Golf Team Wants To Pick Up Where They Left Off

By Joe Scialabba

Co-Coaches Dr. Arnie Tilden and Dr. Duane Stroman can count on six returning letterwinners to push for a spot in the opening starting lineup when the Juniata College golf team begins the 1985 season at York, March 26.

The Indians were 3-6 in last year's weather abbreviated season.

Junior Steve Borza of Greensburg, who finished tied for third in last season's Middle Atlantic Conference Tournament, heads the list of returnees. Senior captain Mark Loeper of Reading returns for his fourth season after a consistent 1984 and is expected to hold the number one or two position in the lineup.

Other returning letterwinners are juniors Tom Cancelmo of Radnor, Dave Challenger of Atlanta, Ga., Joe Scialabba of Huntingdon, and Steve West of Carlisle.

"We ended the season on an upnote last year," said Tilden. "Our scores of 401 and 406 against Lycoming and Dickinson, respectively are figures that will be competitive in the MAC. We hope to carry the momentum into this season."

The complete schedule: Mar. 26 at York, Arp. 4, at Dickinson, 15, at Lycoming, 17 SUSQUEHANNA, 18, WESTERN MARYLAND and LOCK HAVEN, 23, ALBRIGHT and WILKES, 25, GETTYSBURG. The Middle Atlantic Conference Play-Offs are scheduled for May 4th and 5th.

The Sports Corner

By Andy Hiscock

We made it!! The winter is fading out of view, and the warm weather of spring is right around the corner. You thought it was hard to get up and go to class on those cold bleak days of winter! Wait until you get up for class and feel the sun calling you to Lake Raystown, or until someone who has already succumbed to the pressure throws you a hackey-sack or a frisbee (football, baseball, chair)..whatever!! Well, many of us fight off the pressures (at least until the weekends or until after class) and participate in one of the many organized Varsity or Intramural Sports offered. We finally get to shed our clothes (most..not all!!) and work off the winter bulge which has built up. For those of you not aware of the different sports that will be going on this spring, I'll give you a quick rundown. Varsity Sports include Men's Baseball, Women's Softball, Men's and Women's Track, Men's Tennis, Women's Tennis, and Men's Golf. Club sports offered include Men's Lacrosse, Women's Lacrosse, Men's Rugby, and Women's Rugby Club. I have listed the spring intramural sports offered in the article at the top of this page. Compared to last year's weather, we should be thankful for the weather we are having now. I'm sure that the baseball team remembers that their first week of regular season games were snowed-out last spring. The Intramural Program was also thrown out the window with all of the missed games due to uncooperating weather conditions. The Intramural Department has not offered I.M. Volleyball. I guess that this is an attempt to get us outside and to get us running around. Maybe they don't want anyone who doesn't have to be in the Sports Center to be near any of the I.M. Gym Hockey games. These games are unbelievable, hilarious, and gruesome all at the same time. Have you ever seen some big guy from the front line of the football team chase around a little soccer guy....AND catch him!!! No offense to any soccer players, because we all know that you are the only people to score. I better stop while I still have a chance. Enjoy the Spring weather while you can!!!!

Ladies Tennis Team Has Bright Outlook

By Joe Scialabba

Coach Nancy Latimore returns three experienced juniors and three sophomores to field a veteran lineup when the Juniata College women's tennis team opens the season against Elizabethtown, March 28.

Junior Leanne Egolf reached the Middle Atlantic Conference tournament quarterfinals last spring, when she was Juniata MVP. Also returning are classmates Ginny Krall and Kim Detwiler.

Sophomore Sue King is back for her second season, along with Marie Rose and Debbie Little.

"We did not develop as much as I would have liked last season because of the weather," said Latimore, whose 1984 squad was a disappointing 1-5. "Hopefully, the match experience will make us a stronger team this spring. We have a very tough schedule, so we'll have to play very good tennis to be competitive in the conference.

Juniata will complete in the Northeast section of the realigned MAC this spring.

The complete schedule: March 28, ELIZABETHTOWN, Apr. 3, DICKINSON, 12, at King's, 13, at Wilkes, 16, LYCOMING, 18, SUSQUEHANNA, 21, SCRANTON, 23 at York, 24, at PSU-Altoona, TBA at Bucknell, May 3-4, MAC's.

OHIO — The most extensive action to affect financial institutions since Black Tuesday occured last Friday when 71 Savings and Loans were closed in Ohio on the orders of Ohio Governor Richard Celeste.

The closings were the result of a run on deposits at a number of thrift institutions throughout the state. The runs came after the failure of Home State Savings Bank of Cincinnati, which was insured under the private Ohio Deposit Guarantee Fund was not federally insured.

Ohio legislators have been asked to approve legislation which would require all privately insured institutions to apply for coverage to the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance before they may re-open. The thrifts may be open in as soon as three days.

Doc Watson, shown here with son Merle, will entertain the Juniata campus as part of this year's Artist Series. This blind folk guitarist, along with his son, will perform in Oller Hall on March 26 at 8:15pm.

Country Musician Plays For Juniata

Pioneering the art of flatpicking fiddle tunes on the guitar is just one of Doc Watson's contributions to the revitalization and growth of American acoustic string music.

When Watson performs in concert March 26 at 8:15 p.m. in Juniata College's Oller Hall, the versatile singer, instrumentalist and storyteller will exhibit the warm stage presence that has thrilled audiences at festivals and concert halls throughout the world. His concerts include the traditional ballads and melodies of Southern Applalachia, mixed with contemporary forms of country music, traditional blues, bluegrass and rockabilly.

The blind musician from Deep Gap, N.C. began picking a homemade banjo at age 11. Watson's father taught him a few songs and urged him to play. As a teenager, Watson played on local radio stations and in 1954, joined the rockabilly band, Jack Williams and the Country Gentlemen.

Watson's career began to climb in the early 60's when he performed in small concerts in New York, Chicago and Los Angeles. In 1971, Watson and several other country musicians, including Roy Acuff and Earl Scruggs, teamed up with the Nitty Gritty Dirt Band to record the classic album, "Will the Circle Be Unbroken," which one reviewer called, "the only triple album I've ever wished were longer." In 1980, Watson recorded an album with Chet Atkins entitled "Reflections."

During his career, Watson has recorded more than 20 albums and has been the recipient of three Grammy Awards, the most recent in 1979 in the Country Instrumental category.

Watson's son, Merle, a fingerstyle and slide guitar specialist, has been performing with his father for 20 years, and 10 years ago, they were joined by bassist T. Michael Colemen. Together, they have gained famed at bluegrass festivals and concerts through the

Give A Meal For Crop

by Andy Murray

Each year, on a designated evening, more than 900 students give up their meal in the Ellis dining room. Their "place in line" is sold to the faculty and community residents. The money is used for hunger relief and agriculture development in areas of need on this continent and around the world.

Plan now to skip dinner, Tuesday, March 26. You can sign up on your hall, at the information desk, or the Campus Ministry Office. It is a unique Juniata idea and probably the only event that you can help out with by "not showing up."

In conjunction with Meal for CROP, there will be two Hunger Symposiums in the Mini-Lounge of Ellis Hall. The Symposiums will include movies, dramas, and the regional director of CROP as a speaker. It lasts from 6:00 to 8:00 and students are welcome to come and go as they please. A complete schedule is posted in Ellis.

Participate in Meal for CROP. It's the "tradition that makes a difference."

The Class Is Back In All Class Night

The Juniatian commends all those who participated on their spectacular performances in All Class Night '85. Each class made a solid effort in making their skit the very best it could be. For a pleasant change, each skit had a plot and quality acting that carried throughout. This made each skit flow smoothly and more entertaining for the audience.

In past years, All Class Nights were more like verbal "shred" shows, which even got malicious and brutal at times. The four skits this year had comical cuts against certain professor, but they didn't come across as offending. The audience responded quite favorably to each class's skit, reinforcing a job well done.

However, along with positive changes come a couple negative changes. This year's emcee and the freshman class did a fine job of balancing the scales. Although the emcee got and "A" for effort, his comical relief provided little relief for the audience. The freshmen showed their inexperience with a fourth place finish. With a year under their belts we can look for vast improvments from them as sophomores.

The Juniatian hopes that All Class Night '85 starts a favorable trend so that next year's skits will be as entertaining.

Last but certainly not least, the Juniatian extends a special congratutalions to the junior class for providing us with the best skit in All Class Night '85.

Road Trips

by Andrew Davis

With spring on the verge of peeking its little green face around the corner, thoughts turn once again, with wholehearted determination, to the road trip, as the reader will surely anticipate. But with spring comes a welcome new dimension to the road trip with which we must concern ourselves here: fishing. Fishing and the road trip go hand in hand and are perhaps better suited for each other than the proverbial hand and glove, for besides complimenting each other, road-trips and fishing provide a purpose for one another.

"Life, Liberty, and the Pursuit of Trout" is how the Declaration of Independence would read if Jefferson had been from Pennsylvania instead of Virginia. It is no secret that Pennsylvania has some of the best trout fishing in the country, with its limestone streams of industrially unspoiled water; a glance through the Spring Fishing section of such publications as Field and Stream and Outdoor Life can usually attest to it.

It is easy for someone such as myself to get excited over Pennsylvania's trout fishing. Where I grew up in New Jersey, the trout fisherman must have an added expertise to his angling, having to be able to masterfully maneuver his bait between truck tires, shopping carts, and rusting coils of cyclone fencing usually present in the stream. There, if he manages to snag an animal which is actually a trout, the fish is invariably of the rainbow variety, not due to it being a species of Rainbow Trout, but rather due to a glossy, slick sheen of petroleum product covering it.

Pennsylvania, however, is another story indeed. The trout are of a differnt breed altogether, high-spirited, voracious fish. I have seen them literally fight and bump each other out of the way in order to get to the bait first. Often, they will simply jump out of the water in an excess of energy to land upon the grassy bank by your feet, making the use of fishing tackle completely unnecessary.

Our school is named after a river; the tributaries of which are superb for trout fishing. No other style of angling approaches an art, a philosophy, even a religion, as much as fly-fishing for trout, and in this respect PA has its share of Zen high-masters. Contrary to popular belief, some of this country's best kept secrets are not found in the Department of Defense or any other Federal agency, but rather, the secrets most valiantly guarded concern certain stretches of certain trout streams in Appalachian Pennsylvania. Hence, I will bypass any information to that effect in this article.

The information I can give you can be found in the PA Fish Commission Regulations, available with the purchase of a license. Fishing licenses cost $12.00 for residents, $20.00 for non-residents, and can be purchased at Murphy Mart and most outdoor supply stores. The regular season for trout starts at 8 a.m. Saturday, April 13 (count the days). A daily limit of 8 trout of mixed species (e.g., Brown, Brook, or Rainbow — min. 7 inches) is permitted on all lakes, ponds, and streams which are not posted or designated as areas with special regulations.

Students Speak

by Jim Merola

Now that beer has been eliminated from the Coffeehouse tradition, do you feel it will cause a drop in attendance?

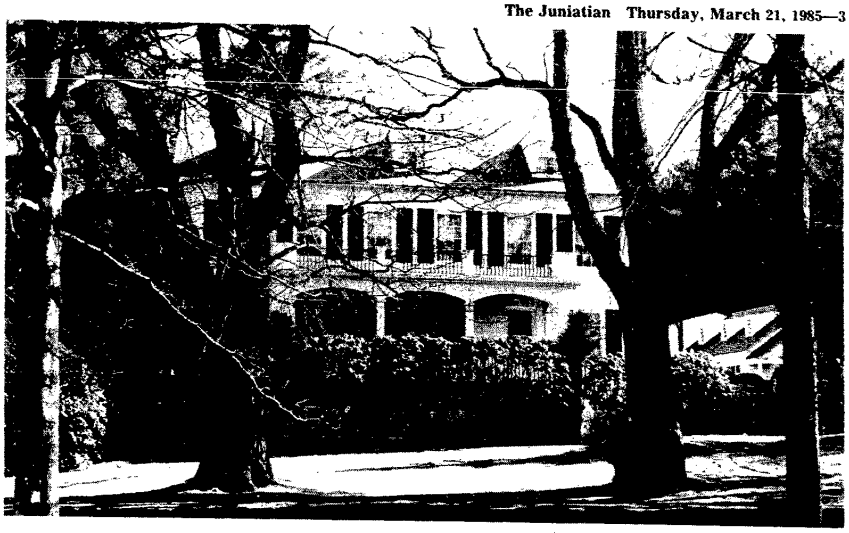
Cindy Cordoro — Sophomore
"Coffeehouses are a chance for students to "let loose" during the week. Taking away alcohol will take away people. Face it, the entertainment isn't always great, but it's beer and a place to hang out. What will banning alcohol accomplish, except to make Max happy?"

Sam Halsey — Sophomore
"Yes, I definitely think it will. Beer is conducive to a pleasurable Coffeehouse environment."

Mike Berkeland — Junior
"I believe that it will have a drastic negative impact on attendance."

Marina Cupper — Sophomore
"I think it will definitely cause a drop in attendance, but people will just find another way to party, for example, having RHA sponsor the event and serve beer."

Property Donated to Juniata College



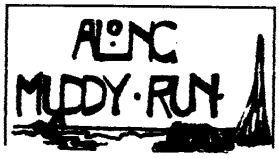
Seventy acres of property in Williamsburg has been donated to Juniata College by the Westvaco Corporation of New York City.

The transaction was announced today by Juniata College President Frederick M. Binder and Donald Clem, manager of Westvaco's Tyrone paper mill, and includes the former Westvaco clubhouse, two other residential structures and a freshwater spring.

In making the announcement, Dr. Binder stressed that the property and facilities will be used for educational programs and conferences. "Juniata College will use the center at Williamsburg for educational programming that will benefit the college, as well as the community of Williamsburg," Dr. Binder said.

The property donation from Westvaco, which operates a mill in Tyrone and a plant in Williamsburg, is the result of several years of discussions between the two parties. "This gift underscores Westvaco's commitment to higher education and we are proud to make this contribution to the college," Clem said.

"Over the years, Williamsburg has sent us many fine students," Dr. Binder noted. "We look forward to developing a close relationship with our neighbors in Williamsburg."



by Mark Royer

Time is running out. With less than a term left at college my future is uncertain. Graduating with a BA degree is certainly an achievement, but I must confess why I really came to Juniata. We've all heard of women who come to college to find husbands (the infamous MRS degree); well, why can't a guy come to college to find a wife? Can't a guy graduate with a bachelor's degree and a wife? That is my goal, I'm looking for a wife—a rich wife preferably, one who can support me in the luxurious lifestyle I have never known.

I'm beginning to panic. I never thought it would come to this. My technique must have been all wrong. I should have known that I would never find the girl of my dreams at the lounge party.

"There I was, on my fifth beer, wobbling back and forth to the tunes of Jammin' Hoe Hiznay, amidst the hot, sweaty mass of drunken people when our eyes met across the dark room. I made my way across the sticky floor . . ." No, this is not the stuff of Harlequin romances, not the story you want to tell your kids when they ask, "Daddy, how did you meet mommy?"

There must be another way to find a wife, maybe this is it, a desperate plea in The Juniatian. Want ads of this sort are becoming more common, especially in large cities where career people have problems meeting compatible partners.

The girl I'm looking for is nice, attractive, athletic, intelligent, and quiet. Likes to travel. Culinary skills a definite plus. Would like one or two children five or ten years from now and a summer home in the mountains. One cat, maybe one dog.

Resumes may be sent to Mark Royer, attn: WIFE, Box 188. All inquiries will be considered, however, girls from New Jersey need not apply. . . . . .

From the Pen of. . . .

An increasing amount of world attention is being drawn to the North-South issues of underdevelopment, along with the once dominant East-West issue of security, tension, and ideology. With the rich Northern nations getting richer, and poor Southern nations getting poorer, the industrialized nations are meeting with the developing nations to discuss new approaches in solving the problems of underdevelopment, famine, drought, and refugee suffering in Africa.

After years of senseless exploitation by the world's industrial giants, combined with the recent famines in Ethiopia, Sudan, Somalia, and now Chad, our affluent industrial societies are awakening to their responsibilities of aiding the 150 million in the sub-Saharan who now suffer from hunger and malnutrition.

The continent of Africa has enough land, manpower, and technological potential to feed itself, so it is an irony that so many are miserable. Because of inefficient capital resources (causing low production of food), a huge population, and the unexpected horrors of drought, famine has necessitated massive temporary relief packages. Western governments have known of the indigenous food production problems in Africa for years, but have only reacted after the media coverage of Ethiopia's devastating famine. Since then, short-term relief packages, while certainly alleviating the immediate effects of famine, have depressed local food prices discouraging farmers' from planting. Additionally, much of the emergency food aid has not reached the most needy due to poor and inefficient transportation systems.

In general, short-term aid must be continually enhanced, but more emphasis must be placed on a program that meets Africa's long-term develoment needs. This is where the industrialized nations can particularly be helpful. The technology of industrialized nations must flow to Africa in such areas as irrigation, research, distribution, storage, and agricultural extension. As African agricultural experts insist, they "don't want to remain dependent on food aid," but want us to "show them how to grow more food."

As the industrialized nations meet in Geneva, under the auspices of the United Nations, to discuss Africa's future in development, we can all help these victims of drought and famine survive another day. Through such respected relief agencies as C.A.R.E., Christian Children's Fund, and Meal for CROP, one can contribute to the noble cause of helping those most needy of compassion and love.

Elections Seat New Officers

by Sherri Reed

Student Government and Center Board elections, held Wednesday, March 20th, will determine the president and vice president of Student Government, as well as the chairperson, vice-chairperson, and secretary of Center Board. All class officers will also be chosen. A new consequence of this year's election will be an expansion of class vice presidents' roles; they will now serve also as class senators and will be expected to attend all biweekly meetings of Student Government. This change of the student constitution is the result of a desire among last year's officers to install further class representation and increase communication between student leaders and students.

Resident Hall Senator elections, normally held prior to room drawing, will this year occur sometime during the first week of May. In past elections, all students voted for all senators. Now students will first be given the chance to know where they will be living next year and will than vote only for the candidates who will be representing their particular residence halls. Both new policies in this year's elections are moves toward a more representative Student Government.

Committee Searches for Input

The Presidential Search Advisory Committee is in the process of submitting to the Board of Trustees two written documents concerning Juniata's mission statement and characteristics for Juniata's next President. The Advisory Committee is comprised of Alumni, Faculty and student representatives.

These documents are an important first step in selecting Juniata's next President. Any relevant student input to aid the Committee is encouraged. Please refer your comments to the two representatives, Jack Thomas Box 1608 and Lynn Forwood Box 1482.

V103 Helps Others

by Shelly Guest

This year, V103 celebrated Valentine's Day in a very different fashion. A fundraiser benefitting the starving people of Ethiopia through CROP was sponsored raising over $100. Students sent in dedications that cost $1.00 each. All dedications were played on Valentine's Day, starting at 6:00 p.m.

The show was billed as "Dedicate Your Heart to Charity" show. Originally scheduled from 6 p.m. to 9 p.m., the show actually went until 11 p.m. due to the enormous amount of dedications received.

Host Dave Peters commented, "I think the show was a huge success. We weren't expecting the response we got. It's great to see so many people willing to give to a good cause." The original idea of V103 playing dedications for money that would go to charity was Mike Wojcik's, and the programming staff of V103 developed and organized the show.

V103 wishes to thank all those who participated. With the tremendous response V103 received this year, it seems this could become an annual event.

JCAA

The Juniata College Admissions Association (JCAA) is a fairly new club which began about three years ago. The organization is under the direct supervision of Corky Surbeck and the admissions staff.

The main activity of the JCAA is to greet incoming freshmen and their parents at open houses. Basically, the JCAA member plays the role of host by answering the visitors' questions and giving a Juniata student's point of view. The next open house is scheduled for March 30. The JCAA also conducts phone campaigns and visits high schools to answer the questions of prospective students.

Currently, the JCAA is in the process of conducting a membership drive. All prospective members must go through an interview process with a counselor and another student. There will be a meeting for all interested students March 27.

Alcohol Education Promoted

by Ginny Krall

April was recently announced as "Alcohol Awareness Month" by Juniata's Committee for Alcohol Studies and Education (CASE).

This student/faculty committee is planning a host of April activities aimmed at educating and informing the student body on alcohol and drug related matters. They are working toward promoting responsible drinking behaviors among Juniata's population.

The first of these programs will begin on March 25th in North's Lounge at 7pm. North Resident Assistant Ken Opipery along with CASE has developed a program consisting of two presentations. Opipery has asked an area lawyer to speak on the legal aspects of alcohol abuse in the first of the two lectures.

CASE plans to flood the Juniata campus in April with all types of verbal, written and posted alcohol knowledge. This information will then be used in the last part of CASE's "Alcohol Awareness Month" plan. On April 30 in Alumni Hall the Spring "Punch Bowl" is scheduled.

Dorm teams of four will compete in this alcohol trivia game for prizes and dorm points. This will be the high light of the whole month and should prove to be informative and enjoyable for everyone involved.

For more information on any of these programs or on the "Punch Bowl", contact the Student Services Office in Founders Hall.

In announcing Dr. Stewart's appointment, Dr. Binder pointed out that the Vice President and Dean of Academic Affairs is a key member of the college administration. "Dr. Stewart's extensive academic and administrative background provides him with the expertise necessary to carry out his duties," Dr. Binder said.

The new Vice President and Dean of Academic Affiars will be working with members of the faculty, administration and student body. "A great deal of time and energy has gone into the selection process," Dr. Binder noted. "I am sure we have selected the best candidate."

Selection Process Begins

by Carol Connell

The selection process for the 1985-86 Resident Assistant Program has begun.

Students interested in becoming R.A.'s submitted thier applications by March 6. Following two Informational Meetings, the applicants attended Group Process Session, preparing them for the next step, Group Interviews.

Held March 16-20, the Group Interviews consisted of the applicant meeting with three R.A.'s and one R.D. During this appointment, the interview team, balanced by their personal strengths, evaluated the students' qualifications.

According to Julie Keehner, Associate Dean of Student Services and Director of Residential Life, the interviewers are not particularly looking for experience. Rather, they seek potential in the applicants. Someone possessing good communication and leadership skills as well as an approachable, mature personality would be the ideal candidate.

The first evaluation notification, narrowing down the applicants, including twelve, current, R.A.'s were made today, March 21.

The remaining applicants then proceed to One-on-One Interviews with Ms. Keehner or Director of Housing, Randy Deike. The final decision for next year's Resident Assistant Staff will be made Thursday, April 4th

ACN Humor Displays Talent and Imagination

by Andrea Romano

Being a freshman, my first impression of All Class Night is sure to be lacking in some areas. I hope to give justice to all classes where justice is due. Each class showed remarkable talent as well as hard work. The skits were done in fine parody of Juniata's social, academic, and administrative aspects. Puns were directed at no other than President Binder, Dean Tilden, and professors.

The first class to perform was the sophomores headed by Scott Stephenson and Brian Achey. the theme was the "Flintstones" with the main character as Fred Binderstone. There is a search for a new president because Binderstone was found with the school's money. Of course, Barney Tilden thought he would become president, but it was not to be. To everyone's surprise, Milloe received the honor. Also to be mentioned is the impressive dancing in which there was much participation. A very good imitation of a prehistoric Billy Idol was given by Todd Ballantyne in his interpretation of "Money, Money". The sophomore class was able to catch the audience's attention and third place.

The second class was the freshmen class who performed "The Little Rascals." Their underlying theme was based on the freshmen surpassing the upperclassmen and administration. Of course, they succeeded in both by first using Darla and the girls to distract the upperclassmen during the Storming of the Arch. Later, they kidnapped President Binder and would only return him if their demands were met. Jay Moreau did a superb job of reading the demands as Buckwheat. Credit should be given to the directors and choregraphers for their fine job and their first shot at "All Class Night".

The Juniors, who captured first place, were outstanding in their performance. Each character was perfectly done to its true personality. Both the hard work and fun that went into the skit was obvious. Their theme was two-fold with the "Adams Family" and "Scooby Doo". The Adams Family hired Scooby to capture the ghost that was haunting the school since the president died. As it turned out, the culprit was Arnie Tilden haunting the college because he thought for sure he would become president when he did not, he scared students away from Juniata into his newly created school. There is not one person who stole the show because every performer did a magnificent job, and this is one of the reasons the juniors came in first place. All members of the cast and crew must be commended.

Lastly, the seniors did their version of the superheroes. Due to the years of experience and time at Juniata, their puns were fantastic and funny. The professors hired the Bat villians to make a potion to persuade the students to study. Luckily the lead character, Batman, caught on and was able to save the students from nerdism. Mark Kirchgasser made a believable Batman. I also must mention that Jeff Meeker gave a truly professional performance as the commissioner. The whole skit was entertaining and gave the juniors a run for their money. They had fun just being on stage, and the audience could sense it. It is fair to say they ended the show and their years at Juniata successfully.

Round Trip Adds To ACN Excitement

by Kathy Manzella

you happened to attend the All ss Night Dance this past Fri-, you experienced the rock 'n sound of Round Trip.

ne could not help moving to the t of this band from Easton, PA. y performed a wide variety of sic including selections from y Lewis, Loverboy, and Robert zard.

he band consists of five mem-s: a lead singer, lead guitarist, e player, keyboard player, and mmer. Lead guitarist Gary son explained that the band has n together for five years. Most the members began playing ther as a "basement band" le in high school.

hree of the band members have structured musical training e two others are self-taught sicians. Keyboard player Kerry l recalled that he was original-orced to take piano lessons at five by his parents. Although thrilled about it at the time, he feels it was well worth it.

iel originally planned to at-college for chemistry, but at ast minute he decided to get an ciates degree in music. "It a decision my parents were appy about, but they learned ccept it. They want to see me g something I enjoy."

ad guitarist Gary Gibson orig-y had taken accordian lessons ix years. Seeing no place for ccordian in a band such as the les, he chose to take guitar ns. Mark Buschi, base player the band, has had musical ing in both clarinet and base. lead singer and drummer for band had no formal music ing.

en asked why they enjoy per-ing, the members all express-ed different reasons for their satisfaction.

Friel explained that performing with the band has been a very positive experience for him. "I never was the type of person to get up in front of people. I was pretty much of an introvert in high school and this was just one thing that brought me out of my shell to become more of an extrovert. By playing in front of people I was forced into it." His poise and self-confidence was very evident as he performed.

Gibson enjoys performing for another reason. He derives satisfaction from the "type of sweet abandon," feeling he experiences while performing. "A lot of frustrations and anxieties can be let lose in the course of two or three hours."

The band members are pleased with the success they have experienced so far, but they expect to go much farther. Friel added that they have just recently begun working on original material. They expect to release an album in the next year or so.

They performed their first original work: "Cinema Sue" here on Friday. The rock song received favorable reactions from many students who attended the dance.

While they were growing up the band members were influenced by a wide range of musicians. Gibson was influenced by Jimi Hendrix, Jimmy Page, and David Bowie. Friel idolized performers such as Keith Emerson and Led Zeppelin when he was younger. Presently he is influenced by more progressive musical groups such as Yes and Genesis. Buschi also admired the Beatles as he was growing up.

The only thing they do not always enjoy is setting up for each performance. Gibson stressed the importance of the stage crew; "they are just as important as the people we employ on the stage." From start to finish, it takes about three hours to set up for a performance.

When questioned about any unusual experiences they have had, Gibson joked: "Things never go wrong. Everything always goes just the way we always planned it."

"So many crazy things happen," added Friel, "especially when you're dealing with people in bars. It's a crazy breed of people. Topped off with alcohol, they come up with strange stuff — too strange to put in print."

Indian Baseball Squad Sweep Doubleheader 2-0, 7-2

Lauralee Snyder

The Juniata Baseball team started its 1985 season by defeating the Green Terrors of Western Maryland last Saturday at home. Winning both games of the doubleheader, the Indians avenged a loss to the Terrors last year in the 1984 MAC final Conference play-off game.

"Saturday's game was the best opening performance I've ever had out of a ball club," said coach Berrier about his team. "We got the clutch hitting when we needed it—it will be the secret to this year's success."

The opening game got off to a slow start with only a few hits and no score through the first four innings. The fifth inning proved to be the key inning, though.

The Juniata defense got out of a two-out/bases loaded situation at the top of the fifth inning without letting Western Maryland score. Bottom of the fifth action gave Juniata the winning edge. Scott Cole's homerun shot into left field on a first pitch fast-ball with a man on first provided the winning score of 2-0.

Junior Rich Howey pitched a fine first game allowing only six hits, no walks, and three strike outs. It was his sixth shut-out for Juniata in his three-year career.

A triple by Jeff Meeker at the bottom of the second started the Indians on their roll to a 7-2 win in the second game. Dave Musser pitched the second game giving up only four hits and three walks, and matching Howey's three strike-outs.

The statistics bragged only one error by the Indians, a total of five stolen bases, a 5 for 6 batting record for Scott Cole and a 1 for 2 record for Dave Crane who also got walked four times.

This afternoon, the Indians face Division I Penn State who has just returned from a spring tour down in Texas. "They already have at least fifteen games under their belt and have been playing in the warm weather, against the top Division I teams in the nation, but we should be able to show them a hard time," said Coach Berrier.

Saturday, the Indians have their first conference game away against Elizabethtown. This will be a crucial game for the Indians on their way up the Conference ladder. The game is a double-header and begins at 1:00 p.m.

Ladies Softball Team Hopes To Find the Right Blend

Coach Bill Latimore, in his fifth season as head coach of the Juniata College women's softball team, will face a tough challenge in 1985.

By successfully blending experienced players with a talented group of freshmen, the Indians should be competitive in the Middle Atlantic Conference. "We have a very young team this year. I'll be looking for leadership from our letterwinners," said Latimore.

Last year's leading hitter, Alison Kellock, returns to the Indian lineup along with outfielder Sue Mitchell, and pitchers Holly Snyder and Cathy Bednarczyk.

Several freshmen will step into starting roles when the 1985 campaign opens. Freshmen Lisa Gray and Melissa Wright will be counted on heavily this year. "I'm really excited about these two athletes," added Latimore. Lisa Gray was the starting catcher on last year's state championship team, and Wright, from Tussey Mountain, has been the local area batting champ for four consecutive years. Newcomer Janet Robison will also be an exciting player to watch. "Janet is a transfer student who has tremendous capabilities as an athlete," said Latimore.

The 1985 squad should improve throughout the season. "As players gain more experience at the collegiate level, we will continue to improve," Latimore added.

Last year, the Lady Indians finished 6-8 but lost five games by one run. "Hopefully we will be able to get the big hits when we need them," he stated.

Latimore hopes to improve the team's overall quickness and total offensive capabilities. "Our success will depend on the playing experience our freshmen get in the pre-season."

Ther Tribe opens thier season on March 23, on the road vs. Elizabethtown. The Complete schedule: March 23, at ELizabethtown; 27, at Gettysburg; 30, FRANKLIN & MARSHALL; April 2, YORK; 13, at Dickinson; 17, at Susquehanna; 20, WILKES; 25, at Lebanon Valley; 27, at Messiah. World News Update

by Beth Gallagher

WASHINGTON — The battle over the MX missile purchase shifted to the House this week after last week's 55-45 Senate approval. House members will first vote on authorization to purchase 21 more MX missiles, a move that President Reagan claims will strengthen U.S. positioning in the arms talks with the Soviets. The second vote, on Thursday, concerns the release of the $1.5 billion for the missiles. About 25 representatives remain uncommitted, leaving many to belief the vote margin will be narrow in the Democratic-dominated House.

SOUTH AFRICA — Outbreaks of violence plagued Uitenhage, South Africa following the police slaughter of 19 blacks walking in a funeral procession. Thirty-five thousand blacks mourned the latest victims of the riots in a five-hour funeral, the largest ever recorded in the region. On the home front, President Reagan supported the policy of "constructive engagement" which emphasizes private diplomacy toward South Africa as opposed to public threats.

The violence in South Africa dates back to 1948, when the National party came to power and instituted strict segregation of the blacks from whites. Since that time, South Africa, whose government is ruled by whites but whose population is only 17% white, has hosted numerous clashes and riots.

OHIO — The 70 Ohio savings and loans closed down by Ohio Governor Richard Celeste were scheduled for opening on Monday. The savings and loans were closed following the failure of the Home State Savings Bank which was not Federally insured. Of the forty-nine savings and loans that opened Saturday, only four needed to borrow funds from the Federal Reserve. The Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation granted insurance

Cheating Problem Unveiled In Recent Student Survey

by Jennifer Nicholson

Student Government recently received the results of an extensive survey on campus cheating. Of the four hundred students polled, fifty-three percent have seen cheating take place. Additionally, thirty-five percent of those who have witnessed cheating have seen it occur more than once. Only nine percent of those who have seen it have reported it.

Forty-five percent of the students were not aware of what the college's policy on cheating is. Although cheating was reported in every department, the highest frequency in cheating appeared in the chemistry, biology, business, sociology, and psychology departments. Most of the cheating took the form of looking on another's paper or using cheat sheets.

The Student Government, under the direction of President Glen Bouder, held a joint meeting with the faculty Tuesday, March 19, to discuss the results of the survey. It was agreed that cheating has become a problem that professors and students need to be more

Financial Aid Proposals Outlined At Convocation

President Reagan's proposed cuts in federal support to financial aid for college students will be on the subject of a special convocation Monday, April 1 at 1 and 7 p.m. in Oller Hall.

President Frederick M. Binder and Larry Bock, director of financial aid, will address the convocation, outlining President Reagan's proposals, answering questions on their impact on students and the college, and discussing steps the college is planning to take to maintain the affordability of Juniata. An open letter to students from Dr. Binder concerning financial aid is printed in this week's issue The Juniatian.

Also participating in the convocation will be student government representative Kelly Bauer, outlining the letter writing campaign organized on campus. To assist with the process, Kenneth M. Kornick, director of college advancement, will provide students with suggestions on writing an effective letter to members of Congress.

In order to accommodate student and faculty schedules, the special convocation will be held at 1 p.m. and again at 7 p.m. All students and faculty are urged to attend one of these sessions.

Push For Our Financial Aid

The Juniatian wants to make the entire student body and faculty aware of President Reagan's proposed cuts in financial aid for college students. This is a matter which effects each student on campus.

Juniata President Frederick M. Binder has submitted a very important letter to the Juniatian this week outlining our financial aid status. The Juniatian feels this is an issue of utmost importance. Therefore, I will reiterate some of the important points in Dr. Binder's letter.

President Reagan's proposed financial aid package is presently under scrutiny by the Congress. So far we are optimistic at the Congressional resistance to Reagan's proposals.

The financial aid proposals which Reagan has drawn up would go into effect in 1986-87 and not in the 1985-86 academic year.

Dr. Binder and Larry Bock, director of financial aid are planning a convocation on Monday, April 1 at 1 and 7 p.m. in Oller Hall. Questions on the impact of Reagan's proposals and steps in being able to afford Juniata will be answered.

Student government representative, Kelly Bauer will explain the letter writing campaign designed to help us influence our state legislators. Kenneth M. Kornick, director of college advancement will give students suggestions on writing effective letters to their Congressmen.

The Juniatian strongly urges all faculty and students to attend this financial aid convocation on Monday, April 1.

Letters to the Editor

Dear Editor,

Most of you have heard or read about President Reagan's proposals to cut federal support to financial aid for college students. I suspect you have many questions relative to the impact this will have on you and your capacity to finance a Juniata education. Hopefully, this letter will address some of your concerns.

First, it's important to understand that President Reagan's fiscal plans are subject to Congressional review. During his first term, policies which were finally enacted differed significantly from initial administrative proposals. We are encouraged by what we hear from Washington regarding Congressional resistance to the President's recent budget submission.

Second, the changes proposed in federal support of higher education are generally to take place in academic year 1986-87 and not in 1985-86.

Third, our Financial Aid Director, Mr. Bock, is planning a convocation on Monday, April 1, at 1:00 p.m. in Oller Hall. He will be prepared to make a more detailed presentation on what to expect in federal aid and to answer your questions.

Fourth, your Student Government is developing a letter writing campaign designed to help you influence your legislators. For more information on this project, contact your senator.

Fifth, to maintain the affordability of Juniata to our students, the College is increasing its allocation for aid approximately 25%. Specific changes will include and increase in student assistant wages from $3.35 per hour to $3.70 per hour and further limits on maximum earning for eligible work-study recipeints may increase progressively with each academic year as follows:

If you have any questions pertaining to this topic, I would hope that you would feel free to visit Mr. Bock or myself.

Sincerely yours,
Frederick M. Binder
President

Students Speak

by Jim Merola and Mike Berkeland

Question: The current president, Dr. Fred Binder is retiring with the class of '86. Do you feel we should replace the president with a person from within or seek a qualified replacement outside the Juniata ranks?

Beth Pierie '85 — Juniata should promote from within because this person will be familiar with the organization and structure of the college; and possibly have a better rapport with faculty, administration and students.

Kary Larrick '88 — The best qualified should be first priority. But an outside person would at least have the potential to bring new ideas.

Joel Starr '85 —Seek an outside person. The school needs new ideas and concepts. People within Juniata tend to have a preconceived notion about how things should be run.

Steve Lecrone '86 — Go with someone from within the college because they would be more familiar with the current system.

Ken Kramer '86 — Someone within will be more familiar with the goals of the college and how the people and the different characteristics of the organizational structure of the college.

President Reagan's emphasis on returning much of the federal governments responsibility to the state is contrary to the concept of a federal government as envisioned by the framers of the constitution in 1787. This constitutional principle created a strong and energetic national government to led the nation's resources for their best possible use. Seventy-five percent of our nation's finest resources live in America's urban centers. Through President Reagan's aim of eliminating revenue sharing, Urban Development Action Grants, and infrastructure subsidies, the President is leading the nation away from the federal system which meets the needs of our union, to a sort of confederation where cities are at the mercy of their cut throat states.

Both governors and mayors insist that the state could not fill the money void if federal funds were eliminated. And, some states have a budget surplus. Many mayors expect no help from their states to make up this dollar gap. If President Reagan's proposal passed Congress, a huge majority of mayors said they would be forced to cut mass transit, police and fire-fighting services, along with many other general social services.

Make no mistake about it, President Reagan is sacrificing America's domestic needs for an unprecedented build-up of the defense establishment. New employment statisitcs show that the unemployment gap between whites and blacks is growing. Unemployed blacks, the majority who occupy the cities that are targeted for the largest budget cuts, are precisely those Americans the government could aid in finding employment through redevelopment schemes to stimulate economic growth in the inner city.

While petulantly demanding that the federal government has no revenue to spend on the states, the President shares an exorbitant amount of our taxes on defense. A case in point is, of course, the MX missile. This missile is wholly impractical since it is immobile. Thus, it is vulnerable and potentially destabilizing in a crisis situation, and it is terribly expensive. All the while, President Reagan has vehemently lobbied for the MX on the grounds that by continually funding its development, America's current bargaining position on arms control with the Soviet Union will be enhanced. If the MX is not approved in Congress, and only the Senate has approved its funds, what rationale will that give President Reagan in conducting serious negotiations with the Soviet Union? In fact, isn't President Reagan, by placing the success of a meaningful arms agreement at the outcome of this missile system, undermining America's bargaining position, and opening the door for another failure in the arms control process?

While the MX is a waste of money, President Reagan's continued emphasis on the Strategic Defense Initiative creates another kind of controversy. Although not indulging SDI with the funds MX may get, the President is feeding SDI with the same ideological hype that might undermine the Geneva talks. President Reagan must stop his exuberant rhetoric about the potential of this "star wars." No one knows how the technologies will evolve in the course of research and development, but the way the President talks about this strategy of making nuclear weapons obsolete goes beyond the scope of what is being done in practice. Such rhetoric only serves to provoke the Soviet Union and to confuse Western Europe thus, weakening the arms control process.

Being a college senior I should have learned to deal with an empty mail box long ago. But instead I remained optimistic day after day, always hoping for something (even a blue envelope) telling me I had not been forgotten.

Then it started. Slowly at first, one or two a week, until I came to expect them, to look for them. Then they began to overwhelm me—no, not resumes from prospective wives—but credit card applications. The list reads like a corporate "Who's Who in America": Amoco, Texaco, Sears, Montgomery Ward, Mobil, JCPenny, and on and on. What do these people want? My money, of course. What do they care if I'm $10,000 in debt already, have a POE creatively titled "Natural Science and Writing", and am not actively seeking employment after graduation?

Texaco tells me that "As a college senior, you have demonstrated that you are capable of handling the additional responsibilities associated with the establishment of credit." This statement is not only wordy, but also presumptuous, or maybe they don't know the college seniors I know.

We must be careful though, of these gracious offers and friendly people: "Dear Mark, My name is Vernon Kenny. You don't know me but I have two surprises for you." Oh goody, I love surprises. Of course the first surprise is a Montgomery Ward credit card. But there is danger in all this. It's a trap, this plastic money, just like college loans were.

You go to college for four years and come out a lot smarter (theoretically) and a lot poorer (realistically). And since you have $5,000 or $10,000 in loans you have to get a job right away. By the time you are "out of the hole," you are entrenched in some career with a wife and a family and a house. You are 30 years old and thinking of all the things you wanted to do but never had the time or money.

This is what society expects from us; high school, college, work, work, work, retire. Credit cards help us continue our personal cycles of debt, going around and around all our lives, chasing our tails in the rat race.

So this is a warning. Not to avoid credit cards—after all, who can pass up those free six-packs in Ellis lobby—but to think about what you want out of life, and if you can buy it at Sears or Montgomery Ward.

Auto Club

Are you proud of your car? The Juniata College Auto Club is sponsoring a car show Saturday April 20th. The day promises a wide variety of automobiles to inspect as well as a course on car reconditioning. Any one can enter. Sign ups will be in Ellis lobby between April 16th and 19th. No entry fee will be charged.

The Auto Club will also be sponsoring a Road Rally on Saturday April 27th. The rally will be open to all JC students and the surrounding community. This is not a test of speed. It is a test of both the driver's and the navigator's direction following ability.

Admissions Open House

by Jennifer Nicholson

The Admissions Open House will be sponsoring an Open House on Saturday, March 30. The Open House consists of a variety of activities designed to acquaint family, friends, and perspective students with the Juniata community.

The day will begin at 9:30 a.m. with registration in the Main Lobby of the Kennedy Sports and Recreation Center. A Department and Activities Fair will be held from 9:30-10:30 a.m. in Mezzanine, Kennedy Sports and Recreation Center to give information to answer any questions concerning the college's academic departments and extracurricular activities.

Campus tours will begin at 10:30 a.m., leaving from the Sports Center's Main Lobby. President Frederick M. Binder will give a welcoming address in Alumni Hall at 11:30 a.m. His address will be followed by Student Perspectives: Current students speaking on the topic "What Makes Juniata Special." The Juniata tourists will then be treated to lunch in Baker Refectory as guests of the college.

Guest Commentary

Dr. Jay Buchanan

by Jay Buchanan

In the last article we talked about the inevitability of conflict in our relationships with others. Unfortunately many of us expend more time and energy trying to avoid it than we do in seeking constructive resolution. This is the case perhaps because most of us really don't know how to deal effectively with conflict and, as importantly, how to communicate our anger.

In addition to using the anger insteads (overeating, boredom, depression, physical illness, and gossip), we engage in other passive-aggressive behaviors to avoid direct conflict. Sarcasm is an example of passive-aggressive behavior because its use is an indirect expression of anger.

How can we learn to deal more constructively with anger and conflict? Put another way, how can we learn to "fight" productively and not destructively? Social scientists George Bach and Peter Wyden offer some guidelines to achieve this end.

First, they suggest that individuals learn to level with each other. Leveling is telling the other person how you feel. It is being as candid as possible but also as tactful as possible. In the process of leveling, we want to be careful not to purposely hurt the other person.

Leveling helps to arrive at compromise and not accomodation. To placate or appease is not the same as arriving at a mutually acceptable resolution.

Secondly, Bach and Wyden suggest the use of "I"-statements rather than "you"- and "why"-statements. In most cases, the you-and why-statements are perceived as attacks, while I-statements are perceived as an attempt to recognize and communicate feelings. ("I feel angry" rather than "Why do you make me angry" or "You make me angry.") Since we don't want to put the other person on the defensive, using an "I" statement is much less threatening and more conducive to resolution.

Consider the following situation. John comes back to his room late one evening to find that his roommate has decided to have a party. John immediately jumps on his roommate and says "Why are you doing this to me. You know I have an important exam tomorrow. You really aren't a very considerate person." As a result, John's roommate feels attacked and goes on the defensive. John leaves the room in a huff and spends the night with a friend.

John could have said something like "I know you like to party and half the room belongs to you, but I do feel you could have remembered the important exam I have tomorrow. I'm tired and would like to go to bed."

At that point the roommate probably would have moved the party to another room and John could have gone to bed.

A third guideline to more productive fighting involves feedback. Remember that communication consists of a sender, a message, and a receiver. In giving feedback, the receiver repeats the message in his/her own words so that it is clearly understood.

Van Halen fans are doing a double take over lead singer David Lee Roth's new solo album. "Crazy From the Heat" can best be described as a mix of blues, traditional rock, big band, Broadway, and dance music, all flaunting Roth's musical versatility and humor.

The five song Lp opens with the Beach Boys' classic hit "California Girls." Backed by the Beach Boys themselves, Roth adds a few whoops and hollers to the song, putting the song on the Top 40 charts once again. As you listen to the album's second song, you may find yourself tempted to check the label to make sure this is really David Lee. Slowing down to a sultry, relaxing beat, the song "Coconut Grove" is a mellow contrast to the usual lusty, gut-wrenching vocals Roth is famous for.

The final three songs on the album—"Easy Street" (arranged by Dan Hartman), "Just a Gigolo," and "I Ain't Got Nobody"—are bluesy, jazzy, kick-line tunes done much in the style of Leon Redbone.

Produced by Ted Templeman, "Crazy from the Heat" may not please all hard-core Van Halen followers, but it is a refreshing work of art for the ears.

Bates Culminates Three-day Residency at Piano Concert

by Carol M. Connell

An exceptional display of virtuosity was presented Thursday, March 21 as Leon Bates, pianist, performed at Juniata College in Oller Hall. The culmination of a three day residency, Bates appeared through the invitation of the Fine Arts Committee.

Opening his program with Two Impromptus, E flat and A flat, Opus 90 by Franz Schubert, Bates established himself as a performer with confidence, clarity and accuracy. Bates also triumphed over what he called technically and musically "demanding"works, offering fresh approaches to repeated text.

Contrasting the Romantic era, Bates presented Maurice Ravel's Impressionistic work, Miroirs. This five-part composition, comprised of hand crossings and thick texture, began with Noctuelles, the night moths. Characterized by a descending arpeggio, it was followed by Oiseaux triste, (sad birds) a work that Bates believes catches up the audience in its repeated note motive. Bates' favorite of the group, Une Baroque sur l'ocean exemplified the pianist's view on the creative license permitted in Impressionism. A representational work, depicting a boat on a stormy ocean, this employed tonal exploration to symbolize waves.

More often heard in its orchestral setting, Alborado del Gracioso was marked by lively rhythmic pattern, precisely performed by Bates. La vallee des cloches, (the valley and the bells), concluded this beautiful compostion with an echo-like decrescendo.

After a brief intermission, Leon Bates returned to perform Chopin's Bacarolle in F sharp major, Opus 60. Possessing the characteristically "beautiful melodies" of the composer, this idiomatically designed piece employed traditionally master pianistic techniques. A physical and emotional artist, Bates performed this work with great attention to form and dynamics.

Continuing in the Romantic genre, Bates plunged into Serge Rachmaninoff's Sonata #2 in B flat minor, Op. 36. Presenting the original score of 1913, which he feels is the most emotionally complete, Bates began with the powerful Allegro Agitato.

This movement containing latent and unleashed strength was sharply contrasted by the second, Non Allegro. In this lyrical, calmer section, Bates demonstrated his ability of exact timing resulting in intense emotion.

A cyclic return to the emotional setting of the opening completed the compositions with Allegro molto. This final exhibition of Bates' talent of making of the melody evident over a thick texture was greeted with a standing ovation by the impressed audience.

Brahms' Intermezzo in D flat minor, served as a brief encore to the concert, once more displaying Leon Bates' personal exquisite style.

Pianist, Leon Bates put on an exceptional performance in Oller Hall last Thursday night. His concert concluded his three-day residency at Juniata College.

'86 Spring Break Shortened

by Andrea Romano

Next year will bring about a change in Juniata's schedule. Due to a survey given by Student Government, there will be a change in the Spring Term. Instead of a ten day Easter break, it will be only four days with students leaving on Holy Thursday and coming back on Easter Monday. Hence, they will finish the year several days earlier. This seemed to be the popular consensus as a result of the survey. The Student Government made the final decision.

This small change is just a preparation for the bigger change yet to come in the '86-87 year. Of course many students will still have qualms over the small change, but the majority of students agreed to it. We will have to see how it works out next year.

J.C. Dining Adds Brindle To Staff

by Kathy Manzella

The Juniata College Dining Service has announced the appointment of Merlin Brindle for the position of Production Supervisor.

Brindle, a resident of nearby Mapleton, had previously worked in food service management with the National Guard. His experience with the National Guard has been helpful in his new position at Juniata. So far he has found the food service workers to be very helpful and pleasant to work with.

Newly appointed Food Service Director, Christel S. Rish is pleased to have Brindle as part of the staff. She hopes that the students will take initiative to get to know him. "I would like the students to introduce themselves to Merlin. They will find that he is easy to talk to and will help in any possible way."

John Jones Appointed Controller

Juniata College President Frederick M. Binder has announced the appointment of John D. Jones as the college's controller.

Originally from Dayton and Vandalia, Ohio, Jones comes to Juniata from Miami University of Ohio where he served as budget analyst since November, 1979. He also served the university as grants coordinator in 1978-79. Prior to 1978, Jones was a tax examiner for the Internal Revenue Service and an auditor for the accounting form of Deloitte, Haskins and Sells in Dayton.

Jones received his B.S. degree, magna cum laude and his M.B.A. degree from Miami University where he was a member of Beta Gamma Sigma and Beta Alpha Psi, honorary fraternities. He is a Certified Public Accountant in Ohio.

As Juniata's controller, Jones will have operational responsibility for general accounting, non-student payroll, accounts receivable/payable, purchasing, budgeting, financial statement preparation and bookstore functions.

Campus Spotlight

Dr. Donald J. Mitchell

by Elizabeth Radcliffe

The Juniatian would like to introduce you to the professors of Juniata. Each week we will feature a new and interesting professor. This week's feature professor is Dr. Donald J. Mitchell, Professor of Chemistry.

The "infamous doodler" is back. Returning from his sabbatical last year at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst in the Department of Polymer Science and Engineering, Dr. Mitchell completed studies on methods fo extruding a polymer in a solid state.

Dr. Mitchell has been a professor in the Chemistry department for the past 18 years. He enjoys teaching at Juniata because he feels "there is more emphasis at the undergraduate level for teaching rather than publishing." Having taught here under the term system he is very apprehesive about changing to a semester system. He feels the "term system is much better because it allows for more flexibility and programming than the semester system does." Mitchell also hopes to see "the academic needs have as high a priority as the administration needs."

A native of New Castle, Pennsylvania, Dr. Mitchell resides in Huntingdon with his wife and two children. He pursued his interest in Chemistry from high school to Westminster College and then completed his doctorate at Vanderbilt University in Physical Chemistry. He now spends his spare time investing in stocks, reading up on economics, and spending time with his family. For the future, Dr. Mitchell would like to see "Juniata College pursuing the traits of excellent organizations as portrayed in the book Search of Excellence.

"Hold your tray real still and I bet we can get your lunch to jump back over."

World Affairs Lecture Series Hosts Dr. William Zartman

Juniata College's World Affairs Lecture Series continues Wednesday, March 27 with a presentation on political stability in West Africa.

Dr. I. William Zartman, director of the African Studies Program at the John Hopkins University, spoke on "State Building and State Collapse in West Africa" at 8:15 p.m. in the college's Shoemaker Galleries.

Dr. Zartman, who also is a professor at the John Hopkins School of Advanced International Studies, received his M.A. degree from the John Hopkins University and his Ph.D. from Yale University. He also holds a diploma from the University of Copenhagen where he studied as a Fulbright Scholar.

A member of the John Hopkins faculty since 1980, Dr. Zartmen has taught at Yale, the University of South Carolina and New York University. In 1979-80, he was a visiting professor at the American University in Cairo. In addition, he has served as a consultant to the U.S. Department of State since 1961.

Considered an expert in African affairs, Dr. Zartman has been the recipient of research grants from the Rockefeller Foundation, Social Science Research Council, National Science Foundation, National Endowment for the Humanities and the Center for International Studies.

Dr. Zartman is the author of eight books and has co-authored or edited 40 additional publications. His numerous articles have appeared in dozens of publications.

Currently president of the American Institute of Maghrib Studies, Dr. Zartmen is a member of the Council on Foreign Relations and past president of the Middle East Studies Association.

Splash To Be Shown March 29

Splash, to be shown March 29 in Oller Hall, is a simplistic, heartwarming, and romantic comedy. Newcomer Tom Hanks (Bosom Buddies), co-stars as the lonely, average New York shipping company worker whos is rescued after a boating accident by a beautiful and elusive mermaid played by Darryl Hannah. Madison, naming herself after the avenue, sports land legs to search for her true love, Hanks, in the Big Apple. The Cape Cod mermaid, understandably vague about how human beings comport themselves in New York, fortunately is a quick learner. Despite this, she still finds herself in some compromising situations of everyday life. Madison must conceal her identity, not only from the man of her dreams, but also from the snooping scientist on her tail. The movie closes with a lively chase scene and dramatic ending.

Splash, delightfully supported by John Candy (Hank's beer guzzling, women-chasing, narcissistic brother) and Eugene Levy (the scientist), and directed by Ron Howard of the television series Happy Days is truly an entertaining film with fairy tale charm.

'85 Raft Regatta Plans Underway

by Sherri Reed

An organizational raft regatta committee meeting was held in Alumni Hall Wednesday, March 20th. At the meeting, chairman Matt Siegel and Dave Peters disclosed their desire for more people to attend future raft regatta meetings and also discussed some details on this year's regatta.

The date is set for Saturday, May 12th; the rain date is the 18th. The route will not be shortened, and guests will be permitted if registered with students. Launching will begin at 11:00 instead of 12:00 as in past years, and rafts will be registerted by spray-painted numbers.

A few disciplinary changes are being considered. Raft captains will be given more responsibility. If someone climbs off a raft to damage another raft, both that person and his captain will face the same punishment. There will be at least two captains meetings before raft regatta. Also, Dean Tilen wants R.D.s to go down the river officially instead of socially. Another idea being worked on is a keg return system with all three beer distributors in Huntingdon. This measure is to eliminate the use of hard liquor by making kegs more easily disposable. A complete list of rules will be published in the Juniatian at a later date. Student behavior must go well this year, or raft regattas may no longer exist.

Out & About

by Paul Bomberger

If you enjoy eleghant French and American cuisine or just the chance to dine by candlelight in a romantic setting, Toftrees is for you. Take Route 26 North to State College, then Route 322 West to Toftress, Le Papillon restaurant.

Three important things to remember if you intend to road trip to Toftrees. Don't forget to make dinner reservations at least two days in advance. Don't forget to carry a loaded wallet with you. Lastly, take your French interpreter with you to read the menu.

Actually, the dinner prices range from $10.95 for chicken breast to $19.95 for filet mignon and seafood (surf and turf), which is not outrageous by any means. The excellet and careful preparation of your entree to your liking makes the food well-worth the money.

I chose Fettucini Del Giorno as my appetizer. It was baked in a creamy cheese sauce and garnished with garlic. Although I didn't know exactly what Fettucini Del Giorno was when I ordered, it turned out to be delicious. Due to the exteme variety of dinner selections, I had difficulty deciding what I was most hungry for. I finally ordered the Prime Rib Au Jus cooked medium well. My date order Coquille St. Jacques. This was a seafood dish containing baked crabmeat, scallops and shrimp.

As we waited for our dinner we were serenaded by a folk guitarist. The candlelit dining room had a large fireplace in the center which made a peaceful and romanic atmosphere. Four hand-sewn tapestries hung from the ceiling at the entrance to the dining room. These were sewn by an oriental woman and shipped to Toftrees. Various paintings of modern art hung around the dining room. The large bay window on the west side of the dining room afforded a view of the dark night sky. Since it was raining, the sky left much to be desired.

In about a half hour, our Italian waiter, Vinnie served our dinners. My prime rib was juicy and tender. My date's seafood was as succulent as my prime rib.

After finishing our dinner, we checked out the dessert menu, which was loaded with scrumptious delights such as Haagen-Dasz ice cream, chocolate mousse and homemade cheesecake. Unfortunately, we were both so full that we had no room for dessert.

On our way out, our host inquired where we were from. When we said Juniata College, he grinned. Then he said, "I'm a 1976 Juniata graduate." The three of us chatted about Juniata then and Juniata now. Our evening at Toftrees concluded with a grand tour of the corporate club.

It certainly is a small world.

aware of. Among other things, it has been suggested that professors change the nature of some of their "blue book" tests and refrain from giving the same tests every term. The faculty will also be reviewing the school's cheating policy as it is presented in the faculty handbook.

Next year's Pathfinder will include the cheating policy of the college so that students will have access to the specifics of the policy. In addition, it was suggested that an academic judicial board be formed in the future to handle student academic violations.

Each department head will receive a summary of the survey's results, particulary the results from his/her department so that visible action will be taken to the extent that it is needed in each department.

Battle to Keep Computers Out of College Bookstores

With secrecy befitting arms negotiations, folks from Apple Computers are negotiating to sell computers through the University of Colorado's bookstore.

Apple and CU officials won't comment on the talks, which one source says should make Apple products much cheaper for CU students soon.

"One doesn't comment on negotiations when one's negotiating," says bookstore director Bill Minney.

More importantly, neither side wants to re-ignite a spreading nationwide war between colleges getting into the computer business and the retail computer shops that serve college towns.

The struggle for the student dollar already has produced a number of state bills to stop certain colleges from selling computers and may, some lawyers say, end up in the U.S. Supreme Court.

Texas, Indiana and Illinois lawmakers proposed bills this season to stop colleges from offering discount computers to students. Last month, a Madison, Wis., computer store dropped a lawsuit charging the University of Wisconsin was illegally against local computer shops by offering the machines at discounts.

The increasing pace of proposed legislation — none of it has passed as yet; only Washington state now expressly forbids campuses to compete with local retailers — and threat of more lawsuits are convincing some campuses like Colorado to keep their computer discount plans quiet.

"There's just no way we can compete" for student business with the CU bookstore, laments a Boulder computer store saleman.

"The college is definitely going to get the university kids," he explains. "It's not fair, but what are we going to do? If we had the kind of money to buy large amounts of stock, we'd be okay. As it is, we get by."

"I'll tell you what it sounds like," added Computer Works, Inc. store manager Lecale Bowers when told of the secret talks between Apple and CU. "It sounds like more competition from the college."

Colleges, of course, can afford to sell computers more cheaply to students than local stores because of agreements that let colleges buy the machines from the manufacturers at special low prices.

And manufacturers say they're just doing business.

"The reason the universities can sell the computers so cheaply is that the percentage of discount is determined by the number of machines they buy," an IBM spokesman says.

"We don't set the prices for our dealers," he adds. "The retailer is free to sell for whatever he wants. The universities simply buy more computers."

IBM, Apple, Zenith and other computer manufacturers all began selling discount computers to colleges in 1983, and the programs have grown exponentially each year.

Retailers are angry about competing with non-profit college bookstores and at the manufacturers who sell to colleges for lower prices than they sell computers to the retailers.

One retailer, Computronics of Madison, Wis., sued to force Apple to stop letting the university buy computers for less than what it charges Computronics.

"Under the Robinson-Patman Act (a federal anti-trust law), a seller is prohibited from discriminating in price between two retailers," explains Brian Butler, the lawyer who represented Computronics in its November, 1984 suit.

But the act also "allows a company to meet its competition's prices," argues Bob Christianson, the Milwaukee lawyer who represented Apple in the suit.

Apple, he reasons, could sell computers at a discount to Wisconsin because IBM and others were doing so. If Wisconsin chose to sell those computers cheaply to its students, Madison retailers were free to try to match the university's prices.

"I'd have gone all the way to the Supreme Court," Christianson says. "Apple's defense was solid. It wasn't a matter of retailing, per se. It's a matter of meeting the competition."

Last year, similar arguments convinced Illinois legislators to defeat State Sen. Joseph Corcoran's efforts to limit what campuses can sell to students.

Even before Apple and CU could finish negotiating to sell the machines, another Boulder company—Leading Edge Communications — filed an official complaint that the university's business school was competing unfairly by publishing a directory of high tech firms in the state.

Leading Edge sells its own high tech directory for $80, while CU, which gathered the information by using some state funds, plans to sell its directory — due out in March — for $50.

Men's Track Team To Hone Skills

The 1985 men's track team has the depth that is needed to have a very successful season. Coach Alan Hartman feels there are many talented athletes on this year's squad. "Having many quality athletes will enable us to specialize in strong areas rather than diluting the team strength in order to cover every event."

Hartman hopes to build on technique improvements that began in 1984. "By increasing interest and knowledge in technique analysis, our program will take great strides forward."

Track fans will see major improvement in the pole vault event with Bob Seton (14 feet) and John Cowles (12'6") leading the way. Hartman believes that the jumping events will continue to improve and throws will be very strong. All-American Gino Perri will return for the Indian squad and should be the leader in the field events.

Several young freshman will aide the team with their fine high school times. In addition to a talented class of '88, the cross country runners should provide strength in the distance events.

Juniata's striders will be tough to beat and Coach Hartman has high expectations for his team. "I think this team should win one of the two invitationals and place high in the Middle Atlantic Conference Championships. Nine Indians should qualify for the NCAA Division III Championships." He added, "We should have an exciting season."

The Tribe opens their 1985 campaign March 23, on College Hill with a meet against Albright College.

The complete schedule: March 23, (highlights of this game will appear next week) ALBRIGHT; 27, at Lycoming; 30, at Susquehanna Invitational; April 3, at Susquehanna; 6, at Western Maryland Invitational; 13, at Messiah; 17, at Lebanon Valley; 27, MESSIAH; 29, at Dickinson; May 1, LOCK HAVEN; 3-4, MAC's.

I.M. Racquetball Tourney Thins Field

by Andy Hiscock

The Intramural Mixed doubles racquetball tournament is in full swing. This is a double-elimination style play format, with the undefeated teams competing in the winners bracket and those teams with one loss playing in the losers bracket. Any team losing twice is eliminated from the tournament.

Play began on Thursday, March 21st. The team of Nancy Briggs/Tom Cancelmo defeated Bob Gielow/Bartol. John Montgomery-/Debbie Beran defeated Karen Bennett/Joe Damico. Tina Tweardy/ Randy Deike beat Tom Hunt-/Jessica Fox. Beth Gallagher/Matt Siegel defeated John Martuano/Mary Heberling. Two games were scheduled on Sunday, March 24th. Nancy Briggs & Tom Cancelmo picked up their second victory of the tournament when they defeated the team of John Montgomery & Debbie Beran. Tina Tweardy & Randy Deike had a game scheduled but no score has yet been reported. These games were full of fast paced hard hitting action.

The double-elimination play-off system allows all teams a better shot at reaching the championship game since the stronger teams are pitted against one another in the "winners" bracket, while the "losers" bracket consists of teams that are so called -weaker-.

The losers bracket was in action this past Tuesday and both winners and losers brackets play today (no scores at time of printing). There should be three teams left by Sunday, March 31st; when the two remaining teams with one loss each meet up to decide who goes against the only remaining undefeated team on Tuesday, April 2nd.

Poska Snatches Victory From Lion's Mouth

by Lauralee Snyder

Steve (CK) Poska proved to be Juniata's "clutch hitter" in last Thursday's conquest of Penn State. He went to the plate with the scoreboard showing a 9-8 score in favor of the visitors. It was the bottom of the ninth inning with two outs, two strikes, and the bases loaded. Steve belted his pitch-hard, straight, and down the right field line over the first baseman's head, yet short of the right fielder's glove. Two men came home and Juniata won the game 10-8.

"It was the greatest comeback that any of my teams have ever done," said Coach Berrier. "We were down 8-2 — it was a total team effort with great relief pitching."

Trailing the entire game, Juniata proved to be the true underdog. At the end of the first inning, Penn State led 1-0. Various errors by the Juniata defense in the 2nd inning allowed the Lions to score four more runs.

Another scoring drive for Penn State came in the 3rd inning when two homeruns and a walk led to three more runs, making the score 8-1.

One run scored in the second inning and another in the fourth by the Indians still left them at a terrible deficit. The tables began to turn in the sixth inning, though.

Penn State scored their final run at the top of the inning making the score 9-2. The Indians began their defensive attack as Dave Crane singled. Rich Howey tripled next, scoring Crane. Freshman Dan Webb was walked, Scott Cole singled — bringing in another run. Glenn Hinc man walked to load the bases.

With the bases loaded, Steve Poska came up to bat. His three-run double to right center field boosted the score to 9-7 at the end of the sixth.

Seior Dave Lesser went in at the top of the 7th to pitch. The score remained unchanged through the seventh, eighth, and up until the bottom of the ninth inning.

The winning drive started as Dave Crane got walked, Rich Howey doubled on an error, and Dan Webb singled on an error to the short-stop, allowing one run to score. Scott Cole was then walked to laod the bases. With two outs and the bases loaded, Steve Poska blasted his two-base hit to give the Indians their 10-9 victory.

Throughout the game, the Juniata defense changed pitchers four times. Freshman Jim Estep started the game. Sophomore Mike Smith pitched for two innings, Freshman Bryan Fornadell for one, Senior Dave Lesser for two, and the winning pitcher Tom Kelley, for the last.

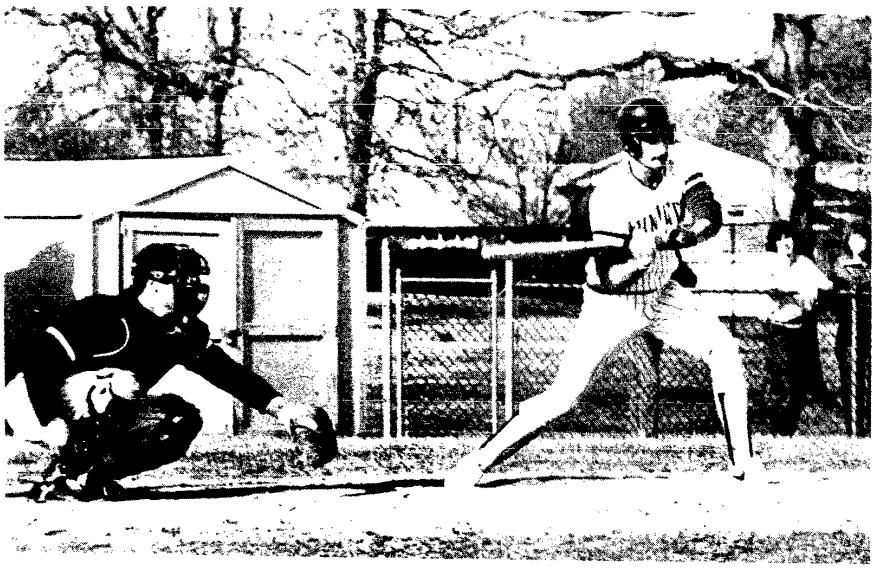
Rich Howey was 3 for 4 on the day with one RBI, while Dave Crane was 2 for 3 with two RBI's. Sophomore Mike Culver hit two singles while teammate Steve Poska had two doubles, and 5 RBI's to add to the Juniata offense. Coach Berrier's prediction of "clutch hitting" certainly proved itself in this contest.

The game scheduled for last Saturday against Elizabethtown was cancelled due to inclement weather and is rescheduled for Saturday, April 6th.

This Saturday, the 3-0 baseball team travels to Carlisle for a double-header against Dickinson College. Last season, the Indians split their double-header with them. "They are usually pretty tough," said Coach Berrier.

Good Luck in keeping your undefeated record, Indians.

Right fielder Mike Culver goes all out to make a diving catch, which saves a sure double versus Penn State.



First baseman Rich Howey checks his swing on a 0 and 2 count. Howey has played a solid first base for the Indians when he's not on the mound.

Nancy Latimore Named "Coach of the Year"

Juniata College women's basketball coach Nancy Latimore has been named Middle Atlantic Division III "Coach of the Year" by the Women's Basketball Coaches Association.

Coaches in each of the eight districts in the United States selected their district's Coach of the Year. There are 35 Division III institutions in the Mid-Atlantic region, and 297 in the country.

Latimore, in her eighth season at Juniata, guided the Indians to a 15-7 record in 1984-85, including wins in 10 of the last 11 games.

"It is always an honor to be recognized by your colleagues," said Latimore. "I'd be remiss if I didn't recognize Phil Speck, my assistant coach, who was instrumental in our success. This was his first year of coaching at Juniata and he made many valuable contributions."

The Women's Basketball Coaches Association Caoch of the Year awards program is sponsored by Converse.

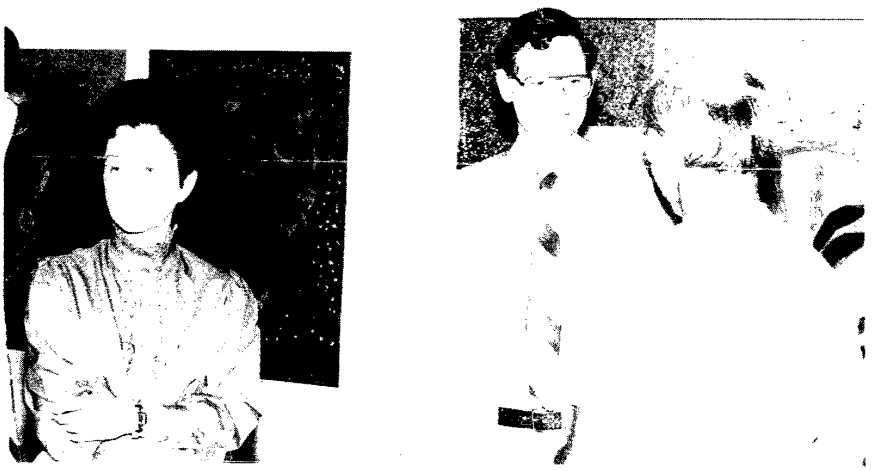
PHILADELPHIA — Holocaust survivors protested President Reagan's visit to a German cemetary containing the graves of Waffen SS troops. In a speech given at Independence Hall, Menachem Rosensaft, Chairman of the International Network of Children of Jewish Holocaust Survivors, spoke strongly against the visit to Bitburg, scheduled for next month. The ceremony marked the fourth of its kind, and opened the Inaugural Ceremony of the American Gathering of Jewish Holocaust Survivors. The group is campaigning to have Reagan's visit cancelled or changed to a different cemetary site.

SAO PAULO, BRAZIL — Brazilian President-elect Tancredo Neves died Monday of grave heart and lung complications following seven operations in the last four weeks. Tancredo, 75, was elected to head the first civilian government in Brazil in 21 years. He was never sworn in as President.

SAN SALVADOR — Leftist rebels and government troops stopped fighting in an undeclared ceasefire Monday so that medical teams could continue vaccinating over 250,000 Salvadoran children. The mass innoculations, sponsored by the United Nations Children's Fund, with heaviest support from the Roman Catholic Church, started in February. This is the first time that a major conflict in a developing nation has subsided to immunize children.

JERUSALEM — Israeli Defense Minister Yitzhak Rabin announced that Israel will complete the withdrawal of troops from Lebanon by early June. The Defense Minister did say, however, that Israel will retain temporarily enough military presence as it sees imperative to defend its border region.



Dr. Joseph V. Stewart, Juniata's new Vice-President and Dean of Academic Affairs, is seen here with his wife Anne at a recent reception held in honor of his appointment. Stewart, formerly the Academic Dean of the College of Liberal Arts, University of Dubuque, Iowa, was selected from a group of 115 candidates. In addition to his administrative duties which he began last week, he will also serve as a professor of physics at Juniata.

Fiancial Aid Letter-Writing Campaign Underway for 1986

by Avril Opinante

The Reagan Administration is proposing cuts in student financial aid for fiscal 1986. This is part of the administration's plan to reduce the huge budget deficit. The proposal would cut $370-milliom from student-aid spending. Thirteen education groups released a statement criticizing the proposal. The statement said, in part, that the cuts "would reverse the current policy which assures students lacking adequate family resources the chance to go to the college of their choice. Instead, it would encourage the segregation of higher education into colleges for the wealthy and colleges for the poor."

Members of congress say that they are not receiving many letters from students on the issue of the proposed cuts. This silence is easily mistaken for apathy, or even tacit approval. In an effort to change this situation, Student Government is launching a letter-writing campaign. Students leading this campaign will be informing Juniatians of what the proposed cuts are, supplying students with paper, envelopes, and addresses, and encouraging students to write letters of protest. Students will be told that in order to be effective , letters to congressmen should be brief and to-the-point, containing (when applicable) an explanation of how the proposed cuts would affect the student personally.

What are the proposed cuts? Under the new compromise made between the White House and Republican Senate, there would be an absolute cap on income set at $60,000 annually. This is an improvement from the original proposed cap of $32,500, but it is still a cut. This means that only those with a family income os $60,000 or less would be eligible for financial aid.

Presently, students can theoretically receive up to $11,000 per year from governmental student-aid programs. $11,000 is assumed to be the average yearly cost of college attendance. The cost of attendance at Juniata is roughly $10,200. The need figure for student aid is figured by subtracting the amount of money a family can contribute towards college costs from $11,000. If the new proposal were accepted, the present figure of $11,000 would be reduced to $8,000. The proposal would affect Guaranteed Student Loans, Pell Grants, Work Study, SEOG's, NDSL's and in some cases, Plus Loans. About 155 Juniata students would be affected to some extent. With its letter-writing campaign, Student Government is trying to get students involved in the political process, letting students know that they can make a difference.

Spring is in full swing

Spring is in full swing at Juniata College. Since the student body has returned from Easter break, the weather on the outside has been marvelous. Take advantage of the beauty of spring and go outside with your friends to relax and to socialize. Spring brings with it many upcoming campus activities.

May 1st is the traditional May Day breakfast. Held each year on the first day of May, the women of Juniata are honored. Ladies do not miss out on your chance for the men of Juniata to serve you breakfast. And be sure to cast your ballots for the coveted Juniata Man and Woman of the Year, who will be named at the breakfast.

Mud Volleyball and Raft Regatta are fast approaching. Round up 6-8 people for a bath in the mud. Get out there and roll in the mud and show off your mud wrestling talent.

The event that remains on each student's mind since the first day of school—yes—Raft Regatta is just a few short weeks away. Sign-up sheets are available at the information desk beginning tomorrow. Gather your friends, gather some innertubes and flats and have the time of your life on the river. It will be a day to remember (maybe)!

Spring activities culminate with commencement ceremonies on Sunday, May 26. The class of 1985 will take a final bow and walk proudly out into the "real" world. Be sure to wish all the seniors well in all their future endeavors.

Aside from taking part in the activities that are planned, be sure to go out and catch some rays and a cool dip in Lake Raystown. Get your team together and knock that softball around the diamond.

I just had to do it. It seemed so right. As referred to in my "final" Along Muddy Run column (February 14), I am "out and about." And this week we're in Washington, D.C. Yes, the nation's capital — home of Ronnie and Nancy and all the top dogs in government. But you may be more familiar with the budding spring cherry blossoms, Georgetown Hoyas or exquisite Ethiopian dining. Whatever your previous relationship with D.C., you now have one other — a Juniatian news correspondent!

Yes, for those of you that haven't noticed, thanks. As of winter term I packed up my basketball and bean bag chair and sailed down Muddy Run by keg past Sheetz's and Mount Union until I came across another muddy river — The Potomac. But don't write me off yet. I'm still officially enrolled as a student at Juniata College and more importantly, am still paying tuition. The only difference is that by living off campus I can't get my mouth close to the V103 microphone, probably a relief for a lot of you.

So, just what am I doing partying in the big city while the rest of you are studying for mid-terms? Good question. At first I thought I was the Clueless blunder for deciding to leave campus spring term of my senior year; just when I completed all my required GE's, scheduled my first class at ten, and knew how to get in all the lounge parties free. But for any of you contemplating an internship — do it! I'm sitting at my office desk in the Washington Bureau of Cable News Network typing this copy into the teletype word processor to be fed electronically via satellite to Huntingdon. It is a sad but fitting end to our careers at Juniata — the graduation fee. One last JC bill before we are kicked out of the nest into the real world, to soar to new heights on the wings of ambition, or plummet to earth where we will flounder helplessly until we are smashed beneath the wheel of a passing pick-up truck. Or something like that.

They started milking us before we even arrived freshman year with matriculation fees and room deposits. Since then, there have been countless bills: tuition, housing, room and board, late fees, drop-add fees, bookstore bills, parking tickets, etc. We won't be safe when we are gone either; how long until we begin getting letters beginning, "Greetings Alumni! You may have graduated but we still want your money . . ." or maybe something worded a little more tactfully.

No doubt there will be many unforseen post-graduation fees keeping us linked to our dear old alma mater until our passing into the next world (where, God willing, we will be safe). Certainly a favorite will be the two-dollar transcript fee. They must figure if you need transcripts you don't have a job, hence you don't have any money to donate so they better get it any way they can. Clever people, these administrators.

Things could have been worse. If the administration ever gets their creative minds in gear they will find no end to money-raising possibilities.

An example: people take their bathroom privileges for granted, leaving hot water running and using toilets when not necessary. Installing pay toilets and pay showers will make students appreciate the true cost of these conveniences and help them budget their time (Do I really need to go to the bathroom or take a shower?). Students may argue that this cost is covered in the room and board fee, but think about it: the toilet and showers are down the hall—not in your room. Even in East Houses bathrooms and bedrooms are separate.

Another possibility is to force everyone to see the nurse once per term for a routine check-up. Just so we know everyone is healthy. Let's see; 1200 students, 3 terms, $1.50 per visit . . . $5400!

With the quantity of alcohol consumed on campus, a beer tax would raise an incredible amount of money and maybe cut down on student drinking, I said maybe. This is a dangerous idea (see Tea Party, Boston, 1773).

With creative thinking there is no end to the amount of money Juniata can squeeze out of students. And if still more money is needed they can always auction off Randy Dieke's nifty brown pick-up truck.

There's been much debate over the Reagan administration's policy of indirect confrontation with Nicaragua. Supporters of overt aid, once covert, to overthrow the Sandinista government, claim that the Marxist-Leninist government of Nicaragua threatens democracy in the Western Hemisphere. Opponents of President Reagan's rhetoric and his method of supporting the rebels fighting the Sandinistas, maintain that the conflict in Nicaragua has a potential of turning into another Vietnam 'bog', undermining our long-term interests in the region.

What many Americans fail to recognize is the legitimacy of the Nicaraguan government, despite its form of politics. Hostility, misunderstanding, and fear of America has historic roots in Nicaragua; it was a right-wing dictatorship which we installed in 1932 and which remained in control until the Sandinista Revolution of 1979. The Sandinista revolution, while being a welcome change toward democracy in 1979, has since moved too far left for America's liking. The Administration exaggeration on how much Nicaragua was receiving in aid from the Soviet Union, however, justified an ambitious program aimed at pressuring the Nicaraguans, a sovereign state, to carry out a policy closer to the liking of America. By 1982, the two nations were in a state of quasi-war, pushing Nicaragua farther to the left. Our bully tactics of political and economic coercion, has pushed Nicaragua to seek help from other countries, distancing America from negotiations.

Perhaps another factor in considering American policy in the country is measuring the popular support for the Sandinistas versus the support for the guerilla rebels. It remains to be seen whether or not the rebels are the favored political body in Nicaragua, which the Reagan administration maintains. If they were, one might expect to see a greater rebel force fighting the Sandinista military. In fact, the rebels do not receive the popular support American officials say because the rebels have been known to attack and murder Nicaraguan peasants on rebel missions. While American officials decry the Sandinista for limiting potical freedoms, these same officials have ignored the right-wing 'death squads' killing countless thousands in El Salvador.

Certainly the Sandinistas have strayed from the original goals of its revolution; but compared to the horrors in El Salvador, Nicaragua's internal problems seem trite. The Sandinistas have made some remarkable social advancements in the past five years: infant mortality has been drastically reduced, and illiteracy has been significantly slashed. The real question to policy-makers then, is not whether or not the Sandinistas enjoy popular support, but how to topple the Sandinistas who endanger America's historic hegemony in Latin America.

American military presence in Honduras, Nicaragua's neighbor, only serves to justify the Sandinista military build-up. Cuba has warned Nicaragua to distance herself from the limited economic support of the Soviet Union, and conciliate with her Latin American neighbors, and the United States. A rapprochment is needed in American-Nicaraguan relations. President Reagan's insistence that the Sandinistas say 'uncle' to America's will reduces the likelihood of a conflict resolution as proposed by the Contadora Group. The Contadora Group is composed of the governments of Mexico, Columbia, Venezuela, and Panama seeking peace in the region. Soon the Contadora Group will make public their position regarding the policies of President Reagan; they have already expressed concern over "manipulation" of their statements by the Administration.

Nicaragua needs enterence into America's economic markets in order to turn away from the Soviet Union toward a stable economic future. Cuba's Fidel Castro has given such advice to Sandinista leaders. Additionally, President Reagan might consider seeking a policy aimed at support of the Sandinistas if they offer needed concessions to other political parties. Encouraging the economic incentives is probably a wiser strategy than encouaraging an armed conflict, harming the civilian population more than the government it wishes to reform. America's interest in the political stability of Latin America is unquestionable, but exporting our own kind of revolution through coercive measures jeopardizes the painful lessons we were supposed to have learned in the Phillippines Insurrection, and the Vietnam War.

Out & About

by Ann Cameron

Are you like me — do you always have a hard time deciding what to order when you go out to eat? Then when your entree is served, you look at someone else's and think, "Gee, that looks good!" So you tell them that there is a phone call for them in the lobby, and you sneak a bite or two while they're gone. Well, you don't have that problem when you go out to a Chinese restaurant. The whole idea of eating Chinese is to eat more of someone else's dinner than you eat of your own. If you don't want to flip a coin to decide what to order, I recommend taking a few friends out for a fun evening of fine Chinese food at Suzie Wong's Chinese Restaurant in State College.

To get to Suzie Wong's take Route 26 north to State College, then turn left on 322 west. The restaurant is on your right about 3 miles from Penn State University. Suzie Wong's is open 4:30 - 9:00 Monday - Thursday, and 4:30 - 9:30 Friday and Saturday. Informal dress is appropriate and reservations are not necessary. The dinners are reasonably priced, five of us ate for just $35.00. Our waitress and waiter (who were, by the way Indian and Italian. Oh well, the chef was Chinese.) were very nice. They even took our picture (for my scrapbook. Hey, I don't get out too often.)

We ordered four dinners for the 5 of us and a side dish of shrimp fried rice. We selected the Suzie Wong Special, beef and white chicken with mushrooms and Chinese vegetables; Shrimp Lo Mein, fresh shrimp sitting on a mound of noodles and vegetables; Gai Ding, tender white chicken diced and sauteed with water chestnuts, bamboo shoots, mushrooms, peas and cashews; and Hong Shu Gai, another chicken dish, dipped in egg batter and fried with vegetables. Some of us also got egg rolls, chicken wings, fried wontons, and soup, which were included with most of the dinners. Don't worry, you don't need to know how to pronounce everything or hire an interpreter. You can just point out your selection.

Are you hungry? We were! So we began passing our plates around. David put some of the Special on Becky's plate while Becky gave Lori some rice, and Lori gave Lisa the Shrimp Lo Mein while Lisa served me some Hong Shu Gai and I gave David some Gai Ding. And so on and so on. We passed our plates around, across, over and under the table until finally my long lost plate returned home, full of food. We ate and passed our plates until we were full, which was before everything was eaten. It was great, I got to try everyone's dinner without resorting to my usual tricks. (The guy at the next table did have something that looked good, though; I should have told him that the he left his lights on in his car.)

Before we left to return to Huntingdon, we had fortune cookies for dessert. Of course, we had to go around the table and read our fortunes aloud. The words of wisdom included: "A handful of patience is worth more than a bushel of brains." "Confucius says, 'He who runs behind car gets exhausted.' " and "Help! I'm being held captive in a Chinese fortune cookie factory!"

Guest Commentary

Dr. Jay Buchanan

by Jay Buchanan

Let's wrap up our discussion of how to deal more effectively with the conflict that is so much a part of our relationships with others. We have already established the fact that conflict is inevitable and to attempt to avoid it completely may lead to more serious consequences.

Probably the most prevalent alienating practice to avoid is gunnysacking. From time to time, we have used this tactic and this is how it comes about.

Most of us carry around with us this invisible sack into which we through unresolved issues and grievances. The sack becomes heavier and, at some inappropriate time, it bursts. The result is a fight in which everything but the kitchen sink comes out of the sack. Past issues are brought up which are totally irrelevant. Soon the immediate issue is lost, perhaps to find its place in the sack for future use.

Gunnysacking comes about oftentimes as a result of fight evading. Instead of dealing directly with an issue that bothers us, we choose to avoid it at all cost. The silent treatment is a tactic employed by fight evaders. Leaving the room or area when trouble appears is another example of fight evading. Rather than work at resolution, we hope that it will somehow miraculously disappear by itself. But, infortunately, it ends up in the gunnysack.

A way of alleviating the practice of gunnysacking is to address grievances and issues as they surface.

Yet another alienating practice to avoid is using mixed or double messages. It is as if we are saying one thing and meaning something else. When asked what is wrong by your roommate, you reply quite sharply, "Nothing!" is an example of a mixed message. Your body language, facial expressions and tone of voice say something is wrong, but your verbal message contradicts it.

When we use mixed or double messages, we are at the same time both recognizing and denying conflict.

Finally, let's look at the difference between assertive and aggressive behavior as it relates to conflict resolution.

To be assertive is to take both your rights and feelings as well as the rights and feelings of others into consideration. Just the opposite is the case with aggressive behavior. The aggressive person seeks to attack and dominate, while the assertive individual seeks to work for a mutually acceptable resolution.

Meal For Crop Raises Funds For African Famine Relief

The annual "Meal for CROP" held at Juniata College March 26 has raised approximately $2,950 to help battle famine in Africa.

According to the Rev. Dr. M. Andrew Murray, Juniata's campus minister, some 600 area residents participated in this year's "Meal for CROP" program. "Since Juniata students already paid for the meals and made them available to members of the community, all of the funds raised were donated to CROP," Murray explained. CROP is the Church World Service organization that funds hunger relief and self-help programs worldwide.

In addition to the "Meal for CROP," Juniata's Campus Ministry Board, sponsors of the annual event, held a hunger symposium immediately after the meal. The program consisted of films, drama, open discussion and short informative talks on the problem of world hunger.

Eddie Murphy Entertains Thousands During Penn State Performance

by Ann Woltz

Approximately 5,000 anxious fans gathered early outside Penn State's Recreation Hall Saturday, March 30, despite the cold, inclement weather. Armed with umbrellas and bundled in raincoats, the unruly crowd began to clamor and throng, "Eddie, Eddie, Eddie!", as the freezing rain relentlessly fell from the sky. Finally, the doors swung open, and we were swept inside by a sea of pushing people into the hall, located at the northern end of Penn State's campus. Within minutes, every seat in the house was filled.

As the house lights dimmed, the warm-up, Lilo Thomas, entered to a not-so-receptive crowd. With a sound much like Morris Day of "Time" the charismatic Thomas and his six member band, soon won the ardent approval of the crowd. Thomas, who will be playing warm-up for the entire Murphy tour, ended his spirited show with a motown medley that had everyone dancing and singing along.

While chants of "Eddie!" started up again, a fan dressed as Gumby fought past the police and dashed in front of the empty stage. Once again the house lights faded; only this time to the sound of deafening screams. The Pointer Sister's "Neutron Dance" could be heard just above the roar, as a stage-wide movie screen flashed a montage of film clips of Eddie in various roles.

Suddenly, the screen went blank and a red spotlight shot from behind it, revealing the poised, black silhouette of the man we had waited so long to see. Slowly, the screen rose, and Mr. Murphy sauntered center stage to greet his adoring audience with a vibrant "Hello, Penn State!" When the screams finally died down, he laughed and said, "You're all smiling and I haven't done shit yet.", which of course put the audience into a fit of laughter and screams. "Now that's what I call anticipation noises. I haven't done shit yet and y'all are out there screamin' and laughin' your heads off. You be pokin' your neighbor and sayin' this shit's gonna be funny'!"

Eddie claimed he doesn't like to go on tour because the critics claim his show is just too dirty. Although his routine is suggestive and filled with expletives, his audiences seem to delight most in his profane sketches.

Purphy's comical spontaneity within his rehearsed material was a high point of the show. When rowdy members of the audience began to cat-call during his performance Eddie yelled, "Shut-up, this isn't Donahue where I go, 'Question!'" Also, after instructing the noisy wrecking crew backstage to "quiet down", Eddie played a game of dodge with the spotlight operators.

Along with his usual shredding of homosexuals, throughout the routine, Eddie did uncanny impressions of Bill Cosby reprimanding him for his use of obscenity in his act. He then launched into a sketch of Michael Jackson singing and dancing, Murphy imitated in an angered feminine voice. Concerning Mr. "T", Eddie said he knew Mr. "T" could beat him up. "He could f all y'all up too! Anyone who cuts his hair that way will cut your hair that way."

As the concert wound down, Eddie exposed the cleaner facet of his comedy act. A monologue about his poor father, employed at a Coleco toy factory, and could only support the family with what he could steal, i.e. his mama could cook a delicious Tonka truck and had to iron eleven Twister games each day for the children to wear to school, was refreshingly wholesome comedy any audience would enjoy.

Eddie Murphy, with his spontaneity, sex-appeal, and yes, even his sometimes offensive tongue, may not appeal to all audiences all the time, but is nonetheless a successful, uncontrollable, loveable talent.

Auto Club sets Road Rally for Weekend

by Marcia M. Serio

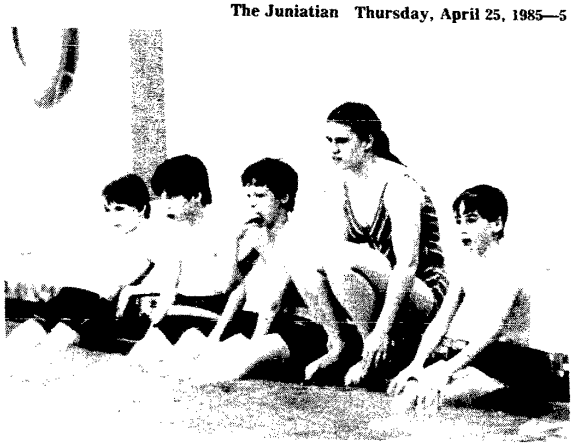
A road rally, sponsored by the Juniata College Auto Club, will be held Saturday April 27. Starting time is 1 p.m. The rally will begin in Oller parking lot, near Beghly Library, on the Juniata College Campus. Any type of vehicle may enter. Cost is $4 per driver/navigator team. This fee includes the cost of prizes and a party for all surviving ralliers.

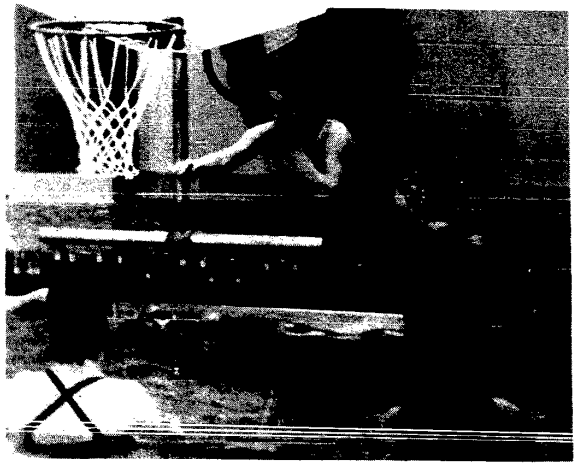
A team can register for the road rally between Wednesday April 24 and Friday April 26 in front of Ellis College Center, or by calling Ron Markey at 643-9886.

The road rally is approximately 50 miles long and will take about 2 hours to complete.

A road rally is not a race. It is a competition between contestants of how to follow directions and solve clues. A sample direction might be; at 1.8 miles on your odometer turn left. After you pass five mail boxes on the right you will see a sign . . .

The Auto Club presents this activity for the general interest of Juniata College students and Huntingdon area residents.





Children of Juniata faculty and staff are learning water safety at the Binder Natatorium as a part of the Water Safety Instructor's course. Roz Hall is instructing the program with Juniata lifeguards.

be reading it now except that good 'ole JC doesn't have a pick-up satellite dish, only a late pick-up window at Wendy's!

Nice new technical terms, huh. I was surprised too, at how much easier it is to learn by doing rather than studying from my favorite form of enjoyable reading — textbooks.

But seriously, an internship is an invaluable and practical experience that gets you out into the "real world" before you're faced with it at graduation. After one week in my internship I can honestly say that I have learned more about my field of interest and myself than the last three years at Juniata. Or maybe I should say that the information I have learned about myself and my program of emphasis in liberal arts has culminated due to this unique learning experience. One other smidgin' of information I learned by being in the city: don't take red lights for granted. I didn't feel too much like partying after being cited for a $10 fine for jaywalking in Georgetown. With all those red lights, I'll take Huntingdon and its total of five lights any day!

Simpson to Head Gifts Committee

Betty F. Simpson of Tyrone has been named chairwoman of the Juniata Valley Gifts Committee for the second phase of Juniata College's Century II Campaign.

A 1949 Juniata graduate and one of three alumni representatives to the college's Board of Trustees, Mrs. Simpson is vice president and co-owner of the Allegheny Mountain Network, a group of Pennsylvania radio stations.

Mrs. Simpson has served Juniata as a member of the Alumni Council, was active on the Kennedy Sports & Recreation Center phase of the Century II Campaign and has participated in other volunteer projects.

The former social studies and English teacher is a member of the Tyrone Hospital Board of Trustees and an elder of the First Presbyterian Church in Tyrone. She has been active in the Tyrone Women's Club, Blair County Association of Citizens with Learning Disabilities, Johnstown Regional Blood Bank and the American Red Cross.

As chairwoman of the Juniata Valley Gifts Committee, Mrs. Simpson will be working with businesses and industries in the Juniata Valley in securing contributions for the campaign.

Piano duo Concludes Artist Series

The final program of the 1984-85 Artist Series, featuring piano duo Steven and Nadya Gordon, was presented April 17th in Oller Hall.

Performing on Bosendorfer pianos, each with four additional keys, the Gordons are the winners of many prestigious awards, including gold medals in the International Piano Recording Competition. In addition, Steven Gordon coached the eighty-four pianists who performed at the L.A. Olympics.

Dedicating the pieces they played to the piano teams that made them popular, the Gordons began with Manuel Infants' "Garcia-el Vito" followed by "Francaise" by Florent Schmitt. The Waltz from Anton Arensky's Suite No. 1, Op. 15 was then presented.

A four part Sonata by Francis Poulenc was also designed as the theme of dissonant cathedral bells was heard in both the first and last movements.

Following a brief intermission, the Gordons returned to perform Mozart's Sonata in D major, K. 448. Dedicated to Josef and Rosina Lhevinne, former directors of the Julliard School, the work became a bit slow-moving at times, although it was contrasted by the lively pieces that followed: Benjamin's "Jamaican Rumba" and Milhaud's "Brazileira."

As an hommage to their favorite piano team, Vronsky and Babin, the Gordons rounded out the program with Serge Rachmaninoff's Suite No. 2 Op. 17.

Following curtain calls the Gordons concluded the evening with a charming version of Saint-Saens' "Danse Macabre."

Tough Day For Ladies Track

This past Saturday, Juniata's Women's Track team traveled to Dickinson College to face a tough women's squad in a dual meet losing 94-42. The Indians had to battle both a strong squad of experienced Dickinson runners as well as oppressive 94° weather. Despite this, the team displayed a number of good performances.

The lady Indians started out the day on a high note when the JC team of Sue Occiano, Karen Fanner, Sue Martin, and Michelle Noll edged out Dickinson by .6 seconds in the 440 Relay. Juniata picked up third place in the 1 mile run with a strong effort by Kristine Smith in the heat. The ladies did well in the short distances with Karen Fonner placing 2nd in the 440yd. dash. Sue Occiano finished 1st in the 100 yd. dash with Michelle Noll placing 2nd. The 200 yd. dash finsihed with Sue Martin taking 3rd. In the two hurdle events, the Indiants picked up 3rd place points from Patti Kyle (100 yd.) and a 2nd place finish by Illona Gillette (440 yd.). Kristine Smith came up with another third place finish in the middle distance 880 yd. event, but Juniata failed to pick up any points in the longer 2 mile run and the 1 mile relay.

The Indians held their own in the field events. Beth Hostetter grabbed 2nd place in the shot put while Peggy Evans and Michelle Noll placed 1st and 3rd respectively in the long jump. Alexia Marks and Illona Gillette took 1st and 3rd in the Javelin throw and Peggy Evans picked up another 1st in the Triple Jump to round out Juniata's scoring.

Ruggers Earn Victory: 23-4

This past Saturday, the Juniata Rugby Club poked, grabbed and dug their way to a coveted victory over Penn State's—Altoona branch campus. The Indian club has found that their victories have been few and far between with this being the first time they were on the top hand of the score in three years, but they found out that it is still as sweet as they remembered. The Altoona Club was considerably larger in size, but the Indian ruggers under the direction of captains Chris Whitcomb and Mark Kirchgasser managed to use their speed and kicking game to scrape up the wine.

After a scoreless first half which saw a lot of hard hitting by both clubs, the Indians scored 4 points on a try by Steve LeCrone and Mark Kirchgasser added the conversion to put the Indians out on top 6-0. On the ensuing kick-off, Indian Bruce Catando fielded the ball and kicked it deep into Altoona territory. A charging Mike Kaufhold blocked the return kick and carried for 30 yards for the Try (4 points). Again, Mark Kirchgasser added the two point conversion to put the Indians on top 12-0. A late score by Altoona made the final score 12-4. The Indian victory was well deserved for the teams, who have been working hard the whole season and evened up their season record at 1-1.

Ladies Tennis Cools Down After 3-0 Start

by Joe Scialabba

The Juniata College women's tennis team has cooled off after a fast 3-0 start. Still, despite two straight losses, coach Nancy Latimore's Indians hope to finish strong and carry the momentum into the Middle Atlantic Conference tournament.

The Tribe was impressive in the first three outings; shutting out King's (9-0), clubbing Wilkes (8-1), and beating Lycoming (6-3).

The Indians have recently lost 7-2 decisions to Susquehanna and Dickinson.

The Indians have stayed with a solid lineup throughout the spring. Leanne Egolf has played well at the number one spot, followed by Ginny Krall and Kim Detwiler at number two and three, respectively. Marie Rose, Sue King and Laura Beck round out the starting six.

The MAC tournament is scheduled for May 3-4.

Indians Take Two From Albright

by Lauralee Snyder

Juniata got back on the winning track this week by defeating Albright both games of a doubleheader on Saturday.

Outstanding pitching by Rich Howey and a fine hitting effort by the team (14 hits) led the Indians to a 10-2 victory in the first game. "Underclassmen produced all the hits and runs", commented Coach Berrier. "The two runs that Albright got were unearned. Freshman Dan Webb and Bryan Fornadell each hit homeruns and boosted the Indian offensive effort. Sophomore Chris Williams was 3-4 in the first game, and 5-6 for the day, while Steve Poska also had a good day going 3-6.

Dave Musser pitched a fine second allowing only three hits. It was JC errors that contributed to the Albright scoring drive. The Indians led the entire game and won 7-3.

The Indians played four of six games scheduled during spring break winning 2 and losing 2. Glenn Hinemann and Dave Murphy hit homeruns in the two winning efforts for the Indians.

Juniata is now 3-5 in the Conference and 8-5 overall. Most likely Susquehanna will represent our conference in the play-offs. The Indians have ten games remaining in their 1985 schedule. A key MAC match-up will be this Saturday, when the Indians host Wilkes on Langdon field at 1 p.m., all are welcomed to attend.

The Ladies Softball team battled the cold weather and tough York squad last week. The Indians played tough but dropped the doubleheader.

Men Own 1-2 Record On Tennis Courts

by Joe Scialabba

Coach Rob Ash's Juniata men's tennis team has only beat the rain three times this spring and owns a 1-2 record on the courts.

The Tribe sandwiched a 7-2 win over York between a 7-2 loss to Susquehanna and a 6-3 defeat at Lycoming.

The Indians have gone with Dan Corrazzi at the number one spot, followed by Chris Savage and Doug Yokohama. Dan Berger, Dave Acker, Mark Kearns and Dave Moore have filled in the bottom half of the singles positions through the first three matches.

The inclement weather has interrupted the team's practice schedule and prevented them from getting the game play experience that they wanted, but with this break in the weather, they should be ready for the MAC's on May 3rd and 4th.

Steve Borza displays his smooth stroke that is leading the 1985 golf team to its first winning season in four years, and maybe the 4th winningest team in Juniata history.

Golfers Open Some Eyes With Impressive 6-2 Start

by Joe Scialabba

The Juniata golf team has opened some Middle Atlantic Conference eyes this spring, as the Tribe has rolled to a 6-2 record with three matches left to play.

Co-coaches Dr. Arnold Tilden and Dr. Duane Stroman have had the luxury of rotating a very balanced line-up in wins at York, at Lycoming and over Alvernia twice. The Indians swept a tri-match over visiting Western Maryland and Lock Haven.

Juniata lost a close match at Dickinson, but was overpowered by powerful Susquehanna.

Seniors Bob Neumar and Mark Loeper have led the Indians, along with junior Steve Borza. Juniors Tom Cancelmo, Dave Challenger, Mark Howanitz, Joe Scialabba and Steve West have helped the cause along with senior Rick Rodriquez and sophomore Jim Armstrong.

The MAC tournament will be the first weekend of May, at Shawnee-on-the-Delaware.

This year's team has already assured themselves of the first winning season in four years, and if they are able to win their last two matches, they will become the 4th winningest golf team in Juniata's history.

JC Choir Sets Spring Concert

The spring performance by the Juniata College Concert Choir and Choral Union will be held Tuesday, May 7 at 8:30 p.m. in Oller Hall.

To be presented in two parts, the first half of the program will feature the Concert Choir performing selections from their recent winter tour through Pennsylvania, Virginia, Tennessee, Kentucky and Ohio. At each performance, the choir was greeted with standing ovations and invitations to return. The selections to be performed range from Baroque compositions to Broadway tunes.

For the second half of the program, part of the international celebration of the 300th anniversary of the birth of George Frideric Handel, the Juniata Choral Union will present the composer's "Dettingen Te Deum," written to celebrate an important British military victory. This presentation will give area residents the opportunity to hear one of Handel's most exciting, but rarely performed choral masterpieces.

The Juniata Choral Union is comprised of the Juniata Concert Choir, college faculty and staff, and members of the community. The concert will be conducted by Dr. Joseph W. Figg, director of choral ensembles and assistant professor of music at Juniata.

The public is cordially invited to attend the May 7 concert. There is no admission charge.

Seniors Auction Slaves

by Becky Woomer

Tired of some of those tedious tasks like cleaning your room or typing a paper? Then be sure to attend the Senior/Faculty Slave Auction in Ellis Ballroom tonight at 9:00 and buy someone to do them for you. This entertaining event will be hightlighted by Mystery Faculty Slaves from some of the departments, as well as some of our favorite administrators.

There will be clues given at the auction for each mystery volunteer. For example, the clue for the business department representative is: It's a fruit than is blossoming right now. From the math department, the person's clue is: This item is something with which you can chop wood. The volunteer from the computer science department has as his clue: Route 26 and Route 22 are examples of these. Any ideas, or are you still clueless?

Be sure to get together with your friends to go to this unique twist of a Juniata tradition. There will be plenty of bargains from which to choose. Hope to see you there.

Write a letter to save financial aid

You should be aware by now that the Reagan administration is proposing cuts in student financial aid for fiscal 1986. This is part of the administration's plan to reduce the huge budget deficit. The proposal would cut $370-million from student aid.

In an effort to change this situation, our student government has launched a letter-writing campaign to congressmen. However, our student body has been apathetic and very few letters have been written. The Juniatian strongly urges that since financial aid cuts will affect each student in some way, that each student should take the time to write a letter.

Students leading the writing campaign are supplying everyone with paper, envelopes and addresses, all free of charge. See your student government representative and be sure and write your letter.

The new student-aid proposal would affect GSL's, Pell Grants, work study, SEOG's, NDSL's and Plus loans. With its letter writing campaign, student government is trying to get each student involved in the political process; letting students know that they can make a difference.

Four years at Juniata: A small, co-educational college of liberal arts and sciences; tucked away in a small town and nestled in the mountains of central Pennsylvania; founded in 1876 by members of the Church of the Brethren to prepare individuals for "the useful occupatons of life."

A month from now we will be gone, scattered across the country like dandelion seeds in the wind, some finding fertile soil and flourishing, others coming to rest in one of life's parking lots with only a small, dry, crack in the sun-baked pavement in which to take root.

Alas, the real world awaits us. But just what is the real world? From the way people talk I get the impression that we have managed to avoid the real world during our stay at Camp Juniata, shunning our responsibilities for a care-free, laid-back lifestyle: parties, sports, meals, . . . and classes.

But if Juniata isn't the real world, where is it? Professors, many who spend their entire careers in the world of academia, must be offended when it is referred to as anything but the real world. Does anybody ask Dr. Cherry why he isn't out in the real world? Wherever you are and whatever you're doing: that is the real world.

Everybody makes their own reality. You do what is important to you. Some people want to make money; some people just want to have fun; some people want power. Most people want some of each (some people want a lot of each).

Some people read the newspaper every day: some read the entire paper; some read about the starving people in Ethiopia; some check on where the Yankees are in the standings; some check their stocks. Nothing is more or less real than anything else.

Reality is relative. People talk as if their favorite TV characters actually existed. The actors are real, not the characters. Yet these imaginary people are, to most people, more real than the starving people in Ethiopia (name one). People hate J. R. Ewing. He doesn't exist. So what is the real world?

C.A.S.E.

The Committee on Alcohol Studies and Education (C.A.S.E.) is a student/faculty committee, composed of seven faculty and seven Juniata students. The C.A.S.E. motto is: "If you choose to drink, drink responsibly". In other words, C.A.S.E. does not believe in total abstinence, but promotes awareness concerning the effects of alcohol consumption.

Each year, the organization tackles a new alcohol-awareness project. In the past, C.A.S.E. has sponsored a 3D week, whose theme was, Don't Drive Drunk. Throughout the week, various films and lectures were presented in order to show the legal aspects of driving while under the influence of alcohol and how driving itself is affected by drinking.

Another past C.A.S.E. project was the J.C. Spirit Fair. Students were exposed to the legal, emotional, and physiological aspects of alcohol consumption through pamphlets provided by various booths on campus. A representative from A.A. also visited Juniata, and the breathalizer test was demonstrated by state police.

Last January, the committee sponsored the Punchbowl, an alcohol-trivia game similar to the College Bowl. Student participation was good, and the winners were awarded prizes donated by local merchants. Another Punchbowl was held this past Tuesday night in the Sports-Recreation Center.

In addition to these projects, C.A.S.E. serves non-alcoholic punch at all campus dances and hosts a non-alcoholic pre-Madrigal cocktail party every year. Because April was Alcohol Awareness Month, the committee tried to make students aware of alcohol facts through V103, the Juniatian, and table tents which were placed in Baker Refectory.

C.A.S.E. is a recognized member of BACCHUS, Boost Alcohol Consciousness Concerning the Health of University Students, a national organization whose goals are similar to those of C.A.S.E. Juniata's committee has been commended in BACCHUS publications because of their outstanding alcohol awareness programs.

Anyone interested in joining C.A.S.E. is invited to stop by the Student Services Office in Founders Hall for more information.

V103 Survey Results

by Shelley Guest

The results are in! V103's campus wide survey was completed the week before spring break. The survey, done once a term, determines the Juniata Top 35 which is posted in the broadcasting booth as a guide for DJ's.

Phil Collins came out at number one this term, followed by Chicago and Madonna, at numbers two and three respectively. Phil Collins really did prove to be a favorite among Juniata students because his group, Genesis, came in at number four. Billy Joel, who was number one fall and winter term dropped to number five. Always a favorite among students is Bruce Springsteen, who showed up at number six. U2, the Cars, the Who, and Journey rounded out the Top 10. The remainder of the Top 35 did not change much since winter term, including such groups as Huey Lewis and the News, the Rolling Stones, the Beatles, the Police, Yes, Foreigner, and Van Halen. Pennsylvania's Hooters make their first appearance in the Top 35 at number 29.

The survey is taken of a random sample of 200 students distributed evenly throughout each dorm and off campus. When asked which radio station they listen to, 60% of those surveyed said V103. This shows that the majority of students listen to V103. V103 is still number one!

RA Selection

As Juniata students prepare for the upcoming academic year, the Residential Life Staff has been busy selecting Resident Assistants for 1985-86.

The intensive RA selection process began in early March. The new staff was named shortly before Easter break. Over 31 students were seeking the 19 openings on next year's staff.

Scholarship Announced

The Peace and Conflict Studies Committee has scholarship funds available for current students that may be renewed for as much as three years. To apply for the scholarship, students should have a 3.0 G.P.A. and be able to demonstrate an interest in the program and in peace related issues. Holders of PACS scholarships are also required to take one course each year from the PACS syllabus. Letters of application outlining interest in the program and demonstrating qualification for the scholarship should be sent to Professor Mulvaney, chairman PACS scholarship committee, no later than May 10, 1985.

Friends Sponsor Drive

Cleaning out closets? Heading for home? As this year-end ritual approaches you may find that your worldly possessions now exceed the capacity of your luggage and/or family car. Campus Friends Worship provides you with a solution that can also benefit needy people around the world.

From May 6th through Finals Week, Campus Friends will conduct a clothing and supplies drive. Donations will be sent to the American Friends Service Committee Material Aids Program. Last year this Quaker relief organization sent 177,993 pounds of clothing, bedding, shoes, sewing supplies, school supplies, soap, and medical supplies to Africa, Central America, the Middle East, Poland, and the USA. Recipients include refugee camps, drought victim centers, American Indian reservations, day care centers and kindergartens in impoverished areas, UN relief centers, hospitals, and other relief centers.

What donations are needed? Sturdy shoes and boots (especially sneakers, sandals, and rubber boots), clean used clothing, sheets, towels, soap (even partially used bars are welcome!), remnants of cloth, sewing supplies, barrettes, nail clippers, and combs and brushes. And how about that used Frisbee? Sports equipment and toys are in high demand for children at refugee centers.

Collection posts will be designated in dorms and in other areas around campus. Any questions? Call Luise Van Keuren, ext. 460, or Larry Mutti, ext. 602.

14 Cars In Rally

by Marcia Serio

The winners of last weekend's Road Rally were Alan Shaeffer and Steve Heistand. The Second place team was Mary Beth Brannan and Michael Chafkin. Tonya Snyder and Karen Walling came in a close third. A trophy was awarded to the first place team. Second and third place received dash plaques for their cars.

The rally consisted of 14 teams. The teams followed a 44 mile course. The particpants' only means of finding their way was a list of clues given out at the start of the rally. Points were awarded for the proper mileage along with the proper answers to questions, which could be found along the rally route. The course took approximately 2½ hours to complete.

The road rally ended at Sherwood's Catharsis lounge with a picnic and party for all participants.

The Auto Club would like to thank all road rally participants and workers who helped make Juniata's 1st Annual Road Rally a success.

From the Pen of. . .

Bizarrely connected, America acknowledges two tremendously impactful anniversaries this week: the forty year celebration of the end of World War II and the ten year humiliating evacuation of Saigon, South Vietnam, signaling the end of a war which questioned the very principles upon which this nation acted overseas. The resentment of a misuse of American power abroad is keenly felt not only by foreigners, but also by Americans. Therein lies the great paradox of WWII and the Vietnam War. While our politicians embarked on an insanely justified and misunderstood crusade, the public – especially those who were the leading candidates for military service – broke with stated national foreign policy to protest America's reason for involvement in Vietnam. In WWII, public opinion was resoundingly in favor of war. Out of WWII, America became the dominant power to counteract nations endangering our national security. The question arising out of the Vietnam War is what were our national interests, and did these national interests in Vietnam merit sacrificing 58,000 American lives? Many think not.

Historians and politicians overwhelmingly conclude that America must examine this dark period in our young history to avoid ever having to incur such pain, humility and loss of national cohesion. Opinions, however, in no way reach a unified conclusion; rather, there are several major hypotheses as to why America became bogged down in an area of the world not tied to our national interests, and in a conflict that was unwinable.

One theory asserts that the Executive branch over-extended its power consistently misleading and misinforming legislators and the public. This seems true when Secretary of Defense Clark Clifford, serving after Secretary McNamara in the Johnson Cabinet, discovered that LBJ's staff could not justify a request by General Westmoreland to increase American troop presence by 206,000. History also concludes that Nixon, while publicly proposing a strategy that would supposedly de-escalate America's involvement in the war, actually prolonged the war by secretly bombing peaceful Cambodia.

Another theory takes the opposite view that it was not Executive misuse of power, but Congressional indecision which caused America's defeat in South Vietnam. It is inferred that the Executive Branch, if allowed to over-exercise its constitutional power, would have brought on eventual victory. Former Secretary of State Kissinger maintaines that America's continuation of the war was justified because of the "peace" achieved in 1973. However, it is not apparent that an additional 21,000 American dead made the "peace" any more worthwhile than the peace that could have been made in 1969. Most disturbingly, this latter theory suggests that public opinion should have been "sidestepped" in order to reach some illustration goal conceived by policy-makers.

Yet another theory blames our entire governmental process for involving America in Vietnam. Proponents of the theory argue that all branches of government had accurate and up-to-date information, historical and logistical, during the height of the war. It was their calculated steps, knowing full well what the consequences might be, which replaced rational policy decisions with unrealistic visions of conquest.

Today, critics of American policy toward Nicaragua warn that the events in Nicaragua parallel our escalation to war in Vietnam. Just what is America's global responsibility? Are we to continue the doctrine of "containment" which called for involvement in Vietnam, or should we seek policy alternatives? These are hard questions for sure. But after the horror, expressed not only in American dead and wounded, but also in the utter devastation in human life, culture, and country of Vietnam and Cambodia, we as American citizens must continually pose these questions.

Responding to Dr. Berry's comments at the seminar will be James R. Donaldson, associate professor of economics and business administration at Juniata and Bonnie Plunket, assistant vice pesident and director of training at the Meridian Bank Corporation in Reading.

Many area bankers are expected to participate in the annual seminar which will be followed by a buffet dinner at the college.

Apple Man Entertains Children

by Steve Creps

The Juniata College Theater department has come up with another success in their spring production. Last weekend they performed Apple Man, a play about Johnny Appieseed. The biggest success was the Friday afternoon matinee.

Apple Man was performed for some 1400 schoolchildren from Huntingdon, Tyrone, and McAlevy's Fort schools on April 26. Due to the generous support of several area merchants each child was presented with an apple upon leaving the performance. These firms included AEL Warehouse Foods, Feagley's Produce, Huntingdon IGA Foodliner, Reeves, Parvin & Co., and Sheetz Quick Shopper.

The cast included Walt Cupit as John Chapman, Lisa Aurand as Arabella, Mary White as Trot, Cheryl Kimbrough as The Widow, Rob Boyer as the Sheriff, Mark Hewly as the Big Man, Molly Bagwell as Summer Sun, Jerry Camalleri as Chief, and John Petrovic as Bear. Caron-Lee Cheethan was the Costume Manager. Jeff Buttimer was the Lighting Manager. The play was under the direction of Luise Van Keuren.

Campus Housing Costs Rise Again

(CPS) – Students will pay more to live on campus next fall, thanks to rising utility and housing costs, increasing staff salaries and inflation rates, say campus housing officials around the nation.

Last year, dorm rates went up an average of four to seven percent, and observers say the same factors that forced up costs last year will increase 1985-86 dorm rates by about the same percentages.

"There's no definiate dorm trend," contends Paul Jahr, research committee chairman of the Association of College and University Housing Officers (ACUHO). "Each institution has its own demographics that determie rates."

"Dorms closing, opening, rates rising, lowering. They're probably all true." adds Jim Grimm, president of the College and University Housing Officers International and housing director at the University of Florida.

"There is no national trend," he concurs. "Rates are dependent on each institution and its enrollment standards."

Yet each institution's specific conditions seem to bring on dorm hikes whether enrollments rise or fall.

University of Tennessee officials, for example, predict enrollment will drop for the fourth consecutive year, thanks to tighter admissions requirements.

Because there will be fewer students, UT housing rayes will go up 5.5 percent next fall, says Residence Director Jim Grubb.

"The yearly increase for us is more related to the inflation trend," he explains. "In the future, we'll see increases staying at about four to six percent."

Meanwhile, Michigan State administrators anticipate the largest freshman enrollment in five years, and a six to seven percent increase in the rate of returning students.

But at Michigan State, more students mean "housing will still go up 2.9 perent," says Housing Officer Charles Gagliano.

"We're very proud it's below the inflation factor," he says. "It's one of the lowest increases in the nation."

Gagliano says higher enrollment won't offset the increasing costs of institutional maintenance.

Indeed, Penn State's rates will go up five percent next fall to cover increased utility and operating costs. School officials predict nearly 500 students won't be able to get into campus housing.

Harvard's housing costs will jump from $1,635 this year to $1,750 next year to help pay off a $50 million renovation, says housing officer Lisa Colvin.

Students at the universities of Oklahoma and Washington will pay nearly four percent more for housing next fall to cover salary and utility cost hikes.

And Western Michigan students will pay $176 more per year for room and board to cover food, phone, and supply cost adjustments. An additional $25 defrerred maintenance fee will be used to renovate residence halls.

At the University of Illinois-Urbana and New York's Ithaca College, housing cost hikes will pay for specific construction projects.

Despite widespread protest, UI-Urbana dorm residents will pay $24 extra a year to help pay for new dorm construction at the system's Chicago campus.

Ithaca students will pay an additional $62 per semester, nearly nine percent more than last year, for a new dorm built last year.

"The dorm cost is impacting on next year's housing cost," says Assistant Bursar Steve Schwan. "But another portion of the increase goes to operating costs."

Most students say the housing increases are fair, but they wish administrators would use some of the money generated by increased rates to improve the quality of dorm food.

"Last year the food and the prices were so bad that we had a student uprising," says Jeff Ward of the University of Washington. "It had the usual effect: a shuffling of management. But the food quality has since declined, and the prices are going up again."

"Prices are going up," adds UW student Lisa Steward. "But mostly they're fair. I think the dorms are fine."

"The rates are comparable to off-campus housing" says University of Houston student Kim Smerlinksi. "I live in the dorms because it's more convenient."

Housing officers say they're aware off-campus housing is more competitive with dormitory housing.

Sounds Of Spring Tomorrow

by Steve Creps

The sounds of spring will be in the air again Friday evening. The Juniata College Band will be performing its annual spring concert Friday evening at 6:00 p.m. on Detwiler Plaza. (In case of bad weather it will be held in Oller Hall at the same time.)

Under the director of Assoc. Prof. Ibrook Tower, the band will present a variety of music. Selections include "Music for the Royal Fireworks" by G.F. Handel, a classic Baroque piece. Other selections are "King Cotton" by J.P. Sousa, "Finale Symphony No. VIII" by Dvorak, "Marching Song" by Gustav Holst, and "The Blues", a medley of "Birth of the Blues", "Limehouse Blues", and "Blues in the Night."

The band is also planning for next fall's halftime shows and fall concert. Members will return to school a week early to prepare in a "Band Camp." Plans for the halftime show include the following songs and drills: "Sounds of the British Regiment", "Alexander's Ragtime Band", "Sing, Sing, Sing", and "MacArthur's Park." New members to the band or band front are welcome. More information is available by contacting Prof. Tower.

Ott Quilts On Display May 5-June 2

More than 20 colorful quilts will be on display in Juniata College's Shoemaker Galleries May 5 through June 2.

The quilts, part of the Holsinger-Ott collection, belong to Mrs. Kathryn H. Ott of Bethlehem, a 1959 Juniata graduate. All were sewn by four generations of Mrs. Ott's family, many of whom were Juniata graduates, and most of the quilts are more than 50 years old.

The exhibit will be open weekdays from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. and there is no admission charge. Shoemaker Galleries are located in Carnegie Hall, corner of Moore and 17th streets.

Bus Heads And Druts On Top In Co-Rec Volleyball

by Andy Hiscock

This spring the Intramural Volleyball program had a slow start, with confusion about the Intramural Hockey leagues that now share the Intramural gym for the same play. By now, everything has been ironed out, and the teams are fighting for play-off spots already in this abbreviated season. Like Intramural volleyball programs offerred in the past, there is an "A" league that allows overhand serving and spiking (so-alled "competitive") and a "B" league that does not allow these freedoms ("just for fun" league). After watching last week's action, I am convinced that some of the teams in the B league are not just out to have fun, but to take home a T-Shirt in the process.

Last week two league "A" matches were held. In the first match, "No Respect" gained a little by defeating "O.D.C.C." in two straight games (15-9) and (15-8). Jim Donaldson made a coupie of nice kills at the net while I was there, and Kathy Harwick had a solid serve. In the second "A" league game later in the week, "Bus Heads" also gave "O.D.C.C." a hard time beating them (15-7) and (15-4). Beth Hoppel was the "ringer" for "Bus Heads" at the net.

League "B" had a number of matches scheduled last week. Last Monday, "Last Chance" defeated "Merlin's Minstrels" (15-0) and (15-13). Dave Johns and Bob Ryder teamed up at the net for the victors. Also on Monday, "Power Racks" beat "Utopian Society" (15-5) and (15-7) with the help of good play from Brad Whitsel and Jenny Kauffaman. "Druts" also defeated "Fleshpiles II" (15-8), (15-5) with solid play from both Marianne Shipp and Alan Wolf. Last Tuesday, two more matches were scheduled."Cave Dwellers" took "Merlin's Minstrels" in three games (9-15), (15-2), and (11-3). Kim Turner set up Jim Neal for a couple of good points, "Druts" beat "Utopian Society" (15-6), (15-8), Maryjo Rizzo had a nice serve for the "Druts". Thursday's matches saw "Fleshpiles II" come out on top of "Merlin's Minstrels" (15-8), (15-8), and "Druts" defeat "Last Chance" (15-3), and (17-15).

The hightlight of the afternoon was in the triple jump pit, as senior Peggy Evans gualified for the NCAA Div. III Nationals with a jump of over 36 feet. Freshman Alexia Marks and junior Gino Perri have also qualified.

Co-Rec Softball Finally In Full Swing

by Andy Hiscock

The Spring Co-Rec Softball action is in full swing. The 15 teams are split up into two flights that will send their best teams into the play-offs against one another. Now that the weather has begun to cooperate, the teams can get out and try to make-up all of the weather postponed games that we had from earlier in the season.

Last week, a solid hitting performance by Paul Young and a good day in the field for Sherri Kidd helped boost "Spinning Ducks" over "The Runs" 9-7. The last inning provided a lot of scoring, with the winners getting three runs in the top half, and the losers falling short with three more runs in the bottom half.

"Thunderbirds" beat "It's Better Strange" in a pitcher's duel 18-12. Again, the last inning provided plenty of fireworks, with the winners picking up 5 more runs, and the losers falling short with 3 in the bottom of the last inning. Matt Siegel brought his bat and provided some monstrous shots for "Strange". Later in the week "Spinning Ducks" kept rolling with a forfeit win over "Gone Fishing"; who must have since they never came down for the game. "Grandslammers" squeezed by "The Runs" in a close 17-16 victory. "Grandslamers were able to blank their opponent in the bottom of the last inning to maintain their slim lead. Carl Fekula and Beth Gallagher had good all around games for the victors. "Hardliners" cruised to a victory over "Independent Variables" 15-9. "I.V." added two more runs in the bottom of the last inning, but they couldn't overcome the deficit the "Hardliners" had built up. In another game, "Arthroscopes" defeated "Somebody" in the rain at Muddy Run field to maintain their undefeated 3-0 record.

Men's Baseball AWAY vs. Lock Haven

Dave Crane (above) gets set to rip while Dave Murphy (below) rounds first on the way to one of many recent Juniata baseball extra base hits. The Indians missed the Middle Atlantic Conference playoffs, but are hopeful of getting a shot at a NCAA Div. III at-large berth, if they can win their final five games and finish with 17 wins. The Tribe currently sports a 12-6 record, and has won four in a row including a doubleheader sweep of Wilkes last Saturday.

Indian Bats Alive Win 4 of 5 Last Week

by Lauralee Snyder

Juniata kept up its winning ways last week as the baseball team won four of its five starts.

The only loss was to York in a close 12-11 decision. York took advantage of a number of Juniata errors to win on unearned runs. Dave Murphy was the Juniata hitting star, chalking up a triple and home run in a two-for-three afternoon.

At Lebanon Valley on Thursday the Indians won both games of a doubleheader despite missing several starters due to academic commitments.

Dave Lesser pitched an outstanding first game to win 9-3. Rich Howey led the offensive attack with a two-run homer. Brian Fornadel and Chris Williams both contributed extra-base hits, while freshman Dan Sunderland went three-for-four.

Juniata ran away with the second game, 14-5. Ed Fee made his first career pitching start for the Indians and did a fine job. Mike Smith entered in relief in the bottom of the fourth with a 4-4 score.

In the final three innings the Tribe pulled away, scoring ten runs to secure the victory. Freshman Dan Webb homered, while Sunderland kept the hot bat, going a perfect four-for-four.

Juniors Rich Howey and Steve Poska went five-of-ten and four-for-nine, respectively, while also playing solid defense.

All in all, Juniata pounded out 32 hits for the day.

On Saturday, a key grudge match against Wilkes turned into clean Juniata sweep.

In game one Dave Musser pitched extremely well and the Indians took advantage of many Colonel miscues on the way to a 7-3 win.

Howey came up with some clutch hitting in the sixth to drive in two runs and give the Indians the four run cushion heading into the final inning.

Wilkes threatened, but the first triple play in Juniata history ended the game as Poska stabbed a 3-2 line drive and threw to second for the second out before Scott Cole tossed to first to make the record books.

Game two was no contest as 20 JC players saw action, and the Indians unleashed a 17 hit attack on the way to a 20-2 drubbing of the visitors.

At one point, Dave Murphy was the only senior in the line-up as the Tribe underclassmen shined through.

The substitutes broke the game open for good in the sixth as Robbie Russell went one-for-one, Mike Culver for two-of-two and Vince Anselmo tripled to put the lead to double figures.

Poska carried a powerful bat once again, getting four hits in game two.

Overall, aggressive baserunning, timely stolen bases and solid hitting led to the overpowering of Wilkes.

Since returning from Easter break the JC sluggers have won six of seven, or eight of their last 11 starts. The Tribe sports a 12-6 record with five games to play.

Elizabethtown and Susquehanna tied for the championship of the league, each with three losses.

The Indians play their final home game of the season against Gettysburg on Wednesday, May 8, at 1 p.m.

"Sports Corner"

by Joe Scialabba

The football and basketball teams are in the midst of what should be a banner recruiting season, meaning some new faces next fall and winter to help the Juniata climb back up the Middle Atlantic Conference ladder. With all the returning talent, the outlook could be very bright.

The spring has brought many surprises, including the success of the golf team and the now sizzling pace of the baseball team.

Speaking of sizzling, how 'bout them Flyers and Sixers? Both are hot at the right time as the NHL and NBA playoffs slowly wind down. For those in western PA, the Pittsburgh Penquins finished last in the division and have temporarily suspended operations, citing losses approaching the ten million dollar mark over the past two seasons.

Adding to the misery in the Steel City is the slow start of the Pirates, sharing last place with cross-state rival Philadelphia. The great Tekulve for Holland relief trade may work out for both teams, since both pitchers have a slight chance of one or two more good seasons.

Finally, a solemn goodbye is in order for Yankee great Yogi Berra. Yogi got the word from George over the weekend, and that famous bar room brawler, Billy Martin, got another call to the Big Apple.

Linksters Drive To Club Record

by Joe Scialabba

The Juniata College golf team put together a record effort last Thursday afternoon at Standing Stone Golf Club as the Indians rolled to a 383-412 win over Gettysburg. Five Juniata scores in the 70's led to the lowest team total in recent years.

The Tribe, who finished the regular season with a 6-2 record after losing two almost sure wins over Albright and Wilkes on Tuesday due to rain, was led by senior Mark Loeper and junior Steve Borza, both firing over par 75's. Joe Scialabba snaked home a 60-foot putt on the final hole for a 76 while Bob Neumar shot a steady 78. Mark Howanitz had a solid 79.

Tom Cancelmo and Jim Armstrong had 82 and 81, respectively, in the season finale, both non-scoring roles.

The Indians, who sported the best record on the Juniata links since 1954, hope to finish in the top ten at this weekend's Middle Atlantic Conference tournament at Shawnee-on-the-Delaware. Co-coaches Tilden and Stroman will enter Loeper, Borza, Cancelmo and Neumar, along with either Armstrong or Scialabba.

Th Juniata golf team hopes to keep their swings in form this weekend at the Middle Atlantic Conference Tournament. Despite lack of great form, this Indian linkster gets lucky with a putt once in a while.

Lady Netters Into Final Week At 4-2

by Joe Scialabba

The Juniata women's tennis team enters this final week of the season with a 4-2 record, with only a date with Wilson, who got lost on the way to Huntingdon last week, remaining.

The Indians, under coach Nancy Latimore, got past hosting York by a 6-3 score last week.

Leanne Egolf, Ginny Krall and Sue King all took straight set victories in singles, while Marie Rose won in three sets. Kim Detwiler and Laura Beck lost close matches.

In doubles, Egolf and Rose, and Krall and Detwiler combined for pro set wins, 8-3 and 8-5, respectively. Debbie Little and Lauralee Snyder lost a close 6-8 decision.

The Tribe hopes to finish strong at the Middle Atlantic Conference tournament this weekend. Juniata will send Egolf and Rose in the singles competition with Krall and Detwiler in the doubles.

Juniata Names "Woman Of The Year" And "Man Of The Year" For 1985

by Tracey DeBlase

Lisa K. Greiss of York, a senior occupational therapy major, was honored as Juniata College's "Woman of the Year" during the annual May Day breakfast held May 1.

In all, 18 Juniata students were recognized on the basis of their cordiality and poise, personal competence and acheivement in the arts, academics, sports and other fields; service to the college, community, or both; and self-determination and responsibility.

The "Woman of the Year" was escorted by the Juniata "Man of the Year," Douglas C. Fleming of Tyrone, a senior accounting major. Members of the court included eight "Juniata Women," two from each class, and eight senior "Juniata Men."

Greiss is currently a senior class officer. She has been active for four years in many college events.

A 1981 graduate of West York High School, Greiss is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Greiss of Emerald Ave., York.

Fleming has been active in college athletics during his four years at Juniata. He is currently a Resident Hall Assistant and was recently named to "Who's Who Among Students in American Universities and Colleges."

A 1981 graduate of Tyrone High School, Fleming is the son of Mr. and Mrs. James L. Fleming of Tyrone.

Evelyn Weld, a member of the food service department at Juniata College was the guest of honor for the May Day breakfast. Weld has been employed in food service at Juniata for 10 years.

The guest speaker at this year's breakefast was Ellen S. Wallace, Esq. of Tyrone, a 1977 graduate of Juniata College.

Upon graduation from Juniata College, Wallace earned her Juris Doctor degree from Dickinson College. She worked as the Director of Planned Giving for Juniata College before opening her own law practice in Tyrone.

Ms. Wallace advised students to "set goals for themselves and then strive to reach those goals."

"Being cognizant of those around you, striving towards goals and accepting occasional help are all important keys to success," said Wallace.

The eight students selected as "Juniata Women for 1985" are seniors Elizabeth A. Gallagher of Harleysville and Patricia Renwick of Mt. Airy, MD; juniors Kelly A. Bauer of Pennsburg and Cheryl E. Kimbrough of Lansing, IL; sophomores Ann M. Cameron of Hershey and Danielle M. Rupp of Red Lion; and freshman Angela L. VanDerau of McVeytown and Sue A. Gulla of Fayettville.

The other eight "Juniata Men for 1985" are: Glen Bouder of Bethlehem; Carl Brango of Phoenixville; Mark Kirchgasser of Media; Andrew Marsh of Hanover; Richard Mrosky of Armagh; Kenneth Opipery of Pittsburgh and David Wagner also of Pittsburgh.

Students Research Huntingdon Area

by Kathy Crowley

Under the direction of Huntingdon's Main Street Manager, Anita Sather, the relations between the town and college are steadily improving. Her ultimate goal is to have the two work together on a regular basis. She feels that each has a lot to offer the other and both would benefit from such a relationship.

As a step in this direction, eight Juniata College students are working with Anita on several useful projects. Chris Muha, a senior, designed a marketing brochure concerning the Huntingdon area. This was the first condensed form of such information and will be used as a promotional tool to draw in new businesses. Kathy Crowley, also a senior, is currently serving an internship with Anita. She is designing a downtown business directory and is helping with the promotion of both the Community Clean-up Week and Community Festival. She is also working with Kathleen Biddle from WHUN/WRLR on a promotional survival kit to be distributed to Juniata College students next fall.

Two groups of Professor Jim Donaldson's Marketing Research students are working with Anita on their term projects. Kim Detwiler, Nina McKelvey and Stephany Porter are analyzing the students' attitudes, perceptions and awareness of the downtown shopping area. According to Kim, their "objective is to understand what the current downtown image is in the college students' eyes." They will then attempt to "increase the students awareness of the downtown as a distinct, indentifiable area for shopping". The second group, consisting of Tom Trent, Tom Hildebrandt, and Matt Siegel, are preparing a 'market basket'. This is an analysis of the price of goods typically bought by Huntingdon residents in Huntingdon, as compared to the price of those same goods in State College and Altoona. Their goal is to provide Anita and the area merchants with the results, which they can later put to use.

As is evident, these projects will be very beneficial not only to the downtown businesses but also to Huntingdon in general. More importantly, the projects show that the town and Juniata College can, and should, share their rseources and work together. This could be a valuable relationship.

Cloister Team Is Victorious

by Ginny Krall

Juniata's second "Punch Bowl" title was easily captured by a team from Cloister on April 30 in the Sports & Recreation Center.

This team, which consited of Mike Wojcik, Mark Gruosso and Scott Eberhardt, went into the final round of play against the East Houses representative team of Michelle Sheilds, Caren Ogrisek, Joe Sciallabba and Dave Challenger.

Quick answers along with extensive knowledge of alcohol related facts lead the Cloister men to a blow out victory over their opponents.

Teams from North, Lesher, and Tussey-Terrace also participated in this CASE (Committee on Alcohol Studies and Education) sponsored event.

Joe Hiznay once again served as the offical Master of Ceremonies. He was assisted by a judging panel comprised of Jane Brown, Jay

Internships Are A Valuable Experience

The graduating class of 1986 is facing one of the greatest obstacles and the most important decision in their lives. The class of 1985 will face this very same obstacle next year. What I am referring to here is — your first job. Your first job is the one in your field that you anxiously anticipate after receiving your bachelors degree.

In order to land the job you want, there is a key element that will assist you greatly. This element is an internship. By participating in an internship, you can acquire that work experience and learn hands-on what your prospective career field is really like. Internships are now offered in almost every career area by employers who recognize the importance of on-the-job training.

The first task in obtaining an internship is finding one suitable for you. Start by looking in the career planning and placement office for internship directories, which list internships in all fields.

Discuss your goals with your academic adviser. He or she may have on file a list of internships in which other students have participated in the past. Also check with your adviser about getting college credit for your internship.

A third source of internship leads is professional publications. Organizations such as the Society of Professional Journalists, Association of MBA Executives publish newsletters that often list internship opportunities.

Once you have obtained an internship, there are guidelines to making it a beneficial experience. Agree upon a contract with your internship sponsor to spell out daily work duties, duration of the internship and evaluation procedures. Most importantly, keep a daily journal to record your work hours, work-related activities and personal observations to document your internship.

Letters to the Editor

Dear Editor,

I would like to address the question that has been raised about the order that the men and women finish in the May Day elections.

After the votes are counted, the top two women from the Freshman, Sophmore and Junior classes and the second and third highest vote getters from the Senior class are given escorts. Only the Man and Woman of the Year are assured that they received the highest number of votes.

During the May Day breakfast, the order within each class that the women represent is not necessarily the order in which they finished in the voting. The same goes for the eight men escorts. The first one announced is not necessarily the man who received the least number of votes.

I regret any inconvenience that this misunderstanding has caused.

Sincerely,
Kasey Coulter
Chairperson,
May Day Committee

Dear Editor,

I would like once again to thank C.A.S.E., the sponsors, judges and V103 for making the recent Punchbowl a huge success. As a participant, I found it very imformative and recommend its continuance in the future. However, I recommend that revisions be made in the area of awards to contestants. The food coupons were an excellent gesture by C.A.S.E. but an oversight on their part allowed these coupons to be outdated. The food coupons were expired long ago.

Sincerely,
Mark Gruosso

Last week I went to the library to get some books I needed. It was late. The library was nearly empty. I went up to the front desk to check out my books. The student librarian put down his homework and looked at me strangely, as if he were thinking; "Why the hell are you checking these out? Why don't you just walk out of here like a normal student?" I felt stupid and turned red but it was too late; I handed him my I.D.

I think it's time for a security system in the library. Currently Juniata employs the "we have honest students" philosophy in regard to the library. I think it reflects the "we have ignorant administrators" philosophy I personally subscribe to. If we look at another building on campus, the Sports Plus Center, we find the "honest students" philosophy is not employed; instead student security workers are employed. (I guess the student body can not be trusted to carry in their white-soled shoes unsupervised).

Further into the Sports Plus Center we come to the equipment room where another student worker is employed. Now under the "honest students" philosophy we should be given towels and basketballs and things without questions. Being the honest students we are anything we borrow will be returned. Right? This is not the case; perhaps basketballs are worth more than books.

Lots of students go to the library only to find materials they need are missing. "Oh, that book must have feet," the librarian says with a smile. So what does the student do? Drive to Penn State? Rely on other sources for his research paper? No, the student probably becomes disenchanted and heads down to the gym, where, knowing that at least the basketballs will be there, he can work off his frustrations.

The problem now is that people have no reason to check out books. Even honest students with every intention of returning books just walk out. It's too easy to say "Oh, I'll bring them back later. It's just a hassle checking them out. Besides, if something does happen I don't want to pay a fine."

So way did I check my books out? Probably because mother is a librarian; she'll be glad to know that she brought her son up right.

ANNOUNCEMENT:

Effective immediately! The Accounting Office will be requesting identification before cashing checks.

Guest Commentary

Dr. Jay Buchanan

A few years ago, two researchers at the University of Chicago introduced the construct of psychological hardiness. They referred to this construct also as stress resistance.

As we head into the last few weeks of the term and begin to think about final exams (potential stresser fot most of us), it seems quite appropriate to discuss what it is to be stress resistant or psychologically hardy.

Suzanne Kobasa and Salvatore Maddi contend that stress-resistant people possess a set of attitudes that makes them more resilient to stress. The attitudes include an openness to change, a feeling of involvement, and a sense of control.

Let's briefly examine some differences between hardy personalities and not-so-hardy personalities.

First of all, hardy people generally view change as a challenge and not as a threat as less hardy people might. Hardy people are more willing to take some risks but the risks do not represent extremes or excessive behaviors.

Additionally, Kobasa and Maddi suggest that psychologically hardy people are much more likely to transform events to their advantage. As an example, psychologically hardy people might view finals as a challenge, while less hardy people might see finals as a threat.

Individuals who are low on hardiness tend to engage in avoidance behaviors. They may sleep more, watch more TV and perhaps drink more than hardier colleagues.

Secondly, psychologically hardy persons possess a sense of commitment to and involvement in their lives. According to Kobasa and Maddi, commitment can be viewed as the opposite of alienation. In other words, hardy individuals "have engaged life rather than hanging back on the fringes," say the two researchers.

While less hardy individuals may react to situations and events, psychologically hardy persons tend to be more proactive.

The third aspect of psychological hardiness has to do with a sense of control, that is, the extent to which we believe that what we do can make a difference. Put another way, there is the belief that we can have an impact on our environment.

Feeling that we are in control is the opposite of feeling powerless. What we must learn to do is to separate those things over which we have control from those over which we do not have control. Once we have determined this, we can invest our time and energy in those situations over which we have control.

Psychological hardiness is consistent with existential psychology in that both recognize that a feeling of engagement and control over one's life is essential to mental health.

All of us can learn to be more resistant to stress. We can alter our attitudes and outlook so that stress can be facilitating and not necessarily debilitating. Next week we will discuss how to be more psychologically hardy.

Chris Carney participates in the Coffeehouse Lip Sync contest (with his Mick Jagger imitation) that was held in Catharsis Lounge last Wednesday night. All the acts put on an outstanding performance for the capacity crowd.

Campus Spotlight

Juniata Man and Woman of the Year Doug Fleming and Lisa Greiss

by Amy Smith

And the winners are . . . ! Lisa Greiss and Doug Fleming were named Woman and Man of the Year for the Class of 85 at the annual May Day breakfast last Wednesday, May 1. They were recognized for their academic achievement, personality, and contributions to Juniata's campus.

Greiss, a biology major from York, Pa., has been an asset to Juniata during her four years here. She was elected to serve as class secretary during her junior and senior years. She has been an active member of various Centerboard committees and has been involved with the Social Service and Circle-K Clubs and the Juniatian reporting staff. In addition, she spent four years as a Juniata Cheerleader and was voted co-captain her senior year. She will graduate with a B.S. in Biology and continue her education next year at Thomas Jefferson University to earn a degree in Occupational Therapy.

Fleming, of Tyrone, has dedicated much of his time to the betterment of the residential life of the students on campus. He was chosen to serve as a Resident Assistant in North Resident Hall for the past two years. He has participated in both varsity and intramural sports and has served as a member of the Juniata Executive and Varsity J Clubs. After receiving his B.S. in Accounting, Fleming will reside in Mechanicsburg where he will begin his career as an accountant for the Ralston-Purina Company.

MAC Tourney Weekend

Golfers Finish 5th; Perri Shot Champ

by Joe Scialabba

The Juniata golf team played steady last weekend at the Middle Atlantic Conference Championships at Shawnee-On-The-Delaware, and finished fifth in the 21-team field.

Franklin and Marshall was no surprise in taking the championship with a two-day total of 627.

The Indians finished at a fine 657 score, only five shots behind a three-way logjam for second place among King's, Scranton and FDU-Madison.

Juniata was led by senior standout Mark Loeper who finished tenth in the field of 105 golfers. Loeper fired a two-day total of 160 over the par-72 layout, shooting a 79 on Saturday good for two shots off the lead. Classmate Bob Neumar played two solid rounds, needing only a hot putter to challenge for the top.

Juniors Steve Borza, who finished fourth a year ago, and tom Cancelmo had good weekends, while sophomore Jim Armstrong made his MAC debut a successful one.

Co-Coaches Stroman and Tilden can have nothing but high hopes for next spring, as seven of the top ten golfers from this season will return to try to better this year's impressive 7-2 record, the best since 1954.

World News Update

by Beth Gallagher

BRADFORD, ENGLAND —A victory celebration in a city soccer stadium quickly turned into a nightmare as flames engulfed the stands, injuring 211 and killing 52. The blaze began 10 minutes before half-time and swept from one end of the stands to the other in a matter of minutes, making it the worst fire in British soccer history. Government officials continue their search for the 18 still missing and for the clues as to what started the blaze.

PHILADEPHIA — Philadelphia polie erected a four-block barricade on Sunday around a west Philadelphia house, believed to be the dwelling for 6 adult MOVE members and 12 children. Approximately 150 policemen were planted near the home, in an effort to evict the MOVE from the house. MOVE members were evicted from Powelton Village in August 1978 after a savage gun battle during which one police officer was killed. Nine MOVE members were convicted of the murder and are serving prison sentences. MOVE, a back to nature group, has ignored sanitary standards and repeated complaints by neighbors. Neighbors have also complained that the MOVE assualted and threatened them.

WASHINGTON — The newly Senate-passed 1986 budget travels to the House this week for more sculpturing and debate over the freeze on Social benefits. The plan aims to trim government spending by $56 billion next year and a projected $300 billion over the next 3 years. In its current form, the budget has spared some favorite programs from the ax, including Amtrak, the Job Corps and the Small Business Administration. Both Republicans and Democrats believe the decision to freeze next year's Social Security benefits will be reversed in the House.

Dr. Bryce Jordan, Penn State U. President will be the 1985 Commencement Speaker. Jordan, a native of New Mexico, has received his bachelors and masters degrees in music from the University of Texas and his Ph.D. in historical musicology from the University of North Carolina. During the ceremony on May 26, Jordan will receive his honorary Doctor of Laws degree in recognition of his 36 years of service in higher education.

Dr. Jordan To Address Graduates Of 1985

Dr. Bryce Jordan, president of The Pennsylvania State University, will deliver the address at Juniata College's 106th Commencement Sunday, May 26.

Dr. Jordan took office as the 14th president of Penn State on July 1, 1983. Prior to that, he served two years as executive vice chancellor for academic affairs of the University of Texas System, and was president of the University of Texas at Dallas from 1971-81.

Born in New Mexico and raised in Texas, Dr. Jordan received his bachelors and masters degrees in music from the University of Texas at Austin and his Ph.D in historical musicology from the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. He began his teaching career at Hardin-Simmons University and joined the Uniersity of Maryland faculty in 1954. He went on to serve the university as director of graduate studies in music and acting head of the music department.

Dr. Jordan taught music at the University of Kentucky for two years before joining the University of Texas faculty in 1965. From 1968-70, Dr. Jordan served as vice president of student affairs at the Austin campus and then was named president ad interim of the campus. A year later, he assumed the post of president at the University of Texas at Dallas.

Dr. Jordan has been active in numerous national and civic organizations. He served as president of the Association of Upper Level Colleges and Universities, was on the Executive Committee of the Commission of Colleges of the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools, and has been active in the American Association of State Colleges and Universities and the National Commission on Higher Education Issues.

During Juniata's Commencement, Dr. Jordan will be awarded an honorary Doctorate of Laws degree in recognition of his 36 years of service in higher education.

The Baccalaureate service will begin at 10 a.m. on the Oller Hall lawn. The featured speaker will be the Rev. Dr. Robert W. Bouder, pastor of the First Baptist Church of Bethlehem. Dr. Bouder's son, Glen, is a member of the graduating class and past president of the Student Government.

The Commencement ceremony will begin at 2 p.m. on the lawn in front of Oller Hall. In the event of rain, the ceremony will be held in Memorial Gymnasium in the Kennedy Sports & Recreation Center.

Grads Remain Jobless

Half of this spring's college grads won't have jobs when they graduate, according to a new survey by a Chicago-based employment agency.

But college placement experts caution that the survey — which has been released to media around the country — "sensationalizes" what is a typicl occurence in the job market as many students intentionally leave campus without employment.

The study takes into account over one million students at nearly 100 colleges across the country, says James Challenger, president of the Challenger, Gray, and Christmas placement service in Chicago.

Based on an analysis of the 172,000 graduating seniors at the schools surveyed, Challenger says, "it is likely that over half of all students who will graduate this spring will not have jobs when they leave school, and are entering the job market with non-business skills.

The problem, he feels, is that college placement officers aren't adequately addressing student's job hunting needs.

"Only a little over one-third of the college graduates were as-

Raft Regatta '85 Was Best Ever

Now that the student body has survived the Raft Regatta '85, we can look back in retrospect. Raft Regatta '85 exceeded all our expectations. With 120 rafts and approximately 1,050 people sailing down the Juniata River, Regatta '85 is believed to be the biggest and most well-received ever.

One would think that over 1,000 college students participating would make for one "grand fiasco." Just the opposite was true. Matt Siegel and Dave Peters, Co-Chairmen of the Raft Regatta Committee, ran perhaps the best organized and smoothest Regatta in years. Siegel commends the Blue army for being above and beyond the call of duty in preparations and hauling rafts to and from the river. John Hardy, the liaison between the Blue army and the Raft Regatta Committee, did an outstanding job.

The administration spoke favorably about the outcome of the Regatta. Specifically, Dean Tilden and Julie Keehner were both impressed with the smooth organization and the student behavior

Besides the administration, staff, Blue army and the Raft Regatta Committee, there are others who deserve plaudits. Quality, Budget and Raystown Beverages all cooperated in a keg return policy that worked very well. Raystown Beverage also donated three trophies that were awarded to the first raft to finish, the most outrageous raft and the raft that didn't make it. Owens Corning Fiberglass and Meade Corporations made pallets available to students, free of charge.

Thanks to the efforts of a dedicated and hard-working Raft Regatta Committee this year, there are no foreseen problems with the continuing tradition of Raft Regatta at Juniata College.

Letters to the Editor

Dear Editor,

Regarding Mark Royer's comments about missing books in the libaray: I personally feel very badly for students who walk out of the library in frustration because a book or magazine that they need is missing. I hope that no librarian here or anywhere else was ever so insensitive to say, "that book must have feet." If we sometimes seem to be apathetic, I can assure you we are not, we are even more frustrated than you are, because we deal with this problem frequently. However, instead of complaining about the lack of security, students can help us with our missing book problem by checking out the books that they want to use (is it really that much trouble?). Just remember how you feel whan a book you need is missing.

Ruth M. Shipley
Science Librarian

Dear Editor,

This letter is in regard to the 1985 Kvasir which recently came out. I personally was very disappointed. NOT because of the quality but rather because of the 'selections' made. I was unaware of the fact that the Kvasir was a magazine in which only the editors and their personal friends received publication. I was under the impression that it was a literary magazine for the students.

I, myself, did submit some of my own work, 4 pieces to be exact, but it is not a matter of their not being published. It is a matter of the selection process. If "there were so many submissions" that it was "difficult for (the editors) to decide upon" which contributions would be published, why is it that so few of the selected articles were written by people other than the editorial staff? (Quoted from a letter to the Contributors from Byron Shen, Editor-In-Chief) If anyone would care to notice, out of the 22 selected items in the Kvasir, 6 were submitted by the President and Editor-in-Chief Byron Shen. Four were by Sherri Reed, another editor. A total of nine submissions were published which belonged to non-editorial authors.

I shall refrain from making criticisms on the work itself for that is not my purpose. But I do criticize the selection process and the editorial staff. Byron Shen stated in his letter to the contributors "the one criterion which out-weighed all others in our selection was the merit of material." If this is so, then being one of the editors certainly improves the merit of one's work.

Sincerely
Sharon K. Dotts
Class of 1986

Dear Editor,

After a somewhat exasperating day of shuffling to and from the accounting and registrar's offices, I feel compelled to share a few meaningful words.

I suppose the newly installed computer system in the accounting office is to blame for most of the problems in billing. Yet, when I was mistakingly charged for a "computer use fee" this term where I never even logged onto the computer, I was prompted to investigate. After careful scrutiny, I discovered that I had been charged 5 times for the use on the computer for just 2 terms. ($25 instead of $10) The $5 charges were disguised under the term "special course fee" which, for all practical purposes, is the same thing as a computer use fee.

Now the 3 extra charges are really no great monetary loss. However, the principle of the matter forced me to ponder the situation. In the words of President Frederick M. Binder, the Juniata liberal arts education has taught me to ask "Why?" So I'm asking it: Why was I charged 3 times more than necessary?

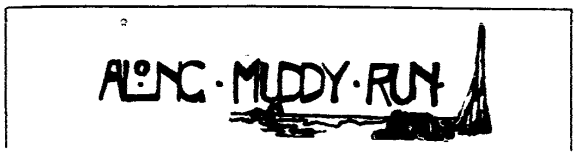
Perhaps it was plain human error — probably just an oversight. Ah, but what a convenient oversight for the college! Let's see, if only 600 students were overcharged $5 and that money earned a 10% rate of return . . . a rather profitable mistake!

As these thought processes raced through my head, I found myself asking over and over: How many times have I been overcharged in the past and not known it because I never had a reason to question the bill? The answer to that, I'll never know.

Although the idea of throwing money out the window repulsed me, it also triggered a new sense of responsibility. From now on, whether it be at Juniata or elsewhere, I will scrutinize not only my bills, but all correspondence, a little more than I previously did.

Indeed, I would suggest that all underclassmen be more astute than they are, and than I was, in their dealings with Juniata.

Sincerely,
Beth Gallagher



by Mark Royer

I was going to end my Juniatian career with a fake column, maybe a single sentence like: "Mark Royer, being a senior of sound mind and body, hereby blows off this, his last Muddy Run column, as a symbolic and practical gesture."

Then I reconsidered. After all, this is one last chance to bitch about things . . . er, ah, provide constructive criticism on important issues.

I was hoping the track would be finished by the time I left JC; the only thing it's good for now is bicycling. Why they started the project with no plans or money to complete it is beyond me (see last week's column—ignorant administration philosophy).

Hasn't Jay Buchanan done enough "Guest Commentaries?" His column seems to appear every week, I think they should give him his own, official column. It would certainly look better on his resume. They could call it "Jay's Corner" or "Maintaining Your Sanity."

Too bad Dr. Binder is leaving before Juniata achieves "Ivy League" status. There is hope for the future though. If you look at the stone outside Lesher you will notice moss and lichen growing on it. A far cry from ivy, true, but at least it's a start (though I've never heard of a "Lichen League" school).

It appears that I will graduate single. I had a poor response to the wife want ad from a couple months ago. I think I took the wrong approach. What I should have said is: "I've got so much money I don't know what to do with it, I can only drive one car at a time so the Mercedes usually just sits. I wish I had someone to share my fortune with."

Some people commented on my exclusion of New Jersey girls from being considered as potential wives. In fact one girl accosted me at a party, threatening to take me to Jersey and show me around. The situation looked bad until I said: "I think the guys next door have five gallons of mint chocolate-chip ice cream" She ran one way—I ran the other.

As this is the last paper of the year I'm tempted to say something nasty and outrageous about people and things I don't like. Nobody will have a chance to respond in print until the Juniatian comes out next fall, and by then I'll be long gone. In fact I could be just about anywhere; anywhere that is except New Jersey.

Guest Commentary

Dr. Jay Buchanan

Last week we discussed the construct of psychological hardiness. To refresh your memory, we stated that it consists of three Cs: change, commitment and control.

Hardy people are open to change (they view change as a challenge and not a threat), have a feeling of involvement and commitment (opposite of alienation) and generally feel in control of their lifespace (as opposed to feeling powerless).

Persons who are psychologically hardy (and we can all learn to be more hardy) are more resilient to stress, and thus are better able to handle the potential stressors so ubiquitous in our environment.

The research of Kobosa and Maddi suggests that students who are low on hardiness tend to be less committed to school, have less control over their grades, and are less willing to accept an academic challenge.

How can we learn to be more hardy? Suzanne Kobasa offers these suggestions:

• Restructure the distressful situation. Think about how you could have handled it more effectively. Talking to someone who seems to cope better than you do can prove very beneficial. Perhaps a friend, a special professor, or one of your advisors can offer some insight into how he/she has learned to deal with particularly stressful situations.

• Focusing is a second technique aimed at helping us to become more hardy. Developed by psychologist, Eugene Gendlin, focusing is tuning into what your body is saying. As an example, persistent and constant lower backache, upset stomach, headache and/or a sore neck may be the body's way of saying that something is wrong, that is, we are not coping effectively. Kobasa suggests that we mentally review the situation(s) that might be stressful and that we ask ourselves questions like "What's keeping me from feeling terrific today?"

• A third technique is called compensating through self-improvement. Many times we are confronted with stressors that we cannot possibly avoid (impending death, illness). We must learn to distinguish between those things that we can control from those that we cannot control. Kobasa suggests that we can regain control by taking on new challenges. By doing so, we can reassure ourselves that we can still cope.

Since this is the last article of the year, allow me to wish all undergraduates a pleasant, relaxing and relatively stress-free summer. To the graduates, best wishes for success in the job market and in professional or graduate school.

College Students Susceptible to 'Burnout'

Experts know workers in high-stress jobs experience occupational burnout, but Michigan State researchers say college students go through identical "lack of energy and spirit."

"When you start out, you have all kinds of aspirations," says MSU Psychology Professor Ralph Levine. But, "in college, you're not told about paper work and the actual drudgery of the job" especially during senior year and graduate school.

Ed. Dept. Officials Resign over Handicapped Student Issue

Department aides Eileen Gardner and Lawrence Uzzell resigned after a Senate threat to stop their salaries and Secretary William Bennet's condemnation of Gardner's remarks about handicapped students.

In a 1983 report, Gardner wrote that education spending for handicapped students "selfishly drained resources from the normal school population and most probably weakened the quality of teaching."

Graduation Ceremonies Regain Popularity

After years of student disinterest, cap and gown manufacturers report increasing participation in graduation exercises from kindergarten through grad. school.

"Orders this year indicate students and faculty not only want to participate, they are seeking ways to make the event more memorable" with an emphasis on color and pageantry, says Ted Beach of Collegiate Cap and Gown.

Stanford Students Urge Playboy PAC 10 Boycott

About 20 members of Students Opposed to Pornography picketed the hotel where Playboy photographer David Chan is interviewing Stanford women who want to pose for the magazine's October "Girls of the Pac 10" issue.

"We go to universities all the time," Chan says. "We never come up dry. The word 'Playboy' is still magic to most people."

The magazine focuses on one collegiate conference each fall, featuring its athletic teams and its scantily-clad or naked coeds.

A recent USC survey shows more than one-fifth of the university's 1982 freshman class dropped out before the end of their sophomore year

Persecution in Iran: The Baha'i of Iran

by Cindy Duick

Nearly 200 members of a minority religion in Iran have been martyred for their faith since 1979. Over 700 are presently imprisoned, subject to torture and execution, burdened economically by denial of employment and cancellation of legally earned pensions. All members of this religion have been dismissed from government jobs and are compelled to repay all salaries earned during government service on pain of imprisonment. Many have been driven from their homes, expelled from primary school, high school and universities. All their holy places and properties in Iran have been confiscated or destroyed.

These persecuted people are the Baha'i of Iran. The Iranian government's actions have been termed "a deliberate campaign of genocide against the members of the Baha'i faith." The Baha'is are Iran's largest religious minority with 300,000 members. The faith was founded in Iran (Persia) in the mid-19th century and has 3 million adherents worldwide, including 100,000 American Baha'is.

The Baha'i are a peaceful people who seek no harm and want only to be free to worship as they believe. However, the Islamic Revolutionary Government of Iran holds that there can be no religious revelations after Muhammed and therefore views the Baha'i faith as worse than a heresy, and condemns the Baha'i to the death penalty.

The Iranian government has renounced the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. The country's permanent representative to the United Nations said in December that the Islamic Revolutionary government "would not hesitate to violate" the provisions of the Declaration if it had to choose between violating the divine right of Islam and violating secular resolutions.

The Iranian government introduced a document for Baha'i prisoners to sign as a condition for their release. The document testifies that the signer will not possess "any book, pamphlet, document, symbol or picture of the misguided, Zionist, espionage group of Baha'is." And if any such article is found on their person or in their home this will prove their being among those "who war against God" and the government would be free to do with them as they deem appropriate. The Baha'i consider this document "a serious violation of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights to which the government of Iran is signatory." The prisoners refuse to sign the document because they feel it misrepresents their faith, and they fear being accused of a capital offense.

What is being done to aid the persecuted in Iran?

Thirty-two Baha'i prisoners were condemned to death in August 1984. Although the U.N. appealed to the government of Iran to spare their lives — U.N. Special Rapporteur on Summary or Arbitrary Execution, Mr. Amos Wako communicated directly with the Iranian Minister of Foreign Affairs on August 29 — no reply was made by Iran except to execute eight of the condemned Baha'is.

In October, a special Representative to the Commission of Human Relations, Mr. Andres Aguilar of Venezuela, was appointed. But formal and repeated attempts to establish contacts through the Iranian government to enable him to visit Iran have been in vain.

Testimony has been presented to the U.S. Senate Foreign Relations Committee on the torture in Iran. Amnesty International has called on the Iranian government to live up to its Islamic Constitution and U.N. covenants it has ratified to end its practice of torture. In september 1982, the Foreign Relations Committee endorsed a resolution to strengthen U.S. policy against torture.

In December 1984, President Reagan mentioned the Baha'is in a signed Human Rights Day proclamation: "As Americans, we strongly object to and seek to end such affronts to the human conscience as. . . the persecution of the Baha'i religious minority in Iran. . ."

U.S. State Department annual Country Reports on Human Rights Practices, released February 13, 1985, singled out Iran's repression and persecution of its Baha'is as "unique and especially repugnant."

Over 100 members of Congress issued a bipartisan appeal February 21, 1985 to the U.N. Human Rights Commission urging action in support of religious freedom for Baha'is persecuted by the Iranian government: "Considering these relentless acts of savagery against the innocent, we appeal to you, as the world's foremost guardian of human rights, to adopt yet another resolution reaffirming your commitment to human rights for the people of Iran and calling for the government to cease its persecution of the Baha'i religious minority. You can send a clear signal to the Iranian regime that the world notices and condemns this serious violation if internationally-accepted standards of fundamental human rights."

Despite U.N. efforts to save Baha'i lives, Mr. Ruhu'llah Behramshaki, held in prison since May 1983, was executed by firing squad February 25, 1985. Three of his fellow prisoners at Yazd have had death sentences pronounced against them.

Most recently, March 13, 1985, the U.N. Commission of Human Rights adopted a resolution concerning the extreme human rights violations in Iran. Only the gravest human rights situations are brought to the attention of the U.N. General Assembly. The resolution was co-sponsored by Australia, Canada, Costa Rica, the Netherlands, Panama, and the United Kingdom and was adopted by 21 votes in favor, 5 against and 15 abstentions.

sisted by their school placement services in finding a post-graduation job," Challenger says.

"Of the remainder, 38 percent did not have the benefit of job placement services while another 26 percent were involved in placement services but were still unable to find work," he says.

And while the survey shows that, overall, 62 percent of the students surveyed use college placement services, less than two-thirds of them get jobs.

"It's not necessarily because campus placement is poorly run," Challenger says, "but (they are) simply unable to address the needs of many of their students."

"I think (Challenger's) just blowing smoke," counters Victor Linquist, placement director at Northwestern University and author of an annual nationwide job placement survey.

Lindquist calls the study a "sham."

"I just got a call from the New York Daily News, and (Challenger) is selling this survey information like it's some great finding. The fact has always been that most students don't have jobs when they graduate," Lindquist says. "So where's the news?"

At Northwestern, for instance, "55 percent of our four-year graduates go on to graduate school," he points out.

Indeed, "I would be very skeptical of the way (Challenger) is presenting his survey results," says Judith Kayser with the College Placement Council. "It doesn't mean that half of all graduates can't find jobs, just tha half of them don't have jobs yet. There's a big difference."

"Many students," she notes, "don't even get job offers until very late in their graduating year, or well after they graduate. And a lot of students take the summer off, intentionally, figuring they'll enjoy a little time off and avoid competing with a million other new graduates who will be looking for spring job offers."

Still, Challenger argues those 50 percent who didn't have jobs when they graduated — by choice or by default — sooner or later will need some employment assistance.

Not coincidentally, Challenger thinks he has the answer in a new program his private placement agency is offering.

Under the auspices of his new "Graduplacement Program," Challenger is seeking corporations to underwrite job placement programs for new high school and college graduates.

Trend To Ban Drinking May Go Nationwide Soon

In a trend which many experts claim could soon spread nationwide, all Massachusetts state colleges and universities are being forced to halt campus alcohol sales because they can't find an insurance company to carry their alcohol liability policies.

It could make college bars and on-campus liquor sales obsolete.

"No other state is in as severe a position as Massachusetts, yet," notes Mark Rosenberg of the Insurance Information Institute (III). "But it's a growing problem around the country and it could easily become as severe in other areas."

The problem arose first at Southeastern Massachusetts University (SMU), when administrators recently learned their insurance broker couldn't locate a company willing to renew alcohol liability insurance.

Such coverage protects the university, campus bar employees, administrators, and regents from lawsuits connected with on-campus alcohol consumption.

SMU received notice its alcohol coverage would not be renewed at the end of March because insurance companies were getting out of the alcohol liability business.

"The underwriters are simply no longer renewing any bar or club liability policies," explains Francis Gordon, director of auxiliary services at SMU. "They're getting out of alcohol liability coverage except for establishments with an 80/20 food-alcohol mix. And there's no wy a campus bar can serve that much food."

Only days after SMU learned its alcohol coverage would not be renewed, state colleges throughout Massachusetts were told their alcohol policies would be cancelled April 1st, 1985.

Because Massachusetts law requires state schools to carry liability insurance before thay can serve alcohol, on-campus alcohol sales in the state virtually have ended, Gordon says.

"We've SMU's already stopped selling alcohol here," he says, "and the other schools will have to do the same thing real soon. Even without the state law we couldn't afford to continue serving alcohol without liability insurance."

Experts say the lack of alcohol liability insurance easily could spread to other states.

"The commercial liability industry is in a very tough time," notes Bob Fulton, an insurance broker with Child, Savory, and Hayward in Boston, which unsuccessfully tried to find a company to renew SMU's alcohol liability policy.

"From what we've seen, insurance companies are very anxious to get out of the liability market in general, and alcohol liability coverage in particular," he says.

The reason, Fulton and other experts asy, is a combination of tougher drinking laws, increased liability of bars and taverns for the actions of intoxicated patrons, and mushrooming court awards in alcohol-related lawsuits.

In addition, 35 states now have "dram shop" laws that extend liability for alcohol related accidents to the parties that served liquor to the person who caused the accident, explains Edward Hammond, vice president for student affairs at the University of Louisville, and member of a newly-established national task force on college alcohol issues.

Colleges, too, have faced increasing liability in recent years for accidents, crimes and injuries resulting from institutional negligence.

Mad Dawgs: Team to Beat

by Andy Hiscock

Well the 1985 Spring Intramural program is just about over, although at the time of printing the big games have yet to be played. I wish I could give you a more up to date account of the play-off action up till now, but for some reason the Intramural office was under lock and key this past weekend, and I could not get to any of the game play records. I do have a few scores and play-off results that I would like to give you. In men's softball last Sunday, "Hang Trout" beat "Softballs" in a squeeker (12-11). Jim Pierce and Keith Hall had a good day and helped "Trout" to hold the opponents to 1 run in the bottom of the last inning to win. On Monday in the men's league, "Mad Dawgs" chewed up "Just Win" (16-1), and "With Themselves" squeezed by "Wally and the Beavers" (13-12). In the Co-Rec softball league quarter final playoff, "Arthroscopes" kept their undefeated record intact with a 25-2 tromping of "Hard Liners", while "Fully Supplied" beat "Spinning Ducks". As it stands now, all of the indoor sports had their final playoff championships scheduled for Wednesday, May 15th, with the outdoor sports waiting for the weather to cooperate once again.

Labba Lines

by Joe Scialabba

Another sports year has come to an end atop College Hill and with its passing many new memories have been born.

It's always nice to write about great team accomplishments and individual athletic successes, but for my final article of this school year I'd like to simply chew your ear about some Juniata sports happenings that I hope to remember longer than any team record or conference finish.

I'll remember a long bus ride to East Orange, New Jersey, for the football team to end a hard-luck season. Despite final exams and a disappointing loss at Susquehanna a week earlier, the Indians were spirited and proud, and beat Upsala with an outstanding defensive effort, by a defense that had been questioned all season.

I'll remember the volleyball team and a weekend NCAA trip to Grove City. While the rest of the campus was on break, the #1-ranked Indians showed top-ranked character in coming back from an early deficit to rout the hosts. What a great following we had.

Then, of course, the next NCAA volleyball playoff match will have to be remembered, as well. Despite a two games to zero start, Juniata came-from-behind time after time only to barely fall short. The roar of the Memorial Gym crowd, and its dead silence, can still be heard.

I'll remember the men's basketball team in their overwhelming win over Scranton. The Tribe did everything right on that Saturday afternoon and showed the potential that it possessed. Unfortunately, it was a performance that was not often repeated.

I'll also remember the women's basketball team, and their fantastic finish. The highlight of their stretch run was the demolition of highly-touted Elizabethtown in Memorial Gym. The Blue Jays never had a chance.

I'll remember a golf team win over Gettysburg, in which we set a new team low. Then, of course, I'll remember MAC's (private joke) when we surprised everyone with a fifth place finish.

I'll remember our baseball team. They had high hopes, that simply never materialized. But they made one of the most remarkable diamond comebacks in the history of Langdon Field. The Penn State win was one that will be treasured for a long time. I can still hear the crowd behind the dugout and see the "rally caps" flying.

As summer arrives in Huntingdon, and I get to walk a quiet campus once again, I can look to the fields and gymnasium to find many reminders of friends competing, cheering and succeeding.

No matter how many sports articles I write with all the details of wins and losses, the bottomline is the people involved. And it's when we forget the faces that sports aren't worth remembering.

Please don't forget our Juniata sports faces.

Underclassmen have a good summer. Seniors have a good life.

One of Juniata's most popular leisure sport is fishing. Dave Hildebrandt made the term worthwhile when he hauled in this 26" Chain Pickerel. The fish weighed 4½ lbs., Dave caught the fish at an old power dam on the east branch of the Juniata river, using a White Mister Twister with a silver spoon. The catch was witnessed by our photographer Jim Mesola.

WANTED: Counselors for Juniata sponsored summer camps.

Vol. XXXVII, No. 1 | Juniata College — Huntingdon, Pa. 16652 | Sept. 19, 1985

Visting Professor at Juniata

by Jennifer Nicholson

Dr. Bruce Reichenbach replaces Dr. Corbin Cornell as Juniata's J. Omar Good Visting Professor for 1985-86. Dr. Reichenbach is the tenth distinguished professor to hold the position made available by a million dollar gift given to the college from Mr. J. Omar Good.

Dr. Teichenbach is a professor of philosophy at Augsburg College in Minneapolis, Minn. He will be teaching two courses during his year at Juniata: "Chistian World View: Evangelical Perspective" and "Ethics of Medicine and Health Care."

Receiving his B.A. degree in Philosophy and Religion from Wheaton College. Professor Reichenbach then went on to obtain both his M.A. and his Ph.D. in Philosophy from Northwestern University. He has been a member of Augsberg College's faculty since 1968. Dr. Reichenbach is also the author of three books: The Cosmological Argument: a Reassessment, Is Man the Phoenix? A Study of Immortality, and Evil and A Good God. Additionally, Dr. Reichenbach took a year's leave of absence from Augsburg College to be a volunteer professor at the Mrija Theological Seminary in Lesotho, Africa.

In his spare time, he enjoys raquetball, swimming, and traveling. He is especially pleased with the Juniata College location because he was raised in the small town of Shamokin and finds Huntingdon to be similar to his hometown. He also enjoys spending time with his wife, Sharon, and his children, Rachel and Robert.

Dr. Reichenbach has found Juniata's faculty to be very warm and receptive. Noting the number of students in Juniata's science and business departments, Professor Reichenbach would like to see Juniata attract more students with interest in the humanities.

He also expressed interest in getting to know Juniata's student body. He encourages students to stop in to visit him in his I. Harvey Brumbaugh office at anytime.

New Student Key Policy Established

by Cinny Cooper

Forgetting your room key may cost you a few bucks this year, according to Julie Keehner, Associate Dean of Student Services and Director of Residential Life.

A new policy requires all Resident Assistants to change one dollar for opening a student's locked door. Security has the right to change up to three dollars for the service.

Keehner cited students who habitually used RAs to open their doors as the main reason for the administration's adoption of this policy. She explained that party-goers were leaving their keys in their room because they knew a RA would be available to let them in.

The "safety and security" of students also led to the new rule, said Keehner. A RA risked liability every time he/she let a student into his/her room without proper identification.

"This is not a punitive policy," Keehner pointed out. All of the money collected goes into the RHA (Residence Hall Association) of the dorm where it was collected. Also, Keehner elaborated, this policy mirrors the responsibility a student would have for lost or forgotten keys used outside the Juniata community.

Alternative measures, such as a system where students receive one or two warnings, would be "very difficult" to implement, said Keehner. A student may have two different RAs open his/her door thus evading the system.

Student reaction is expected to be mild. Keehner shrugged her shoulders to show the attitute of the students to whom she had talked.

All of the colleges surveyed regarding this decision use a similar policy, said Keehner.

Parents' Weekend Rapidly Approaching

by Mary Mc Dongall

"Living . Loving and Learning" will be the theme of this year's Parents' Weekend to be held September 27-29.

Scheduled for the weekend are home matches of the varsity cross-country, field hockey, football, soccer, and volleyball teams. In addition, the Center Board Parents' Weekend Committee has planned a variety of activities for students and their parents.

A few of the activities will take place at Lake Raystown which include a cruise on the "Raystown Queen" and a new luncheon on the old-fashioned paddlewheel tour boat "Proud Mary".

On campus, several presentations will be made by Juniata faculty and staff. Dr. Jay Buchanan will lecture on "The Keys that Unlock the Future," coordinating with the theme of the weekend. "Juniata Abroad" will be the subject of a discussion and slide show by Dr. Wiiliam C. Vocke, Director of International Programs. Juniata's newest computer games and color graphics will be demonstrated by Dr. Dale Wampler, Director of the Academic Computer Center.

Other highlights will include the Friday Night Coffeehouse featuring live entertainment by Juniata's talented students and faculty. The Nostalgia Dance in the gym will feature music from the 40's, 50's and 60's.

For the ninth year, Artists on the Hill will spotlight artists and craftsmen from Pennsylvania, as well as Juniata students and faculty displaying their crafts on Oller Lawn.

Coffee with the Profs will be a chance for all parents to informally meet Juniata's faculty and staff on the Detwiler Plaza.

Gym Security Tightened

Your student I.D. card will soon have a new home at the Kennedy Sports and Recreation Center.

Beginning Monday, September 23, everyone entering the gym will be required to leave their I.D. card with the student security assistant at the East Entrance. This rule will be in effect after 5 p.m. weekdays and all day Saturday and Sunday.

Nancy Latimore, Assistant Director of Athletics, explained that this policy is to ensure that the Center is used only by members of the college community and the College's Founders Club. The availability of facilities will also be insured this way.

As in the past, students must carry into the gym the shoes in which they plan to exercise. Latimore said that this is to keep the gym and racquetball floors clean and to prevent slippery conditions.

Editorial

The Key Question

A new campus policy requires your RA to charge you a dollar everytime he/she unlocks your door. The Juniatian recognizes the need for action to curb the number of times a RA is called upon to perform this task, but believes a more fair solution could be found.

The policy now in effect punishes the students who habitually leave their keys behind, plus those who forget only occasionally. A system where students receive one warning seems more fair and reasonable to the Juniatian. The administration argues that students may turn to a different RA every time they need to be let into their room, thereby receiving many "first warnings" but never being fined. This argument does not support the need for a no warning system. It merely shows the importance of effective communication between RAs.

The office of Student Services also argues that an RA risks liability when opening a door for a student without identification. Since when does a dollar bill constitute a form of I.D.?

The Juniatian believes a one warning system would be effective for our campus. It would also not be unreasonable to charge a student who wakes an off-duty RA or one who calls security. In any case identification should always be required.

Perhaps students and administrators should give this issue a little more consideration.

"The computer apologizes but seems to think that since it was manmade a mistake of this magnitude was inevitable."

ALONG · MUDDY · RUN

by Joe Scialabba

I thought it would be nice to start out this year's Muddy Run series with a plea for mercy.

Many times, especially at the beginning of the year, we college students (freshman in general) try in vain to meet new people and become comfortable in our new environment. I should rephrase the statement since the efforts are definitely not in vain, since all of us, in our own ways, find friends that will be the best we have in our lifetimes.

However, there maybe a time when some of us try too hard, and find a situation that is not only embarassing, but heartbreaking as well. For example: You are at a Juniata social gathering. Say you are in South. The dark room is crowed with people and little groups are dancing and talking in all corners. Of course, there are several groups that feature people that you do not know, but would like to know. Let's say that you would like to know one in particular. Whether male or female, that's not the point here, but you may want to take the "dance to get to know them" approach. But be careful, it can lead to problems.

Maybe you get a flat yes, or no, answer. That's okay. That's about as easy an answer to deal with that there is; so no problems there.

Say you get a response like "You're a jerk," "Get real," or "Get a haircut." In these cases there is a problem, but it's certainly not yours. Answers like these say that you're better off not knowing this person.

Basically, there is really only one answer to the dance proposal that should discourage you even the slightest. That dreaded response is the infamous: "I don't think so."

That terrorizing response not only tells you that you maybe approaching total loser status, but that everyone knows about it and doesn't want to make you feel any more pathetic than you already are. That answers should be banned from all conversations, except for tea parties.

Overall, I hope that we all take our responses to other's friendship advances very seriously, since you never know when you will be in the advance position.

So, as you go out again this weekend in attempts to meet others and extend the Juniata spirit of hospitality, remember to consider the impact one saying can have on someone's life.

Be blunt, be rude, be obnoxious! But, for everyone's sake: Don't be cute.

Students Speak

by Patricia Schofield

Question: How do you feel about the policy requiring a fee of $1 for an RA to let you on the room and $3 for security to let you in?

Susan [illegible]pp (senior):
"I think the policy was developed for a reason and that it will train people to be more responsible."

Tom Kelly (junior):
"I think it's bad, because RAs are supposed to be there for small things like that, so I disagree with Sue."

Joy Purcell (freshman):
"If you get locked out by accident, you shouldn't have to pay to be let back in by an RA or Security."

Bill Stutzman (junior):
"I think it's good because it teaches people to be responsible, and it could be a problem for RAs or Security to keep opening doors for people."

Wendy Lloyd (junior):
"One dollar for the RAs is okay, but going $3 for Security is too much. Overall, though it is a good idea."

Greg Pike (sophomore):
"I think it's bad because it penalizes people for the simple mistake of leaving their keys behind, which is a mistake often made by freshman."

Students Anticipate Mountain Day at JC

by Carla DeMarco

We're back at J.C. again. Most of us are very happy about it. We're with our friends again. There's new faces, parties, and there's always fun to look forward to. But, of course, there's always the pressure of homework and responsibilities. Will we make it through these 10 long weeks and pass our finals? Fall term is certainly the longest term here. There are no term breaks or vacations to look forward to; that is, except for Mountain Day.

Maountain Day is a day to forgot about work. Every year sometime in October the whole campus hops on buses and spends a free day somewhere in the Central Pennsylvania Mountains. This year Mountain Day will be held at Trough Creek State Park. And, again, no one will know when the day is until the resident assistants announce it at around 6:30 a.m. on Mountain Day. The reasonfor the secrecy is so that no one plans on spending that free day to catch up on work or to do something else. It's so great waking up and finding out that you don't have to take that test after all. Of course, everyone usually goes back to sleep and wakes up for Mountain Day at around 9:00 when the buses start departing for the mountains.

Mountain Day is an old tradition that dates back to the early 1900's. At the time the college was closed down because of an epidemic. There was a train between Huntingdon and Trough Creek, and all of the students went to Trough Creek. After that first year the campus went back to celebrate memories. Now Mountain Day has turned into that needed break during fall term.

The cafeteria has a cookout for Juniata, and there's lots of games to participate in. Some of the activities last year at Greenwood Furnace were tug-a-war games between classes, volleyball games, a football game between Cloister and Sherwood and a Faculty football game. Of course, anyone is always free to wander off and explore the outdoors.

Like last year there will be Mountain Day t-shirts on sale and most of the traditional activities. Some of the girls were a bit disappointed last year because they could not play football. This year the Mountain Day Committee is thinking about holding a owderpuff football game. Other proposals included a faculty sponge toss, a pie eating contest, and a water balloon toss. It was even suggested that there be a hacky-sack tournament to draw more of a crowd. It will be a great time. So be there! Anyone interested in being on the Mountain Day committee should go to one of the meetings. The meetings will be held every Monday at 7:00 p.m. and every Thursday at 8:00 p.m. in the New Center Board Office.

Freshman Acquainted With J.C.

by Lauralee Snyder

When was the last time you participated in a friendly game of musical chairs?

Well, if your are an upperclassman, you probably can't remember because it's been so long. Freshmen, however, spent the very first night of their Juniata College career playing musical chairs on the tennis courts in front of the Sports and Recreation Center.

Activities for the fall orientation began with a meeting in Good Hall between the freshmen and their upperclassmen peer advisors. This year a new technique was tried because of an overwhelming amount of applications last spring for peer advisors.

Instead of having 7,8 or 9 freshmen in a group, the number was lowered to 3, 4 or 5 which allowed for many more counselors and a more personal relationship between the freshmen and their advisors.

After the introductions and a rap session, everyone met on the tennis courts and joined in the musical chairs game which lasted an entire half hour — it's very difficult to eliminate over 400 chairs! The event was led by junior Jayne Ayers, and everyone had fun.

A scavenger hunt, requiring the freshmen to gather certain items from main offices or places on campus, followed musical chairs. Stops were made at such places as the library, the pool, the information desk, the computer center, etc.

Sunday night the traditional JC Play Fair entertained the freshmen. Many light, fun social games with the main objective of "getting acquainted" were played by the group, which for the first time included the foreign exchange students.

Participation in all these events was excellent as this year's freshmen began to unify and begin their four year journey as Juniata students.

THE ONE THAT V103 ROCKS

WKVR Alters Campus Image

by Ann Cameron

V103, Juniata College's campus radio station, is now the ONE THAT ROCKS! Upperclassmen returning to Juniata and tuning their radios to 103.5 on the FM dial have noticed some improvements in the student-run station. The management board of V103 has implemented several changes over the summer in an attempt to make V103 resemble a professional album-oriented-rock radio station.

The most noticeable change in V103 is its new name and logo. The V103 board selected the name "the one that rocks" because it illustrates the station's change to a rock-n-roll format. The new logo will be featured on V103 t-shirts that will be on sale this week for only $4.00. The decision to change the name was prompted by a marketing research study showing that V103's old name was in the decline of its product cycle. The study also pointed out that students turn on their radios for entertainment and no longer want an information "voice".

V103 has introduced several new programs to entertain its listeners. The Weekend Warm-Up airs Friday nights from 6 - 9 p.m. This new show features your favorite party music requests to help you unwind after a long week and warm-up for the great weekend ahead. Every Saturday from 6 - 9 p.m. V103 takes you back in time with the Vintage Vinyl show, featuring classic rock-n-roll from the 1960's and 70's. Hits from such groups as The Who, Led Zeppelin, The Rolling Stones and Credence Clearwater Revival will be one the playlist.

Two special programs will be returning to the V103 schedule. The Sunday Night Spotlight is back with a new and informative show each Sunday evening from 9 - midnight. The Spotlight will focus on a particular rock era, artist, group, or type of music, and a different disc jockey will host each edition. Virgin Vinyl (formerly the New Music Show) airs Wednesday 9 - midnight for those who like new and progressive music. V103 will also be running some its old and familiar shows: The Jazz Show, 9 - 12 a.m. Saturday; The Classical Show, 8 - 10 a.m. Sunday; The Christian Show, 10 - 12 a.m. Sunday; and the Top Ten on Sunday afternoon from 12 - 1.

V103 is aiming to project a more professional and consistent sound. Chief Announcer Leslie Bonjack will be initiating a more thorough training and evaluation program for new and returning disc jockeys. People interested in working at V103 as disc jockeys or in any other capacity should stop by the station in Ellis Hall and talk to a staff member.

This year, more than ever, V103, the one that rocks, is trying to be the one that Juniata turns to for music, sports and information.

Quickness Fells Indians 21-0

by Joe Scialabba

Quickness outdueled muscle on Saturday as Franklin & Marshall shutout Juniata 21-0 in Lancaster.

The non-conference loss dropped the Indians to 1-1 on the young season. The Diplomats are 1-0.

Juniata had a solid size advantage onthe smaller Diplomats, but the hosts compensated for that disadvantage with quick, agressive play, especially on defense.

"We will not see a quicker defense this season," said Juniata Coach Rob Ash. "They created many one-on-one blocking situations with their stunts, to take advantage of their quickness. They moved very well."

The F&M defensive movement kept Juniata quarterback Mike Culver on the move as the junior scrambled for just 19 net yards, a total hindered by a loss of 50 yards on seven sacks. But, it was one sparkling Culver run that almost got the Indians back into the game.

Trailing only 7-0 at halftime despite just one first down and 21 total yards, the Tribe took over a midfield on Lou Komer's third period fumble recovery. Things looked good when a pass interference penalty and Culver's weaving 24-yard keeper got the Indians to the F&M 12 yard line. However, three plays netted only three yards and Mike Schaffner's 27 yard field goal try missed the mark with 8:19 to go in the quarter.

"We had a high snap on the field goal attempt," said Ash. "If we get some points it's a new game."

Soon after the threat, F&M made sure it was their game with two fourth-quarter scores. The first followed a balanced 11-play 77-yard drive that featured some clutch passing by quarterback John Travagline. The junior QB connected on passes of 13 yards to Andy Buchanon and 35 and 33 yards to Brad Bate, whose second grab was a spectacular 3rd-and-18 catch in a crowd at the Juniata 2 yard line. Ken Scalet, who had a 3-yard TD run in the second quarter, scored three plays later from the one.

"Brad made a great catch,"said F&M coach Tom Gilburg. "Our kids really came to play. We deserved to win."

Travagline iced the game after a 49-yard run with 6:53 left. Senior Mark Slevin kicked his third extra point to set the final score.

Unfortunately, the score doesn't give the Indian defense the credit it deserves. Despite spending over 35 minutes on the field, the Tribe produced three Diplomat turnovers and held the hosts to only seven points in three "long" quarters. The sputtering offense proved to be the Indian's fate.

Juniata gained only 117 yards before its final possession and made the sticks on only one of ten third-down opportunities. The Indians were in Diplomat territory on only four of 12 offensive possessions.

"In the first half we were really out of balance," said Ash. "I was disappointed we didn't throw well. I thought we could pass on them."

Culver hit on 5-of-12 passes for 51 yards and one interception, the pickoff following Greg St. Clair's first half interception at the F&M 36. Freshman Cubby Davis ran the last series of the game compieting two passes for 47 yards before time ran out.

"Despite losing, this was a good game for us," said Ash. "F&M's a good team. They do the little things well. This game should help us be ready for the rest of the season."

The Indians go to Bethlehem this Saturday to meet Moravian. The Middle Atlantic Conference contest will kickoff at 2 p.m.

NCAA Passes Athletic Affadavit

by Shelly Duncan

The NCAA recently passed legislation requiring all athletes to sign an affadavit. Created to curtail the illegal use of financial aid, the document states that both head coaches and athletes are abiding by the regulations established by the NCAA. The purpose of this legislation is to eliminate the financial benefits awarded to athletes, often illegally, to induce them to play for Division I and II schools.

Because Juniata's Sports Program does not award financial aid on the basis of athletic achievement, the college will be least affected. However, other schools face probation, and no chance of any championship play, if anyone is found in violation of the affadavit.

Juniata athletes intending to participate in any varsity sport must sign this document before October 1st, or they will be ineligible to play.

Attention Sports Fans

The Juniatian Sports Department urgently needs sportswriters for both Intramural and Varsity sports. No previous experience is necessary. Anyone interested is urged to attend the staff meeting on Tuesday night at 7:30 p.m.

World News Update

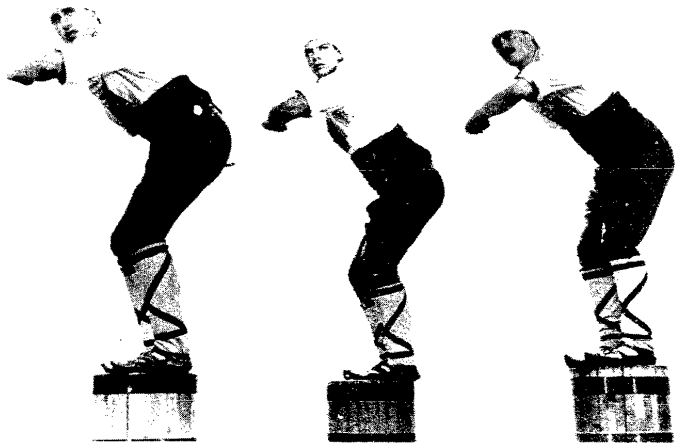
By Virginia Krall

MEXICO CITY — The city devasted by two earthquakes one week ago, is looking beyond its hardest fought tradition of self reliance by accepting help from the USA. Government and commercial planes are landing hourly with medicine, clothing and food. Yet rescue workers are still faced with shortages of equipment in their race to find thousands of trapped victims.

CHAMPAIGN, ILL. — "Farm Aid" contributions poured in Sunday night with 52,000 calls coming in hourly totalling over $6 million. The twelve hour concert benefit, led by country singer Willie Nelson, featured over 50 rock and country artists and played to an audience of 78,000 plus. Follow-up events are expected to get up to $40 to $50 million by the end of 1985.

JOHANNESBURG — South Africa recalled it troops from Angola Sunday ending a 6-day incursion that drew strong criticism from Western Nations and a unanimous condemnation from the U.N. Security Council.

WASHINGTON — Ex-Hostage Rev. Benjamin Weir, in his first indepth interview, told of his horrible 16 month captivity in Lebanon. Weir continues to plead with American officials for more action toward freeing the six remaining American hostages still held in Lebanon. President Reagan insists that the U.S. will not negotiate with the captors saying that in doing so we would legitimize these "terrorists".



Duquesne University folk Dance group, the Tamburitzans, will open the 1985-86 Juniata College Artist Series on Sunday, Sept. 29 at 3 p.m. in Oller Hall. The Pittsburgh based dance company will present music, songs, and dances of the East and Southeast European people. Tickets for this performance and student season tickets are on sale now at the Ellis Info Desk.

Duquesne University Tamburitzans To Open Juniata's Artist Series

The Duquesne University Tamburitzans will open the 1985-86 Juniata College Artists Series Sept. 29 at 3 p.m. in Oller Hall.

Founded in 1937 at Duquesne University in Pittsburgh, the Tamburitzans are the first existing university based performing folk dance ensemble in the United States. The group takes its name from the tamburitza family of stringed instruments indigenous to the folk cultures of Southeastern Europe.

The group's primary area of concentration has been the presentation of the music, songs and dances of the East and Southeast European people. They do this with great attention to detail and authentic portrayal of ethnic song or dance, including proper folk costuming. The Tamburitzans use over 500 authentic costumes in each performance, sing in a dozen different European languages and do the dances of many countries.

A newspaper in Dayton, Ohio called the Tamburitzans' performance, ". . .the most exciting version of the folk arts I've ever witnessed. . .Some very talented people, exceptionally gifted direction and an apparently vigorous rehearsal schedule added up to singing, dancing and musicianship flawlessly beautiful and deeply evocative."

"About the only word suitable to describe this musical group from Pittsburgh, PA is 'FANTASTIC,'" noted the Fontana (Calif.) "Herald News."

The group exists for the dual purpose of preserving the Eastern European cultural heritage in the United States and offering scholarship opportunities to deserving students. The 40 students who make up the performing ensemble come from all parts of America and from various ethnic and religious backgrounds. These students, all on scholarships, may study in any academic area at Duquesne University.

Nicholas Jordanoff, artistic director of the Tamburitzans, has been affiliated with the group since he was accepted as a member of the performing ensemble in 1953. Since that time, Jordanoff has continued his association with the Tamburitzans in a variety of positions and has been the artistic director since 1973.

Along with performing, in 1954 the Tamburitzans established a community school of folk music and dance which has programs in eight separate communities in the Pittsburgh area. A direct result of this is the establishment throughout the US and Canada of approximately 100 Junior Tamburitzan performing groups which are taught to a great extent by the alumni of the Tamburitzans. In 1956, the Tamburitzans were instrumental in founding the Pittsburgh Folk Festival which has involved 30 community ethnic

by April Evans and Avril Opinante

Talented Juniata students and faculty will take the stage when Parents Weekend kicks off with a coffeehouse this Friday night at 9:30 in Ellis Ballroom.

Andy Murray will open the show followed by freshman Chris Blanchard. Tom Kochel will perform magic for the crowd to be followed by the singing duo Chris and Deb Peterson. Chuck Kensinger will also perform his magic act before Andy Murray closes the show.

"The Friday Night Coffeehouse was one of the most popular events of last year's Parents Weekend and we're expecting even bigger things this year," said committee chairperson, Caren Ogrisek.

The work of local artists will be featured Saturday afternoon when Artist on the Hill is held on Oller Lawn in front of Beeghley Library.

Scheduled to run from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m., the exhibition will be an opportunity for local artists to display and sell their artwork and crafts. One local artist, Joan Amatto from the Information Desk, will be doing charcoal sketches and caricatures.

The exhibition will be bigger and have a greater variety of works than the one held last year. Pottery, woodwork, metal work, glass work and crocheted items will be among the display.

Other activities for this special weekend include 'Coffee With the Profs', a lecture with Dr. Jay Buchanan entitled "The Keys to Unlock Your Future", new computer games featured in the academic computer center, a slide presentation on "Juniata Abroad" by Dr. William C. Vocke, and the Nostalgia Dance of music from the 40's, 50's and 60's.

Sunday the Parents Association Breakfast will be held in Baker Refectory. The Duquesne Tamburitzans will then close the 1985 Parents Weekend with the first Artist Series performance.

Complain, Complain, Complain!

Are complaints becoming a major source of conversation on our campus? How often have you found fault in the administration, athletic teams, or special interest clubs and then done nothing? The Juniatian feels that a complaint is a very good reason to get involved.

The Juniatian believes in everyone's right to criticize whatever concerns the public. Criticism keeps us in line and brings about improvements. Everyone can learn from constructive criticism.

On the other hand, complaints made with total disregard to circumstances are unreasonable and irresponsible. Before criticizing the performance of a losing team for example, The Juniatian believes that we should consider the legitmacy of the complaint. More times than not, the team has worked hard and done their best. Who has the right to cut them down when they have done all that was in their power. Under these circumstances, deriding the team brings down morale and nothing more.

The most irritating complaint is the one made by the person who has no idea why the mistake occurred, has no intention of finding out, and will never voice his disapproval to someone involved. What good is this kind of criticism?

Many students seem to forget that a complaint is nothing unless it is acted upon. Take your ideas to Student Government or The Juniatian for example. An idea presented with good intentions will be well received anywhere. Only malicious, irresponsible comments will be met defensively.

Letters to the Editor

Dear Editor,

On behalf of the Juniata Executives Club, I would like to explain and apologize for the music situation at a JEC sponsored party in South's Rebel Den on Friday, September 13.

Arrangements for the lounge were made at the end of last school year and we reserved a sound system at the beginning of this year. We had signed up for the Yamaha system but were informed one day prior to our party that we would be provided with the Sunn System instead of the Yamaha. We were left without a tape deck or turntable as the Sunn System does not include these accessories. When we went to set up the system, the speaker wires included did not fit and we were provided with no patch cords to adapt our own system.

Thanks to some very generous people who came through at the last minute, we had some music. I would like to apologize to our guests because the music was not up to the usual party quality.

It is my understanding that policy for signouts of equipment is on a first come, first served basis but the Programming Office is currently unable to guarantee this service. It seems that the problem we encountered is based on a current state of confusion about the A-V department.

Therefore it would be my suggestion that any organization planning an event involving the use of A-V equipment double-check their status with the Director of Programming and that the proper college administrator look into the A-V situation.

Sincerely,
Tracy Stough
President of JEC

What's your opinion of the limited pool hours?

Elizabeth Radcliffe — Junior: Why spend the amount of money on a gym and not have it open all the time? The hours are not geared around academics."

Paul Peditto — Senior: Lifeguards work cheap, why can't it be open longer? Lifeguards don't party anyway, why can't they be there all weekend?"

John Petrovic — Sophomore: "I think the pool shoud be open more often and I would like to see morning swims come back."

Stan Wampler — Junior: "I think there should be more hours. If you gave the people the opportunity to use the pool, they would get into the habit of swimming and it would also give the lifeguards more hours."

Melanie Confer — Sophomore: "We don't always have a lot of people with the hours we have now. I think a morning swim should be added."

Jane Crosby — former faculty member: "I was disappointed when the morning swim was removed and I would like to see it brought back."

Counselor Jay Buchanan demonstrates the uses of the SIGI computer to student Mark Howanitz.

Guest Commentary

Dr. Jay Buchanan

SIGI- System of Interactive Guidance and Information - can help you in the important areas of career planning and decision making.

As a freshman, you are going to be making some critical decisions over the next several months. SIGI can help you with those decisions. It can help you examine your own value system as it relates to the rewards and satisfactions associated with occupational choice.

At the sophomore level, SIGI can aid students who are considering POE changes. Interest patterns change and we find out more about our capacities intellectually. Many students will be looking at career paths quite different from those they had as freshmen.

SIGI can be of benefit to juniors and seniors as well as freshmen and sophomores. It is never too late to look at and change one's career plans. SIGI can serve to reinforce current plans and/or it can introduce options perhaps not previously considered.

Special features afforded SIGI users include occupational information. Each year the software program is updated to insure that only accurate and timely information is presented. Additionally, users can access information on hundreds of occupations (job prospects through the 1990's, salaries, special requirements for entry).

But most importantly, you can schedule SIGI very easily and at your own convenience. The program consists of five systems and takes approximately two hours to complete. It comes with a printer so you can take hard copy with you for future reference. Stop and schedule an appointment with SIGI! Just see Denise Scalia in the Career Planning and Placement Center. Remember, it's alright to be undecided regarding career path but it is not alright to do nothing about it.

Sting's first solo album, "The Dream of the Blue Turtles," is not quite what you would expect from the lead singer of the pop group, the Police. Or then again, maybe it is.

Sting is known for his complexity, and the music of the Police does have some influences of jazz in it. "The Dream of the Blue Turtles" is complex and jazz influenced pop music. The complexity comes out of the subjects Sting deals with and the metaphors and images he uses with his poetry (he wrote all the lyrics). I refer to it as poetry because it is that more than anything else. It has rhyme, meter, stanzas, metaphors, and personifications.

The first song is to date the most popular one on the album. "If You Love Somebody, Set Them Free" offers some interesting advice for a relationship, that is not to treat the one you love as a possession.

"Love Is The Seventh Wave," the second song on the first side, clearly shows the influence of reggae. It has swinging rhythms and its message that love is the final answer is a typical reggae theme.

The third cut from the first side, "Russians," deals with the possibility of nuclear war. Sting makes the point that politicians on both sides are just spitting out rhetoric that no one believes and that neither side has any common sense. Sting also makes the point that ideology does not matter to the people, what matters is that nuclear war is a very real danger. It does not matter who drops the first bomb, we all loose. And as Sting reminds us, the biggest losers would be the children. Sting also expresses a hope that if the Russians also love their land they would not be the first to drop the bomb.

In "Children's Crusade," Sting talks about how children are the victims of war, adult society, and drugs. He uses the actual children's crusade as a metaphor for how children are victimized by adult greed. "Children's Crusade" has a darkly brooding melody.

The fifth cut on the first side "Shadows In The Rain" is open to interpretation. My theory is that Sting is talking about the shadows of the mind (depression or mental illness). This piece shows the most influence of jazz.

"We Work The Black Seam" is the first cut from the second side. This is another song you might be familiar with. In this song, Sting talks about the plight of the coal miners. They are being replaced by machines and nuclear power. Sting also points out how dangerous the waste from nuclear power plants is.

The second song from the second side, "Consider Me Gone," deals in strictly metaphorical terms with a seemingly perfect but loveless relationship. The song concludes with the narrator stating that one of the problems with the relationship was that he was a perfectionist.

The title track, "The Dream Of The Blue Turtles," is an instrumental piece. It is progressive jazz with the main instrument being a piano.

"Moon Over Bourbon Street" is based on Ann Rice's novel, "Interview With A Vampire." With its dark moody melody, it accurately expresses the vampire's hate for his compulsion for blood.

In the last song on the album, "Fortress Around Your Heart," Sting uses the metaphor of the fortress to tell how people build walls between themselves. Also, how, in trying to break these walls down, we get sabotaged by the safeguards we have created against getting close to people.

In this album, Sting presents many subjects and moods.

Mt. Day

This year Juniata College will hold its annual Mountain Day sometime within the first two weeks of October. On this day, all classes will be cancelled and students and teachers will be bused to Trough Creek for a day of good food, recreation, and fun.

One of the events planned for this year is the sponge toss; an event in which students can pay 25¢ to throw three wet sponges at their "favorite" professors. All proceeds will go to the Huntingdon House for Domestic Abuses.

Film Review

Kramer vs. Kramer deals with one man's adjustment to single parenting after his wife leaves to pursue a career of her own.

Ted Kramer (Dustin Hoffman) must learn how to balance his career and parenting. This includes learning how to cook and keep house.

He does succeed in coping, and is a very good father. In spite of Ted's positive adjustment to parenting, the custody of their son is awarded to his ex-wife Joanna (Meryl Streep).

This movie deals humanely and intelligently with the subjects of divorce and single parenting. Anyone can relate to it because of its humanity.

Kramer vs. Kramer offers fine performances by both Streep and Hoffman.

Twas the night before storming and all through the arch.
Not a freshmen was stirring not even a mouse.
While over in the gym preparations begin,
Hoping new muscles will help us win.
Electricians tape was wrapped all around,
To keep on our clothes when thrown to the ground.
It took a few beers,
To get us in gear.
As we prepare for the kill
On top of North hill.
As I looked at the arch and then at an upperclassman's face,
I realized I didn't even want to be in this place.
But all of a sudden I heard a roar from the crowd
And I realized I had to start charging and look very proud.
But that feeling of proudness soon disappeared
As I got hit from the front and then in the rear.
The next thing I knew I was lying on the ground
Underneath a kid who must have weighed three hundred pounds.
When I finally got up I ran back to my pack
Where they were strategically planning their second attack.
After minutes passed by of constant jeering
We finally succumbed to the upperclassmen's cheering.
Although we charged with all our might
We seemed once again to be losing the fight.
But we headed right back to the place we began,
And tried to come up with a brand new plan.
As I looked around, I knew everyone was having a blast,
But I had to ask myself, "How long will this last?"
My question was soon answered when we charged them again
And the upperclassmen were able to defend.
We got back together though our throats were quite parched
To see if this time we could bust through the arch.
And though our final attempt didn't last very long
We knew deep inside we didn't go wrong
For this is surely something that we will always remember
And I'm looking forward to defending next September.

A happy but tired Andy Murray emerges from Lake Raystown after his 20 mile "Swim for Peace" which took him 15 hours to complete.

Swim For Peace

Murray Swims for Peace

Lisa Sieg

Entering the tepid waters of Lake Raystown at 4 p.m. Sept. 3, the Rev. Dr. M. Andrew Murray thus embarked on a 20 mile "Swim for Peace."

The inspiration behind the marathon swim was two-fold. Funds raised from the swim, approaching almost $30,000, will be used for establishing a Peace and Conflicts Studies (PACS) Institute at Juniata College. Explaining that "world peace is the most pressing issue of our time," Murray said that the new PAC Institute would be endowed with responsibilities beyond those of the PACS Program that currently exists at Juniata College. Such responsibilities would include providing state of the art undergraduate education, and helping to develop PACS curriculums at other schools. Presently, Juniata is only one of 88 colleges and universities in the nation offering such a program. The PACS Institute would also conduct research into the specific problems of war, and provide community education in conflict management skills.

The other motive behind the marathon endeavor, and according to Murray perhaps the most influential, was the "personal challenge" it offered. The 43 year old minister who never received a formal swimming lesson in his life, and could only doggie paddle until he was 40 years old, began training several months ago swimming 3-5 miles at least 4 times per week, and exercising regularly. Murray, upon completing his exhausting enterprise, departed from the waters of Lake Raystown at 7 a.m. Sept. 4 to a shore of supportive friends and onlookers, with a few aching muscles, a weary smile, and enormous satisfaction.

Exchange Students at J.C.

Philippe and Frank

By Terri Smith

As the new school year begins, it brings to the campus fresh faces, not all of which are Freshmen. Many are foreign exchange students. This week, I talked to Philippe Hurez and Frank Pohl, both of whom are Chemistry majors.

Philippe is a student from Lille-HEI college in France. His hometown is Douai, which is located in the northern part of France. Here at Juniata, Philippe is active in the Computer, Chemistry, and International Clubs. He also plays tennis, racquetball, and swims. According to him, it is much "easier to practice sports here" because everything is readily available to the students. At his college in France, the students must travel to recreational areas.

Before leaving the United States, Philippe would like to go to Florida with the International Club and go to Quebec to see relatives there.

Philippe recommends that a visitor to Douai see its belltower, which is one of the oldest in Europe, dating from the fourteenth century. The "carillon," or ringing of the bells (there are sixty-five of them), is famous all over the north of France.

The major difference he sees between Juniata and his college in France is that in France, they "say hello only to a person we know." He thinks Juniata is much friendlier.

Frank Pohl attends Muenster College in Germany. He is from Malla, Germany and enjoys swimming and reading. Outside of school at Muenster, Frank did not participate in any activities other than "drinking beer" because he said that "you just study in Germany" and there are "no activities." He is not active in any sports here but in Germany he played volleyball and handball, which was comprised of a team of seven players.

The major differences between Muenster and Juniata, according to Frank, are the classes. They only have four or five for the year as compared to our nine. He also prefers having a roommate. In Germany, the students have their own rooms.

Frank would like to go across the United States before returning to Germany and recommends that anyone visiting Malla to see the Befukation River. The river splits in two and there are only about three like it in the world.

"Tastes just like the stuff I used to drink at fraternity parties."

Author Kaufman To Read Works

Janet Kauffman, accomplished writer of poetry, short stories and the forthcoming novel "Collaborators," will be reading selections of her work at Shoemaker Galleries Oct. 1 at 8:15 p.m.

A 1967 Juniata graduate, Kauffman received high critical praise for her first volume of short stories, "Places in the World a Woman Could Walk," which has recently been released as a Penguin paperback. The New York Times praised her "... poet's sense of rhythm and abbreviation ... her skill with words comes through in every story."

"Places in the World a Woman Could Walk" consists of a dozen short stories, most set in the midwest. Kauffman herself lives on a farm south of Jackson, Mich., where she raises chickens and plants about 20 acres in alfalfa hay and another 15 in corn or soybeans. She draws the subject matter for many of her stories form the farms and small towns around nearby Hudson, just north of the Michigan-Ohio border. For the past eight years, Kauffman has taught literature, composition and various other subjects at Jackson Community College. Last year she was a visiting associate professor at the University of Michigan.

Kauffman started writing relatively late in life. "I began writing poetry when I finished graduate school 10 years ago," she says. "I deferred a lot of things until I got that finished." After publishing two books of poetry, Kauffman began writing short stories three years ago. "For me, poetry is always pretty grim business — I'll probably always do it, though, because it comes from some fundamental need," she says. "But I enjoy writing fiction. I really have a good time."

Dr. Binder Receives Doctorate

Dr. Binder, who served as Hartwick's fifth president from 1959-69, was the featured speaker at the ceremony marking the opening of Hartwick's academic year.

"Fred Binder is truly 'the father of Modern Hartwick.' The role he played at Hartwick is unique," said Hartwick President Philip S. Wilder, Jr.

Randy Kotz of WYSP Hosts V103 Seminar

By Mary McDougall

"How to be a better DJ" was the topic of discussion when Randy Kotz of WYSP joined V103 staff for a "DJ training seminar" in Alumni Hall Sunday, September 15.

The Philadelphia disk jockey discussed planning shows and developing a DJ style and answered questions on how to break into the competitive field of radio broadcasting.

Kotz gave tips on "on the air" technique. He urged DJ's to keep their style natural and conversational as if they were talking to a friend.

Discussing careers in broadcasting, Kotz stressed the competitiveness of the field and urged hopeful DJ's to get experience wherever possible, no matter how small the station.

A 1974 Juniata graduate, Kotz was involved in the college radio station (then WJC.) He also worked at WHUN in Huntingdon and WTRN in Tyrone.

Speaking about his career, Kotz said, "So many people helped me out when I was trying to make it that I'm always willing to help out when I can — listening to tapes or answering questions." Kotz has conducted similar seminars for high school radio stations and has been a guest lecturer for the American Academy of Broadcasting.

"I was really pleased with the response I got from V103," said Kotz. "There's an interest and enthusiasm here that I don't usually see in college radio."

Station Manager Shelly Guest was also pleased with the seminar. "We had a lot of good discussion and I think it has been a real morale boost for the station."

Kotz also had something to say about changes at Juniata since he was a student here. "I'm glad to see you finally got the pool they promised us when I was here!"

Students Among the Loneliest

College students, particularly entering freshmen, are more lonely than virtually all other social groups except single parents, alcoholics, and some high school students, according to a researcher at the University of Nebraska-Lincoln.

"We have been very surprised to learn that college students are one of the more lonely groups of people we've surveyed over the years," says John Woodward, UNL professor of human development, who has given his loneliness test to thousands of people—including over 400 students—over the past 20 years.

After asking respondents how they feel and behave in specific social situations, Woodward rates them on what he calls his "loneliness index,".

"Ironically, what we have found is that high school and college students—who you would expect to be the least lonely of all people—rate very high on the loneliness index, while the elderly—who you would expect to feel lonely—are the lowest group on the loneliness index," he reports.

The only people lonelier than entering freshmen, he says, are alcoholics, single parents, rural high school students and female, inner-city high schoolers.

"We believe that students are lonely for a good many reasons," Woodward explains. "Most of them have been uprooted from their family support systems, their life-long friends, and are searching to establish a new support system in a strange place among strange people."

In addition, he says, "college students are in a period when they have to make decisions about all sorts of things—committing themselves to college, building a philosophy of life, setting rules for moral behavior, what classes they will take—and decision-making is a very lonely process."

"College is indeed a time of shaping and building for students," agrees Thomas Cummings, a counseling education specialist at Arizona State University.

"You can be in the middle of New York City and still be lonelier than if you were in Muncie, Indiana," he notes. "And a student in the midst of a new campus can be surrounded by people all day, and still feel lonely because of the changes and decisions they have to make."

Loneliness, says UNL's Woodward, "is a very normal human condition, but it becomes a problem when it interferes with someone's ability to function."

Art Exhibit

by Laura Mumaw

The current art exhibit in Shoemaker Gallery is sponsored by the Ambrose Everett Yohn Art Fund. It is a collection of prints with its beginnings in the 1920's. The works of such artists as Alexander Calder, Joan Miro, Marc Chagall, and Alberto Giacometti are on display.

All four of these artists worked in the surrealistic period using brilliant colors and bold geometric shapes and symbols. These expressive forms conveyed the human condition of the time. Giacometti's elemental forms and elemental colors illustrate the versatility of this art exhibit.

This exhibit is worth the few moments it takes to observe and the effort it requires to appreciate it. It contains great versatility from artist to artist, and its appeal lies within the surrealistic era which it represents.

permanent buildings. In addition, finances were very precarious," Wilder said.

"During his presidency, Dr. Binder oversaw the growth of enrollment to the present size, the building of most of the present physical plant and a dramatic improvement in academic and financial affairs," Wilder continued.

Dr. Binder, who became Juniata's eighth president in 1975, also served as president of Whittier College for five years and was Associate Commissioner for Higher Education for the State of New York from 1969-70. In 1967-68, he was the first Fulbright Lecturer in American history assigned to Yugoslavia.

A graduate of Ursinus College, Dr. Binder received his M.A. and Ph.D degrees in American history from the University of Pennsylvania. He is a member of the Pennsylvania State Board of Education, its Council on Higher Education and the Board of Directors of the American Cancer Society, Pennsylvania Division.

Student Government Notes . . .

By Mary McDougall

The forthcoming change from trimesters to semesters and the search for a new college president are the two major issues confronting this year's Student Government, announced Arnold Tilden at last Tuesday's meeting.

The conversion to semesters will be overseen by Student Government's Student Concerns committee, chaired by junior Danielle Rupp.

"The role student concerns will play will be to examine the effects the conversion will have on such things as curriculum and other less obvious aspects of the college," said Rupp.

Other issues discussed at last Tuesday's meeting included the new budget procedure which will require college organizations to submit a budget twice a year, in July and April, instead of once as it has been in the past. Also announced was the initiation of tighter accounting controls which will restrict when clubs can withdraw money and the use of signature cards when making withdrawals. The clubs funded by Student Government include the Alfarta, the Juniatian, the Kvasir literary magazine, Laughing Bush outing service, and V103.

Also announced at the meeting were the new chairpersons of the Student Government committees: Student Concerns, Danielle Rupp; Residential Life, Chuck Hollander and Stephanie Seidle; Budget and Management, Tom Trent; College Governance, Kelly Bauer; Student Leadership Development, Sue Gulla.

There's only one sure way to avoid rape.

Avoid the rapist.

The only way to confront a rapist is on the safe side of a locked door.

- If you live alone, be sure your door has a deadbolt lock, and a peephole.
- Never let a stranger talk his way in. Demand identification.
- When you change addresses, change the lock on every outside door.
- Stay clear of deserted laundromats, apartment laundry rooms and out of the way parking lots...especially at night.
- Never put your first name on the mailbox or in the phone book...just your first initial.

Remember, the rapist is a dangerous, unpredictable person. He's not to be reasoned with . . . just avoided.

Indian Football Succumbs To Moravian Greyhounds

By Joe Scialabba

Juniata outgained has Moravian 341 yards to 262 last Saturday, but lack of the big play and five turnovers cost the Indians a 16-7 Middle Atlantic Conference decision. The Tribe fell to 1-2 overall and 1-1 in the MAC. The Greyhounds got their first win in two league starts.

The Indian Offense got off to a slow start at Bethlehem. Juniata was shutout for the first two quarters (to stretch the scoreless streak to eight periods) before an early Moravian lead to 9-7.

Quarterback Mike Culver scored on a four yard run on Juniata's opening second half possesion.. The 13 play, 74 yard drive was helped along by a 55 yard run by freshmen tailback Greg Townsend, who finished with 75 yards on 15 carries. "He (Townsend) played a great game," said Moravian coach Rocco Calve. "The quarterback (Culver) also scrambled well."

"We made some progress as the game went on," said Juniata's Rob Ash. "Basically we lost the game in the first quarter—early. We missed on too many third and short situatuions. Plus, I guess the turnovers didn't help." The Indians suffered four, interceptions and one fumble. Two turnovers cost the Tribe on key possesions.

Moravian had jumped in front on a 17 yard TD pass from Scott Rhinehart to Dale Houser and a 30 yard field goal by Charles Perry, but the Tribe looked to cut the lead on their final possesion of the first half. The Indians reached the Greyhound 18 yard line before Culber slipped in the backfield on third down, a field goal try was lost due to a motion penalty and a fourth and 19 pass was intercepted.

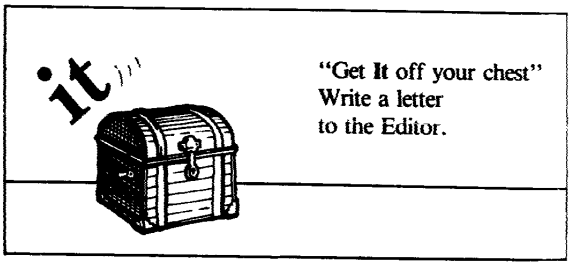
The second major turnover came after Jim Joseph, who rushed for 133 yards on 26 tries, put Moravian on top 16-7 with a 1 yard run in the fourth quarter. Juniata, on the strength of Culver completions to Townsend (38 yards) and Frank Phelps (22 yards), moved from its own 5 to the Greyhound 23 yard line before Moravian recovered Townsend's first down fumble. "The fumble just happened," said Ash. "The tackler put his helmet right on the ball. They got some breaks; we didn't." "We took advantage of the opportunities we had," said Calvo. "Our passing game worked when we needed it."

Moravian alternated Rhinehart and Frank Godshall at Quarterback and, although they only completed 8 of 21, the pair connected on some crucial passes. Much of the credit goes to a veteran receiving corps.

"It wasn't that we missed the assignments," said Ash . "Their receivers did a really nice job catching the ball with people on them." A majority of the key grabs came on the Greyhounds' final scoring drive when Godshall hit on four second and long passes for 9, 11, 38, and 12 yards, all to different and tightly covered receivers.

Basically, Juniata was close to the Hounds in every category but the final score. Both teams recorded four sacks. Both were 5 nad 14 on third down plays. And both had the ball for almost exactly thirty minutes. "It was an extremely physical football game," said Calvo. "This may be the most physical game we play all year." "Moravian was big, strong and tough, but we matched up with them," said Ash. "I think that we are as physical as any team we'll play this year." "Still, we must learn how to not stop ourselves. We need to find some continuity with the offense. The defense has been holding its own."

Bob Crossey had 13 tackles to lead the defense, while Gino Perri, Lou Komer, Tom Kalinyak and Brian Warren recorded sacks. Warren added two interceptions. The Tribe defense may get its toughest test of the year this Saturday against Widener, and their run and shoot offense. The Parents Weekend kickoff is set for 1:30 p.m..



Lady Indians Past Volleyball Victories Record at 7-1

by Andy Hiscock

The Lady Indians Volleyball squad has picked up where they left off last year. Their current record stands at 7-1, with the addition of two strong victories this past weekend.

The Lady Indians played host to Loyola College and Slippery Rock University. The first match went well for the Indians. Despite a number of service changes with no scoring, our ladies controlled the entire match and won in straight games (15-2), (15-5), (15-9).

Juniata saw more than just another victory, we saw alot of new faces. Coach Larry Bock and Assistant Coach Susan Benusa have been able to blend in a number of underclassmen with our already proven letterwinners. Freshmen Heather Pruim and Jackie Rebert made their presence felt with a number of crushing kills (replace the floorboards). Solid play by upperclassmen Mariella Gacka, Lori Bason, Carolyn Stambaugh, Diana Hauger, and Beth Hoppel allowed Juniata to work the ball for the best shot, which Loyola seemed to have the biggest problem with.

The second match versus Slippery Rock proved to be more of a challenge, but for any upperclassmen following our ladies through the play-offs these past years, challenges only seem to make the Indians play their best. The Indians weren't clicking in the first game and lost (8-15). The second game provided a see-sawing battle with every point being hard fought. Beth Hoppel (setter) was able to work the ball on the front line to provide the best scoring opportunities, and our ladies pulled it out (15-10). In the third game a combination of strong play at the net for Slippery Rock and a few mental mistakes by the Indians led to a (8-15) defeat. Again in the third game, our ladies provided the modest Juniata crowd with an exciting (15-12) har fought victory. Carolyn Stambaugh made a number of good defensive "rejections" and offensive spikes. The deciding game was another nail biter. Our ladies worked well together, but the Slippery Rock team was solid. A number of service changes in the middle of the game effected both teams as the length of the day started to show on the players. I think that our girls had better endurance and looked sharper than their opponents and built up a slim lead and won (15-10).

Despite picking up two more victories, the introduction of fresh blood into the already strong Indian squad can only mark improvement as the season progresses, and I am looking foward to exciting performances parents day weekend .

Experts Discuss Middle East At First World Affairs Lecture

The Middle East was the topic of discussion as Juniata College began its World Affairs Lecture Series last Thursday, Sept. 26.

Drs. Robert E. and Shireen T. Hunter, both with the Georgetown University Center for Strategic and International Studies, were the featured speakers discussing "The Middle East: The View from There; The View from Here."

Dr. Robert E. Hunter, Director of European Studies and senior fellow at the Georgetown Center, is also a contributing editor of "The Washington Quaterly." He recently served as a special advisor on Lebanon to the Speaker of the House of Representatives and was lead consultant to the National Bipartisan Commission on Central America (the Kissinger Commission). During the 1984 Presidential campaign, he served as a key foreign policy advisor to former vice president Walter Mondale.

During the Carter administration, Dr. Hunter served on the National Security Council staff as Director of West European Affairs (1977-79) and Director of Middle East Affairs (1979-81). Prior to that, he was foreign policy advisor to Sen. Edward M. Kennedy. He also served on the White House staff during the Johnson administration and was an advisor to Vice President Hubert Humphrey.

A graduate of Wesleyan University and the London School of Economics, Dr. Hunter is the author of numerous publications.
